Mr. MCKELLAR. If the Senator will yield, as I understand the situation the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have not now the money, but, of course, an additional sum will have to be appropriated for the use of that committee before any plan can be adopted. I am rather inclined to think that the Senator from Utah is entirely correct, and that it would be better to take the form that he has suggested, that a sum of money be appropriated by the Appropriations Committee for the use of the Contingent Expenses Committee of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield to me a moment, I desire to say that I do not believe in doing business in that way, in appropriating money for the contingent fund, and then taking that money to pay clerk hire. I think we ought to fight this matter straight from the shoulder, if we are going to fight it at all. The place to introduce the amendment, I will suggest to the Senator from Utah, is on the legislative bill, which will be here next week. Such amendment does not belong on a deficiency bill, because there is no deficiency. If, however, we are going to change our policy, the legislative bill is the place on which to put such an amendment. If the Senator will offer an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative bill and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, I assure him that every member of the committee will be glad to give it consideration. I repeat, however, it does not belong on this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course, whenever such an appropriation is provided for in the legislative appropriation bill, it goes to the committees and not to an individual Senator. I have sometimes thought it would be better to make a direct authorization of certain clerks to certain Senators, and not to the committees themselves. I think the matter will have to be worked out in some such way.

In relation to the appropriation the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] speaks of, that will have to be taken care of, and that can be taken care of in the next deficiency bill. I will say to the Senator that we shall have three or four more of them, in my opinion, before the session closes.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, from my examination of the matter, if the Senator will permit me, I think that is the only way it can possibly be arranged, from what I know of the situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, that there is perhaps now an amount sufficient in the contingent fund of the Senate to take care of a few such cases until the next deficiency bill comes, but not very many cases I will say.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Utah that I introduced an amendment yesterday, which I expect to propose to the legislative appropriation bill, changing to a certain extent the manner in which we have been making these appropriations and providing that appropriations shall go to clerks for Senators in certain cases rather than to insignificant committees, as we have provided heretofore. It does not probably fully cover the situation of the Senator from New York, however, because it simply treats all Senators alike.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the Senator from New York is in the condition which he says he is, and I know that, with the three clerks which he has and with the amount of business which comes to him, particularly during this war time, it is impossible for him to properly attend to his correspondence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that at least one of the so-called three clerks of the Senator is a messenger.

Mr. CALDER. He is called a messenger, but I have no messenger. In my office the messenger is a stenographer.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand he takes the place of the messenger who is assigned in the case of certain committees.

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in bringing this question up to-day I am not only speaking for myself, but for other Senators from the larger States. I venture the statement that at least 20 Members of this body are employing clerks and paying for them themselves. That is unjust; it is not right. Provision should be made for the payment of such clerks. If the Secretary of War wants additional clerks we do not ask him to pay for them out of his own pocket, nor do we ask any other executive department to do so; nor should Senators be asked to pay for their clerical help themselves. Those of us who come from the larger States have unusual demands upon us in war times, and particularly those of us who come from near-by States. The State which I have the honor in part to represent has as large a population as 19 of the smaller States put together, and it is unreasonable that we should not have the necessary help.

I am not going to insist upon the amendment, Mr. President, but I am going to ask the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, before the legislative appropriation bill is reported, to give me an opportunity to appear before his committee and discuss this question with the committee, in the hope that we can arrive at some basis of settlement of this matter which will be fair to all. I now withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. The Senator will certainly have that opportunity. I will send for him when the bill comes before the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York withdraw the amendment?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to offer an amendment, and ask that it be read. I will then make a very short statement regarding it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

INDIAN SERVICE.

For support of Indian day, boarding, and industrial schools during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, in addition to the general and specific appropriations made for that purpose in the act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stats. L., pp. 969–993), the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to prevent the closing of said schools or the creation of deficiencies in appropriations because of the increased cost of supplies to be immediately available: Provided, That the operation of the act of September 7, 1916 (35 Stats. L., p. 741), limiting annual expenditures for support and education of pupils in Indian schools to $200 per capita, is hereby suspended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended upon improvements or used to increase the compensation of employees.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it will be recalled that some two or three hours ago the Senate disagreed to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations proposing to strike out that portion of the bill comprehended within line 21, on page 78, down to and including line 17, on page 79. This amendment does not propose to change the amount carried by that amendment, either by way of increase or decrease, but simply is a draft of the provision on the same subject reported in the Indian appropriation bill. I have been advised by the Interior Department that the House text is not appropriate for the purpose contemplated. I simply wish to have agreed to the provision as reported in the Indian appropriation bill. So my motion is to strike out all commencing in line 21, on page 78, down to and including line 17, on page 79, and insert that which the Secretary has read.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, it is entirely agreeable to me for the language now in the bill to be stricken out and the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to be inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. I notice that about the only difference between the amendment now suggested by the Senator from Arizona and the amendment which the Senate adopted to-day is that the amendment just presented leaves out this language:

In which case the Secretary of the Interior may authorize a per capita expenditure not to exceed $225.

That is in cases where there are 100 pupils or over. Did the Senator intend to eliminate that part of the provision which has already been adopted?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; so that there will be no limitation whatever on the expenditure of this money. There is a general limitation; but so far as this money is concerned, it is desired that there shall be no limitation. That is the essential, prime difference between the House text and the provision as reported by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SMOOT. I noticed that that was the difference.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the difference.

Mr. SMOOT. And I asked the question whether the Senator really intended that, because in all of the appropriations that have been made for the Indian schools that specific proviso has been included, whereas the amendment suggested by the Senator from Arizona would allow an unlimited amount to be expended upon each pupil. For instance, instead of $225 they could spend $500 on each pupil under his amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, that is quite true; but in some places—for instance, the school at Sherman and at another place in California, and the one at Mount Pleasant—the price of staples has increased 100 per cent. I think that only in a few instances, if at all, will they exceed the limitation, but I do not believe the limitation ought to be placed upon this appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN. I am perfectly willing that the language we adopted this morning shall be stricken out and that the Senator's amendment shall be inserted in lieu of it; but, of course, it must be understood that it will be scrutinized in conference, for we have had no opportunity to scrutinize it here on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that the amendment on page 78, beginning in line 21, has already been rejected, which, of course, has the effect of leaving in the bill the House provision. It will be necessary, therefore, to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected, and I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to reconsider the vote by which the Senate rejected the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out on page 78, beginning in line 21, down to and including line 17, on page 79.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the committee to strike out the language referred to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona proposing to insert the language read by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $9,117 to be paid to Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., for and on account of unpaid claims held by her on account of work and services performed on or supplies furnished for the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, a part of the Shoshone reclamation project, in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. MARTIN. I make the point of order against the amendment that it has not been estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to reserve for a separate vote in the Senate the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], on page 20, after line 8, to insert:

During the present emergency, upon request made by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, there may be imported into the United States, without payment of duty thereon, raw materials, parts or partly fabricated parts of equipment and finished equipment required to hasten the production of munitions or machinery of war, or other necessary war supplies, whenever such duty would otherwise be payable directly or indirectly from appropriations for the support of the Army.

Mr. MARTIN. Why not make a point of order on the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not do that until the bill gets to the Senate, as the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. So I merely reserve the right to make a point of order on the amendment when the bill reaches the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire from the Senator in charge of the bill concerning the item on page 96, beginning on line 10:

To pay John P. Husting and Mary Husting, heirs at law of Hon. Paul O. Husting, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, $7,500.

I have never opposed a provision of this character, but it seems to me this is rather an unusual one. I know the amendment has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole but before making objection to it in the Senate I want to inquire if this is not a most unusual way of inserting a provision of this kind?

Mr. MARTIN. It is the usual way, just exactly as it has been done in other cases in the Senate.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, when I was a member of the House Committee on Appropriations we always refused to appropriate money for the benefit of a Member's heirs. Where he left a widow or children, dependent sisters or a mother, no objection was raised; but this is the first instance within my recollection in which Congress has every appropriated any money for a Member or Senator's heirs at law.

Mr. MARTIN. It has been done frequently. Of course, those cases do not happen so frequently as those where there are widows and children, but it has been the custom to appropriate it to the next of kin.

Mr. CALDER. May I inquire if these persons are the father and mother?

Mr. SMOOT. They are the father and mother of the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. If that is so, Mr. President, of course I have no objection; but that ought to be stated in the bill. I do not believe we ought to go into the business of appropriating money for the heirs of Senators unless they are immediate relatives.

I might add that the House Committee on Appropriations several years ago refused to provide the $7,500 benefit for the son of Sereno E. Payne. When it was discovered that he had dependent sisters we voted it for their benefit, but we would not give it to the Representative's son. If the man whose name appears here is an adult son or a brother, I would oppose the appropriation under all circumstances; but if these persons are the father and mother, and they were in any way dependent upon the late Senator, that is a different matter.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am not willing to state about that, because I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I asked the question if these were the father and mother of the late Senator Husting, and was told that they were, and I think that is absolutely correct. I understand that his father and mother were here visiting him just before he left to go home at the close of the last session of Congress; and I will say to the Senator that I am quite sure these are his father and mother.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is not so unusual as some Senators seem to think. One of the recent cases that comes to my mind is in connection with the death of the late Senator Burleigh, of Maine. His wife died a little while before he did, and we made the usual appropriation for the children of the Senator. There was no objection at that time; and I think there have been other cases of a similar nature.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, we have often provided this benefit for the children of Representatives or Senators, and, as I have already stated, on the occasion of the death of the late Representative Payne we appropriated it for the benefit of his sisters; but if the people mentioned in this provision of the bill are not near relatives—if they are cousins or distant relatives—then it is a mistake for the Senate to go into the business of providing for the benefit of distant relatives.

Mr. MARTIN. These certainly are not distant relatives. I do not know whether they are the father and mother or the brother and sister.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think they are the brother and sister.

Mr. MARTIN. That was my impression.

Mr. THOMAS. John P. Husting is the brother of the deceased and Mary Husting is the sister. If this is not allowed, surely we should not make the appropriation for the widow of the late Senator Brady, who does not need it. I think they should both be allowed.

Mr. CALDER. I bring the matter to the attention of the Senate because I think we are going pretty far afield if we appropriate money to heirs at law of Senators. If they are immediate relatives, I have no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. We have done it frequently for brothers and sisters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in, with the exception of the one reserved by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the amendments are concurred in I want to say a single word.

When the Senate had before it the amendment proposed by the committee giving authority for taking over the docks and wharves formerly occupied by the ships of two German corporations, I did not take the time of the Senate to utter a single word, because I took it for granted that the amendment would be adopted; but before it is concurred in I want to say that I have been utterly unable to see any reason why we should make that expenditure, especially in view of the fact that nobody knows how many millions of dollars it will involve. The Government now has possession of those docks, having commandeered them; it has the full use of them during the war; and I have been unable to see why the Government should hold them after the close of the war. However, that is an accomplished fact; and I simply want to put myself on record as having been opposed in committee to that provision, and not having changed my mind regarding it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment on page 20 after line 8; and let me say just a word as to why I do so.

After the amendment was adopted, while the bill was in the Committee of the Whole, I secured a copy of it, and I found that it provides that whenever duties would otherwise be payable directly or indirectly from appropriations for the support of the Army, they should be remitted. That means, Mr. President, that if any company that has a contract to-day with the Government of the United States and imports goods into this country that would enter into the making of articles contracted for, they would be admitted into this country free of duty. That would relieve many of the contractors of the payment of millions of dollars, and as they have already bid upon the goods, and contracts have been made based upon the payment of the duty, it would enable contractors to make an additional profit equal to the amount of duty remitted. If it were not for that there would be some propriety in asking for the amendment. Again, Mr. President, I think the House would take exception to the Senate undertaking, on an appropriation bill, to amend the revenue laws.

Therefore, Mr. President, I make the point of order that this is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I think the point of order ought to be sustained. I have no objection to its being sustained, and would like to have the item go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained, and the section goes out.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., Tuesday, March 12, 1918) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 13, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 12, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, we lift up our hearts to Thee in gratitude for the genius of our Republic, handed down by our fathers and held sacred through all the vicissitudes of the past; for the great and fundamental principles in the Constitution of the United States, the embodiment of all that is sacred to our hearts—life, liberty, justice, fair play, and equal rights for all men.

We are now engaged in a gigantic struggle, not for conquest, not for gain, but in defense of those sacred rights. Unite us as a people, guide us by Thy counsels, and give victory to our arms, not only for ourselves but for the sake of all lovers of liberty, that a peace at last shall be established which shall make inviolate these sacred truths, and all praise be Thine, through Him, who disclosed the truth which makes all men free. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TAXES ON INCOMES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 9248) to prevent extortion, to impose taxes upon certain incomes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, the third reading of which has been ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to read the engrossed copy of the bill.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk the following motion to recommit and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TINKHAM moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to report the same forthwith with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"That in the interpretation and construction of this act the following rules shall be observed, namely:

"First. The term 'real estate' as herein used shall be construed to include lands, buildings, parts of buildings, houses, dwellings, apartments, rooms, suites of rooms, and every improvement and structure whatsoever, and every portion and part thereof, situated and being in the District of Columbia, and any and all estates and rights therein or thereto.

"Second. The word 'party' or 'person' shall include individuals, legal representatives of individuals, partnerships, joint-stock companies, associations, corporations, societies, bodies corporate, the Government of the United States in all its branches, departments, bureaus, boards, councils, and other agencies and instrumentalities, and all representatives, agencies, bodies, and instrumentalities acting for or in behalf of or employed or used by any and all foreign Governments not at war with the United States, unless such construction would be unreasonable; and the reference to any officer shall include any person authorized by law, or by regulation made in accordance with this act, to perform the duties of his office.

"Third. Words importing the singular number shall be held to include the plural, and vice versa, except where such construction would be unreasonable.

"Fourth. Words importing the masculine gender shall be held to include all genders, except where such construction would be unreasonable.

"Fifth. The term 'rent' or 'rent from real estate' shall include any and all amounts received for the daily, weekly, monthly, yearly, or other periodical or term use or occupancy of real estate, or any part or multiple of any such periods of time.

"SEC. 2. That in addition to other taxes imposed by law there is hereby levied and shall be assessed, collected, and paid to the District of Columbia an annual tax of 100 per cent upon so much of the income from real estate of every person, whether resident or nonresident of said District, received from and after July 1, 1918, as exceeds the deductions herein allowed. For the purpose of ascertaining the amount of income subject to said tax there shall be deducted from the gross income reported as herein provided so much thereof as equals the lawful rent fixed and determined by the President or the rent income tax administrator, to be appointed as hereinafter provided, for the use and occupation of any real estate situated in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 3. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a rent income tax administrator, who shall be a citizen of the United States and a resident of the District of Columbia, who shall have full power and authority, and whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the President, to revise existing rents of real estate in the District of Columbia, and, by appropriate orders or rules, to fix the amounts of rents which it shall be lawful to charge, collect, and receive from real estate in the District of Columbia, which rents shall be uniform in so far as they apply to like pieces or parcels of real estate.

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the rent income tax administrator, on or before the 1st day of July, 1918, by specific order designating the real estate to be affected thereby, or by general order affecting groups or classes of pieces or parcels of real estate, to fix the amount of rent which it shall be lawful for the party entitled to charge, collect, and receive for all real estate situated in the District of Columbia then or thereafter rented, leased, subleased, used, or occupied by any party or person: Provided, That the President, in his discretion, may extend the time within which the rent income tax administrator shall so fix the amount of lawful rents for said real estate: And provided further, That any party in interest may prosecute an appeal from any order of the rent income tax administrator to the board of rent income tax appeals provided for in this act, under and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be made respecting appeals; and until such appeal shall be decided by the board of rent income tax appeals the order of the rent income tax administrator, in so far as it affects the property described in the appeal, shall be superseded by the appeal.

"SEC. 5. That from and after the promulgation of the order of the rent income tax administrator fixing the lawful amounts of rents of real estate in the District of Columbia, as provided in section 4, it shall be unlawful and be a violation of this act for any person to charge or receive a greater rent than the amount so fixed.

"SEC. 6. That the President and the rent income tax administrator, under the direction of the President, are hereby authorized to make and promulgate such orders, rules, and regulations not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary or appropriate effectively to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 7. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a board of rent income tax appeals consisting of three persons, who shall be citizens of the United States and residents of the District of Columbia. Said board of rent income tax appeals shall have the power to hear and determine any appeal from any order of the rent income tax administrator authorized by this act, and said board of rent income tax appeals shall have power, upon consideration of such appeal, by its order, to affirm or reverse the order of the rent income tax administrator, and in case of reversal thereof to increase, diminish, or otherwise modify the amount of rent fixed in the order of the rent income tax administrator, and the amount so fixed in the order of the board of rent income tax appeals shall be the amount of rent which can be lawfully charged and received for the use and occupation of the real estate affected thereby until the same shall be, upon new facts or other conditions, again changed and fixed by order of the rent income tax administrator or the board of rent income tax appeals, as the case may be: Provided, That no such further change shall be made within six months.

"SEC. 8. That on or before the 1st day of July, 1919, a true and accurate return, under oath, shall be made by every person subject to said tax, or his authorized agent, to the rent income tax administrator, setting forth the gross amount of such income from all separate sources accrued during the period from July 1, 1918, to and including June 30, 1919, and the deductions to which he may be entitled under this act, and the said taxes thereon, computed as provided in section 2, shall become due and collectible on or before September 1, 1919, and annually as hereinafter provided. If any person subject to said tax fails to make such return at the time herein fixed or makes a false return, the rent income tax administrator shall make the return from his own knowledge from such information as he can obtain, through testimony or otherwise, and the return so made shall be sufficient for all the purposes of this act. And to the amount of the tax due upon the returns so made by the rent income tax administrator there shall be added a penalty of 20 per cent of the tax, but when it shall appear that the failure to file the return or the making of a false return was due to an unavoidable or excusable cause the said penalty may be abated by the income tax administrator. It shall be the duty of the said rent income tax administrator to prepare and furnish to each taxpayer making application therefor printed forms upon which such returns shall be made. Said tax and all penalties thereon shall be payable to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia on or before September 1, 1919, and annually thereafter so long as this act shall remain in force.

"SEC. 9. Every person who shall charge, collect, or receive rent of any real estate in the District of Columbia without having paid the tax herein provided for when the same shall be due shall, besides being liable for the payment of said tax, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 10. That any person who shall contract for, collect, or receive a greater rent for any real estate than that fixed by order of the President or of the rent income tax administrator, or, in case of appeal, by the board of rent income tax appeals, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 for each offense; and this shall apply to sublessors and assignees of tenancies as well as to the original lessors.

"SEC. 11. This act shall remain in full force and effect for all purposes until one year after a treaty of peace between the Imperial German Government and the United States shall have been concluded: Provided, That, for the purpose of collecting taxes and penalties accrued before the conclusion of such peace, this act shall remain in force until the same are collected or enforced."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the motion to recommit on the ground that it is not germane, and that it fixes a rent commission, which is foreign to the original bill. I do not know how familiar the Chair is with the original bill, but I will say for his information that in the original bill there is no provision for anyone to fix rents. I ask the Chair to distinguish between the provision in the original bill which authorizes the assessor of the District of Columbia to fix values upon real property, and that a tax is then fixed on those values, but there is nothing in the original bill which fixes rent.

In section 4 of the proposed substitute which the gentleman has just offered I find this language:

That it shall be the duty of the rent-income tax administrator on or before the 1st day of July, 1918, by specific order designating the real estate to be affected thereby, or by general order affecting groups or classes of pieces or parcels of real estate, to fix the amount of rent which it shall be lawful for the party to charge.

I say that is absolutely foreign to the bill. There is no provision in the original bill for fixing rents. There is a basis laid down upon which income taxes are to be charged, but nowhere in the bill is there anything said about fixing rents. That of itself, without going into the other parts of the motion, make it subject to the point of order.

I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that this provides for a commission, and again I ask that the Chair bear in mind that the original bill does not fix rents, and that the proposed amendment or substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts provides for a commission to fix rents when, to repeat again, nothing of that sort is in the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I do. The bill offered by the honorable Representative from Kentucky seeks to fix rents in the District of Columbia and then to levy a tax upon all excesses. He attempts to do that in this way: That rents in the District of Columbia shall be fixed as of September 30, 1916, and 10 per cent advance, and that any excess of those rents shall be paid to the District treasury. That is the bare provision and principle of his bill. The provisions of my substitute merely differ from his bill in the following particular: I establish as he does a tax of 100 per cent of an excess over what may be fixed by a rent commissioner. I establish a rent commissioner who shall say what the rental shall be, and then anything in excess of what he fixes shall be paid at the same rate in the same manner and to the same place as in the bill of the honorable Representative from Kentucky. In other words, his bill is a tax measure upon its face and, he claims, in principle; and the bill which I offer is a tax measure on its face and in principle, but with a commissioner fixing the rental instead of the rental being fixed as of a certain date, a change merely in the machinery for obtaining the same result. Therefore, it is germane.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] desire to be heard?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the House, or even the time of the Speaker if he has resolved that this substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM] is in order. I rise to make an argument that the motion to recommit as submitted is not subject to the point of order as advanced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. I predicate that position upon the fact that the bill under consideration, the Johnson-Mapes bill, is a bill, according to its very title, to prevent extortion, and the whole scope of that bill provides the machinery by which extortion on the part of owners of real estate in the District can be checked. It not only provides the machinery in one way to control and check it by resorting to the taxing power and levying 100 per cent additional taxes on incomes above those received on or before a prior date, but it goes further and in section 5 provides a criminal penalty for any person to charge higher than the rate as fixed in his income-tax return. There are two ideas in the bill that carry out the idea of preventing extortion: First, levying a maximum amount of 100 per cent and confiscating all of the additional returns that have accrued from rentals since a certain date. Second, under section 5 it provides—

That all leases, contracts, and agreements, expressed or implied, providing for the payment of any large amount of money, or at a higher rate than that fixed by the deduction herein allowed, for the use or occupancy of any real estate are hereby declared to be contrary to public policy and unenforceable.

Now, what does the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts provide? There is no question whatsoever that it was within the authority of the House, and even now, to offer an amendment reducing the amount of tax that might be represented by these excess charges. That could be done, and there could be no question of the germaneness of such an amendment; that instead of levying 100 per cent, with a reduction of 10 per cent, as provided in the bill, there should be levied a tax of 75 per cent, which might be claimed was sufficient to deter these profiteers from exacting these excessive charges. But the gentleman from Massachusetts in his amendment provides another means of determining what should be the excess of charge. It does not say absolutely that it should be 75 per cent, 90 per cent, or 100 per cent, less 10 per cent, but it provides that there shall be a levy of 100 per cent on excesses of what represents a reasonable rental value, which will be determined by a board. Now, the subject matter of this matter before the House is to prevent exorbitant charges of rent——

Mr. COX. Rule!

Mr. STAFFORD. I thank the gentleman from Indiana for that remark—to prevent extortionate charges of rent by the profiteers in the District. The gentleman from Kentucky provides one method; the gentleman from Massachusetts provides another. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully contend that this is quite on all fours with the decision of a former Speaker, when we had up for consideration the determination of a proposal to establish the Isthmian Canal. That precedent is found in section 5909 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5:

To a bill providing for an interoceanic canal, specifying a certain route, an amendment providing for another route was held to be germane.

The main subject of that bill was the establishment of an interoceanic canal. The bill as introduced prescribed one route. It was held by the Speaker that the designation of another route was germane. So here in this matter before the House to-day, though the bill provides one method of levying the tax, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts offers another method of determining the tax. Both are taxation measures, both with penalizing sections to check profiteering. I also direct the Chair's attention to a citation which is the foundation, I take it, of all the decisions of all Speakers on the question of germaneness, as found in Hinds' Precedents, section 5825, the noted decision of former Speaker Carlisle, where he lays down the fundamentals which should guide presiding officers in construing what should be germane and what should not be germane. He used this general language, which should be a guide for Speakers for all time in determining the question of germaneness:

When, therefore, it is objected that a proposed amendment is not in order because it is not germane, the meaning of the objection is simply that it (the proposed amendment) is a motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration. This is a test of admissibility prescribed by the express language of the rule; and if the Chair, upon an examination of the bill under consideration and the proposed amendment, shall be of the opinion that they do not relate to the same subject, he is bound to sustain the objection and exclude the objection, subject, of course, to the revisory power of the Committee of the Whole on appeal.

The question before the Speaker is whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is related, is akin to the subject as contained in the Johnson bill. Why, the Speaker will have to go pretty far in holding that it is not related, because the Tinkham bill is a taxation measure providing for 100 per cent of the income and the only difference is how this additional income is to be determined. The gentleman from Kentucky directs that the income shall be determined absolutely by taking the return as the standard. The gentleman from Massachusetts determines that the 100 per cent shall be determined by first ascertaining what is a reasonable rent for this property. I well remember the position that the Speaker took when he was a Member on the floor that this motion to recommit should not be prostituted by allowing some Member to rise and move a motion to recommit without instructions; that recognition should be given to some Member in opposition to a bill to move to recommit with directions, so as to give the House on a record vote an opportunity for them to express their judgment as to the respective questions in dispute.

True, the House can not be privileged to vote on something foreign and not related to the matter, but the House should always be privileged to have the opportunity to vote on something that is akin. Otherwise, if you adopt a different rule you make the committee that reports the bill the master of the actions of the House in determining what legislation should be enacted. This House may be inclined, and undoubtedly is, to stop this profiteering, but it may be opposed to the method of confiscation provided by the bill offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. But some opportunity should be given to provide for reaching these profiteers by a method akin to it, by saying the excess income over that previously charged above a reasonable rental and to be determined by a board, should be that which should be levied, rather than the arbitrary standard as fixed in the Johnson bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In just one minute.

Mr. Fitzgerald, in a noted decision from the Speaker's chair, said that in order to determine the question of germaneness the question is whether it is related, whether it is akin, to the matter before the House. The question is whether the mere change in the machinery for determining what is a reasonable rent on which this income tax should be levied is not related to the standard as fixed in the Johnson bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that on page 424 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, the Chair sustained the very point of order which the gentleman now refers to?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I have read and reread that decision and know the facts. What were the facts in that case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It says the amendment was excluded. That is the language.

Mr. STAFFORD. Every decision of a Speaker on a question submitted to him must be determined according to the facts as presented for decision. What were the facts in that case? A deficiency appropriation bill was under consideration. It happened to contain an item making an appropriation for the support of the Government Printing Office, and if my memory serves me—I have not read the decision for more than a year—some person offered to establish the salary of the Public Printer on an item relating to the general maintenance of the Government Printing Office, and Speaker Carlisle naturally ruled that the question of the salary of the Public Printer was not related to the question providing for the maintenance of the Government Printing Office, which did not have anything to do with the question of the salaries of the employees.

I wish to make one further brief remark. The question is entirely different from the questions that were submitted in the Committee of the Whole. The bill as submitted there had no relation to the taxation feature at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that.

On the 8th of May, 1913, in the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, there was a battle royal in this House on a question very much like this one. It was on a motion to recommit the Underwood tariff bill. At the request of the Chair the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] furnished the Chair in advance of their motion to recommit, and it gave me ample time to investigate the matter. I did investigate it thoroughly and conscientiously. The question involved was whether they could hitch a tariff commission onto the bill. The proponents, Mr. MANN and Mr. PAYNE, upheld their side, as always, with a great deal of force and ability. The opposition was led by Mr. UNDERWOOD, who made the point of order against its germaneness. The opinion delivered covers three or four pages and was carefully prepared. I am not going to read it now, but I would advise all the Members of the House who take any interest in the parliamentary points to read it. The Chair sustained the point of order, because it was setting up a new kind of a machine that had nothing to do with the bill. Now, in this present case the Chair is not going to pass upon any of these points that are being raised and is not going to talk about them. There is one proposition in this motion to recommit that compels the Speaker in light of the precedents to hold this point of order well taken, and that is the bringing up of this administration feature, of the tax commission, a great machine, and all that.

The point of order is sustained. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky and Mr. MANN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 222, nays 101, answered "present" 6, not voting 99, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

On March 8, 1918:

H. R. 6361. An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war.

On March 11, 1918:

S. J. Res. 92. Joint resolution providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries within the former Colville Indian Reservation, Wash.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending matter is an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] to strike out a certain paragraph of the bill. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed could I ask the Chair to have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment indicated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER: Page 105: strike out the paragraph beginning on line 5 and ending on line 17, which reads as follows:

"Appointment shall not be made to any of the positions herein appropriated for in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions not actually filled June 30, 1918, nor shall more than 25 per cent of other vacancies actually occurring in any grade in the classified service of that bureau, during the fiscal year 1919, be filled by original appointment or promotion. The salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any position with a salary of $2,250 or above than sum."

Mr. RUCKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee I will be very glad to explain as best I can the significance of this paragraph in the bill, and the reasons which I think justify the motion to strike it out.

The Bureau of Pensions is not a new creation. It has been in the service of the Government a long time, for many years. It is a fact well known to gentlemen on both sides of the aisle that many of the employees in the Pension Bureau are veterans of the Civil War. Necessarily that class of employees in the service of the Pension Bureau are aged men. In this connection let me say that in response to a question propounded to the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions by the chairman having this bill in charge as to the average age of the employees in the Pension Bureau, the Deputy Commissioner stated that a careful examination recently made showed that the average age of all the employees in the service of that bureau is 57 years. Even the chairman and his associate who sits on the other side of the aisle evidently were somewhat astounded at the information, because—immediately the inquiry was made—I do not know that I quote the question verbatim, but I do in substance:

"That does not include the messenger boys, does it?" The answer was, "Yes; it includes them all." When you consider and include messenger boys in that service, which, of course, reduces the general average of the age—because they are quite young men—the average age of those who are to-day performing service in that bureau is 57 years. They run from among the youngest men in the Government service to the very eldest. There are men there past 80 years of age, a number of them. And so it happens, and it happens without a complaint or protest of any mortal man who is patriotic, generally speaking, these old men, these old veterans, hold the highest-paid positions. The committee having in charge the preparation of this bill, which is brought in and passed by the House and by Congress annually, has for three or four years, without any sort of bad feeling, without any personality, but persuaded by an erroneous, and I think a faulty judgment, has been whittling away at the organization of the Pension Office.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will my colleague yield right there?

Mr. RUCKER. I do.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is any provision similar to this carried in the bill against any other bureau?

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad the gentleman asked me that, because I do not want to forget it. I will reply in a moment.

I repeat, if there be an error in the policy of the committee, I will assume that it is merely an error of judgment, and I want if I can to appeal to the judgment of each member of this committee to help correct the error. The Committee on Appropriations is the servant of the House and not its master. If I, as your servant, should err in my judgment, would you blindly follow my lead after you have considered the facts and discovered my error? Or will you say to your public servant: "You must respond to the will of the House whose servant you are!" Any other course produces right here under the dome of the Capitol of the Nation a condition against which men are to-day pledging their lives, an autocracy that can not be tolerated.

My colleague from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] asks if there is any provision similar to the one which was read from the Clerk's desk a moment ago, which the pending amendment seeks to strike out, with reference to any other bureau in the public service, and in the presence of the chairman of the committee that framed the bill I answer no; there is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to proceed for 10 minutes. I do not think I will ask any more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. There are many bureaus in the departments of the Government here, some in their infancy. There are bureaus all over the town, in all the different departments, and they are multiplying and growing like mushrooms. New ones are being organized practically every day; but you can search the records of congressional proceedings until you tire and you will not find, with reference to a single other bureau, an effort to place shackles upon Government agencies like those which gentlemen would bind around and upon the employees and those in charge of the Pension Bureau. I ask the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill not to forget to answer in his own time to the membership of this House why a distinct, positive, unmistakable discrimination is made against the officials and clerical force of the Pension Bureau. I would not appeal to partisan spirit and I would not suggest that, because gentlemen high in authority on the Committee on Appropriations come from States in a certain section of this Nation, that such fact has anything to do with the question, because on the other side are gentlemen who come from other sections who are in harmony with the action of the committee. But I ask gentlemen on either side of the aisle to give the House some reason why this particular bureau should be discriminated against in this way? May I say that it seems to me this discrimination is so bad and so pronounced as to cast a reflection upon distinguished and honorable men charged with the administration of the affairs of that bureau? Do gentlemen say they have been prodigal? Have they been neglectful? Have they been inefficient? Have they done anything to merit this kind of unfriendly and offensive treatment at the hands of Congress? But gentlemen say the work is getting less, that the old soldiers are dying, and that is a lamentable truth which we all know. They are dying, and dying fast. But, in the providence of God, they are leaving good widows, many of them; they are leaving children; and, notwithstanding the large death rate which annually decimates the ranks of these old men who a few years ago wore the blue so proudly and so bravely in defense of this great Nation of ours, the truth is that, notwithstanding the columns of these old veterans are broken by the invasion of the angel of death, and that many of them annually respond to the last roll call, there are substantially as many names on the pension roll now, I think, as there were a year ago—not of soldiers, perhaps, but of widows of soldiers and the children of soldiers.

And again I will say that this Congress, whether rightfully or wrongfully, a year or so ago enacted what is called the Ashbrook law, which has brought to the Pension Office more than 175,000 extra applications for pensions to be disposed of by that bureau.

Then, there is the bill with reference to the Spanish-American War soldiers, which entailed very much additional work on the bureau. That is recent legislation. There is legislation on the calendar now, which I think I am warranted in saying will become a law, which is going to add still further to the work of the bureau.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it not a fact that the correspondence of the bureau is further behind now than it has been in recent years? Is not that the gentleman's experience? It is mine. I know they are behind with their correspondence. I have had numerous instances of it lately

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a direct answer to that question may be at variance with the experience of Members of the House who do any considerable amount of pension work, for the reason that I am privately informed by the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions that the work is practically current, so far as correspondence with Members of Congress is concerned. He makes a special effort to keep up with congressional correspondence, but the thousands of cases which come direct to the Pension Bureau have caused them to get behind in their work. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is right.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to say that I have cases in mind now, dozens of them, where answers to letters which I have written to the bureau have not been received for three weeks after the inquiry was submitted, and the explanation has been made to me that they were behind with their correspondence. I am not criticizing the bureau, which, I think, is doing the best it can with the force at its command. I am merely combating the argument that they are up with their work. I know it is not so.

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad to have the gentleman say that, because I know the fact is that there has been a world of increase in their work there.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Would the fact of the bureau being up to date with its correspondence be any indication of there being no necessity for more help?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman frankly that that would be one way by which we would determine the adequacy of the help, but not necessarily conclusive.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The suggestion I want to bring home to the gentleman and the House is the fact that you might get a prompt reply, but the party about whom you were writing might have to wait months and months.

Mr. RUCKER. There is no question about that.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. They have to wait months for the aid that this bureau should give practically at a moment's notice.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the gentleman emphasizes that thought.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman permit me something not in the form of a question? If there is anything in the world, or any bureau in the world, where there should be a sufficient clerical and field force to respond to the needs and necessities of the American people, it is the Bureau of Pensions. There should be no delay. Once a claim is submitted, there should be an expeditious handling of the claim, and I do not believe in stinting it under any circumstances.

Mr. RUCKER. I am obliged to the gentleman from Rhode Island for his statement. Let me say to the committee—and I know that I am looking into the faces of gentlemen who have had similar experiences—that time and again I have put forth my efforts to bring relief to some suffering old man, or suffering old widow of a soldier, to hasten action on a pension claim as much as I could with conditions existing as they do at the Pension Office, and yet before the Government could extend to the man the little bounty it had pledged to him and scatter a little sunshine, hope, and joy into his life, that soldier or widow, as the case may have been, has been summoned from this world. There are many cases of that sort. Men die waiting for action because some men in the country say that we do not need any more force in the Pension Bureau, because the old soldiers are fast dying. I confess that I become a little excited when I hear men speaking of those things unfeelingly, I think.

Let me tell you what this bill proposes. It proposes, as I said, a distinct discrimination. In all the numerous, countless bureaus of this Government there is no provision like this. Listen to this: Mark you, in this very bill you cut out about 100 employees in the Pension Office. Is that not true, I ask the chairman of the committee?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Forty-three.

Mr. RUCKER. Only 43; I thought it was more than that. Notwithstanding that and notwithstanding it will be said to you to-day that those who fought during the War of the Rebellion are dying rapidly, and that must be confessed and admitted to be true, yet the committee in this bill says:

Appointment shall not be made to any of the positions herein appropriated for in the classified service of the Bureau of Pensions not actually filled June 30, 1918.

In the corresponding bill which was enacted last year similar language was carried; so if there were three vacancies in a certain class, or in many classes, not actually filled——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER (continuing)—

Nor shall more than 25 per cent of other vacancies actually occurring in any grade in the classified service of that bureau, during the fiscal year 1919, be filled by original appointment or promotion.

Do gentlemen comprehend what that means? Here are a number of classes, class 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and in some of the classes quite a number of people are necessarily employed in order to do the work that the Government ought to and must do. This committee exercises an iron control, almost a despotic power, in curtailing the number of clerks in every class in the Pension Bureau when they think more clerks are employed than are needed, and only appropriate for those which they—the committee—finds are needed. If in this bill they appropriate for 75 clerks of a certain class it is because this committee realizes that that number of clerks are needed. Then, mark you, what follows? I will assume that there are 75 clerks in class 1, for argument. This bill provides that not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies actually occurring in any grade during the fiscal year shall be filled by promotion or by original appointments.

Here these gentlemen solemnly determine that the bureau needs 75 clerks for the ensuing year, and appropriate for them but during the year 3 clerks may die, and hence there would be three vacancies. You ask why not fill them? The answer is because these gentlemen, the Committee on Appropriations, say that you shall not fill them. They say you can only fill 25 per cent of the places, and therefore it requires four vacancies in order to secure one appointment. If three men die in class 1 and class 2 and class 3 and class 4, thus creating twelve vacancies, in each of which the Committee on Appropriations says a clerk is needed, yet the vacancies can not be filled either by promotion or original appointment, because there were only three to die in each class, and the Appropriations Committee has decreed that there must exist four vacancies in each class before one place can be filled either by promotion or appointment.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. In the event that there are only three employees in class 1, what provision is made for filling that vacancy if it requires four?

Mr. RUCKER. The Committee on Appropriations is a progressive committee, and it has made some progress. They had that sort of a proposition in the bill the year before or two years ago, but this limitation has been liberalized some little since then.

I speak candidly, and I say that this committee, after much deliberation, solemnly came into this House last year, if I am not mistaken as to the date, with a provision which in the event of death or catastrophe having removed all of the medical examiners, that would have left the bureau without a single medical examiner, because the bill declared that there should be no filling of any place unless four vacancies should exist. See how peculiar it is. If gentlemen say we need four clerks in a given class, why require all four to die, and then only allow the promotion or appointment of one to take the place of four. If such a policy must exist in this country, I insist that it should, as a matter of fairness and right, be a universal policy, because one of the principles that I learned early in life was that there should be no special favoritism shown in these matters and no unjust discrimination against men who are honestly and courageously performing official duties.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; I gladly yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. Awhile ago something was said about the work being current. I took occasion yesterday to read the testimony in regard to this matter, and I remember very well that the Deputy Commissioner said it was practically current so far as the correspondence went in collecting the testimony, but they did not have the force to make it anything like current in adjudicating the cases after they came in, which is the principal and main thing. He also testified there were a good many vacancies incurred by transfers from his bureau to other bureaus in the Government where they paid better salaries than they could afford to pay there. Then, under the provision the gentleman is discussing, they can not fill those unless there are three.

Mr. RUCKER. Certainly not.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. The bill provides that four men in the Pension Office resign from it before they can put in one in the service. I yield to the gentleman who has arisen.

Mr. GOOD. It is a fact that no clerk can secure a transfer without the consent of the chief of the bureau in which he is employed, so if transfers are being made they are made with the consent of the Commissioner of Pensions, and he certainly would not consent to them if he is in such dire straits as the gentleman stated.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa is correct, but why should the officials refuse transfers when you say here that if three men die in a class during this fiscal year the vacancies shall not be filled either by appointment or promotion. If some of those men who are doomed to go from that bureau by virtue of this odious limitation, who have been working so faithfully all these years, because you have refused to appropriate for them, and the chairman says this bill fails to appropriate for 43 clerks who were provided for in the bill passed last year—if those unfortunate clerks over whose heads the ax is swinging, soon to be dropped with disastrous consequences to them, can find a place in some other bureau, why not let them be transferred to some other service?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to say to the gentleman that about 18 months ago I filed quite a number of widows' claims in the Bureau of Pensions. Shortly after the applications were filed I filed all the necessary evidence in order to prosecute the claims. Several months elapsed, and I wrote the commissioner asking him why the claims had not been allowed. I was advised after 18 months had elapsed there were still 48,000 claims pending in the Bureau of Pensions, and that these claims were taken up in the order in which they were filed, and it was not possible to grant these pensions until they were reached in the regular order.

I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Does it seem like the proper thing to do, like the wise thing to do, if these old widows, some of them 85 years old, are compelled to wait for 18 months to 2 years to have their claims adjudicated, when all of the necessary evidence has been furnished—is it proper and wise for this committee to decrease the force further or to increase it?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, the gentleman's question answers itself. Unless we intend to slap that bureau in the face, we ought to give them adequate force. No one will deny that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It has been reported—I have heard it several times, and I want to ask the gentleman if he has made any investigation in respect to it—that there is a studied attempt being made for the purpose of discrediting the Pension Bureau on account of the new War-Risk Bureau, and for the purpose of boosting the new War-Risk Bureau so that it will eventually take over the pension end of this Government?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that I have heard such rumors, but really I can not think they are true. I still insist, hard though it is for me to do so, that this is simply a matter of bad judgment on the part of this committee. I do not think the committee can be actuated by a desire to turn the Pension Bureau, with its corps of well-trained and efficient clerks, over to the War-Risk Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, let me remind gentlemen that civil-service law is in force in this land. The present administration favors it and past administrations favored it. Gentlemen who are on this committee, and I think every one of them, stand sponsors for civil service, but when it comes to the Pension Bureau they contradict their every act in official life and insist that as to this one bureau clerks and employees engaged there shall not enjoy the rights, emoluments, and benefits of civil service. If there is anything in civil service to justify any sane man in voting for it or standing for it, it is that idea of equality and reward for merit, that idea that you or I or any man in the land, though inexperienced, may, by faithful effort, by loyal and patriotic endeavor, by assiduous care and devotion to the work intrusted to us shall in recognition of valuable services be moved up a step to a more responsible place, with possibly a little pittance more of compensation, when vacancies occur for which we are eligible and qualified.

The very soul of civil-service law is the hope that encourages one to confidently believe that if he continues to prove his fidelity to his country, his loyalty to his Government, and his fidelity to duty, that when a vacancy higher up occurs those in authority will say to him, step up higher; we will reward the patriotic, diligent, and untiring efforts of a faithful and worthy clerk. But in the Pension Bureau see, oh, see, how dark and dismal is the future to one of these civil-service employees of that office. There is no hope—no chance for promotion. No. Why? Because this group of distinguished men—the Committee on Appropriations—selected by us to serve us, have determined that, however faithful the service of any man in that bureau, there shall be no reward for his fidelity, there is no hope of his promotion, but he must be doomed to sit at the desk where he started in life with every avenue of advancement closed to him.

Gentlemen, is it possible that the representatives of a great Nation will, without reason or excuse for the act, after they have had their attention called to it, deal so harshly and cruelly with men intrusted with the performance of official duties and who always have been true and loyal to their obligations? I hope you will wipe out this section by unanimous vote. Give the boy in the Pension Bureau an even opportunity in life; give him a chance if he is worthy of it, if he is loyal, if he is sober, if he is faithful, if he performs his duty well, give him the same chance to be promoted that every other clerk in every other department of this Government enjoys.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Do not we owe more to the soldiers and their widows in expediting the adjudicating of their claims?

Mr. RUCKER. I am trying, if I can, to avoid a discussion of that thought, because I am afraid there may be those somewhere to whom such an appeal would be fruitless. I believe if gentlemen who are in my presence to-day could go and see what I have seen, if they could visit the humble home of some man who bled and almost died for that flag, if they could see how dark and dismal with despair are many of the humble abodes of good, brave, and true men, and hear the shrieks of agony that come from widows, emaciated and broken by the burdens of life, their helpless children whose father's proudest boast was that he was a faithful, brave Federal soldier, they would join with me in calling on this committee to take out of the bill that which I think does injustice to the sense of fairness of this House, and which I think stigmatizes the Pension Bureau, and which I think ought to be repudiated by every fair-minded man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] closed with a very eloquent appeal in behalf of his amendment to strike out this paragraph, but I think I can show to the committee that there is nothing in this provision which is recommended by the committee and nothing in the status of the work now in the Pension Office which justifies the appeal just made. Now, the gentleman speaks of this proposition as if it were a new one. As a matter of fact, this provision of law was first carried in an appropriation bill five years ago, and every year, without exception, the gentleman from Missouri has made a motion to strike it out, and has delivered an appeal such as he made here to-day, and the House has consistently refused to adopt his motion. Now, if you will pardon me for a moment, I want to state to you the reason which influenced the committee originally in placing this provision in the law. The committee found five years ago that there was an extraordinary number of clerks in the Pension Office. The committee felt that in the interest of economy, efficiency, and better administration something should be done to reduce the force in the Pension Office. Now, no one of the committee was willing to turn out any civil-service employee of the Pension Office, whether old or young. We were not willing to do an injustice to any employee of the Pension Office by eliminating the position that he held, because I want to say to you that we have no disposition whatever to deny the Pension Office a single clerk that is necessary to do the work of that office. On the contrary, we want the Pension Office to have all the force that is necessary to dispose of claims in that office at the earliest possible moment, and that is the desire of every member of the committee, coming as they do from every section of this country. But, as I say, confronted as we were with the patent proposition that there were too many clerks in the Pension Office, feeling that something should be done to reduce them, and at the same time not desiring to work any injury upon any particular individual employed in that office, the committee finally decided to adopt the provision which was, I am told, recommended by a former Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Warner, I think it was, many years ago, and carried in the bill at that time. So it was provided that in the succeeding fiscal year not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in the Pension Office should be filled by appointment.

In that way the committee felt that we could reduce the force in the office and at the same time do no injury to any employee in the office. That provision was carried in the bill for one or two years. Now, what happened? We felt, gentlemen of the committee, I want to say in all frankness, that the House and the committee were not shown the spirit of cooperation that was expected. If a $1,800 clerk died or resigned, causing a vacancy, we immediately found in the next hearing that promotions were made from the lower to the $1,800 grade without regard to the number in the respective grades. The result was that in a couple of years we found that the Pension Office was top heavy in the higher salaries, containing a much higher percentage of clerks getting those large salaries than any other bureau of any other department in the Government. And to prove that——

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. How does the average salary of the Pension Office compare with the average salary of the War-Risk Bureau, say, or any other bureau of the Government?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have those figures. I am glad the gentleman referred to them, because I intend to present them to the House.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him—I hope not to do so again—I understood the gentleman to say awhile ago that you have reduced the number of clerks about 47 this year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Forty-three employees in this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. But in your report accompanying this bill, as I read it, it says the number of persons employed in the Pension Office in 1918—that is, for this fiscal year—was 1,091, and the number provided for in this bill is 962, making a difference of 129.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Some of the vacancies have occurred by transfer, but, as a matter of fact, this bill only seeks to omit 43 positions. I can show the gentleman the statement.

Mr. RUCKER. That is, 43 that were carried in the last bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. You drop out a whole lot this year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, again, I just made the remark that the result of that provision——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for 10 minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The result was that we had a top-heavy force there in the Pension Office. We found a great big percentage of the clerks drawing $1,800 and $1,600 and $1,400, and a correspondingly small percentage of clerks drawing $1,100, $1,000, and $900.

Now, what could we do? As I say, without intending the least reflection on those in charge of the Pension Bureau, because I have the highest regard and esteem for them as capable, honest, and efficient Government officials, we felt that they had not altogether enforced the provision of law in the true spirit of its meaning and intention. But I want to say in justice to them that I do not think it was altogether their fault, because when an $1,800 vacancy occurred I have no doubt but that many Members of Congress rushed down to them and insisted that they should promote some $1,600, $1,400, or $1,200 clerk, and we felt that in adopting this provision we were really relieving those gentlemen of the burden of resisting the importunities of Members of Congress who were bringing influence to bear in securing promotions for constituents of theirs in the Pension Bureau. So we adopted another provision that provided that not more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring in any one grade should be filled. And that is the way in which this provision was written into law.

Now, as bearing out what I said to you, and in response to the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], let me tell you that there are now in the Pension Office a percentage of 6.1 drawing $2,000 and more; 11.7 per cent drawing $1,800; 8.9 per cent drawing $1,600; 25 per cent drawing $1,400; 33.2 per cent drawing $1,200; 6.5 per cent, $1,000; 3.7 per cent, $900; 2.3 per cent, $840; six-tenths of 1 per cent, $720; one-tenth of 1 per cent, $660; and six-tenths of 1 per cent, $420, and out of a total force of 962. In other words, at the present moment, gentlemen, there are 85.5—now, listen to this—85.5 per cent of the entire force of the Pension Bureau getting $1,200 or more and only 13.8 per cent getting less than $1,200.

Now, let us compare that with the War-Risk Bureau, with a force of 1,844 persons. Only 17.6 per cent of the employees of the War-Risk Bureau get $1,200 and over, as compared with 85.5 per cent of the Pension Bureau; 79.2 per cent of the War-Risk Bureau get less than $1,200, as compared with 13.8 per cent in the Pension Office. Or, in other words, the average salary of the employees in the War-Risk Bureau to-day, gentlemen, is only $1,063 per annum, while the average salary of the 962 employees in the Pension Office is $1,374 per annum.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wish you gentlemen would let me get through, and I will be glad to yield.

Mr. LANGLEY. I wanted to ask a question pertinent at this point.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman in a few moments. I want to refer for a moment to the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] to the effect that the action of the committee was resulting in interfering with the efficient administration of the work in the bureau.

Now, I have a letter which was sent to me after the hearings were printed by the Assistant Pension Commissioner on January 10. He inclosed a letter addressed by the chief clerk of the Pension Bureau to the Pension Commissioner, and I shall read a portion of that letter to you and let you see from the statements of the chief clerk whether or not the action of the committee in the past has resulted in depriving the office of the necessary number of clerks to perform the work efficiently and promptly. What does he say? Listen:

> Recent legislation has thrown considerable new and important work upon this bureau. By reason of deaths, transfers, resignations, and employees entering military service the force now engaged on the adjudication of pension claims is about 100 fewer than this time last year.

And you will observe that the decrease in force comes from the resignations of clerks to go into the military service and with other objects in view. He says further:

> Notwithstanding this increase of work and decrease in help, the bureau has, by the adoption of new and simplified methods, the proper distribution of the clerks, the hearty cooperation of officials and employees, and the cutting of red tape, managed to expedite and handle with the proper care this additional work and at the same time keep current the regular work of the bureau.

[Applause.]

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, gentlemen, there is no denying that statement made by the chief clerk of the Pension Bureau, and he has done that, remember, with a hundred less employees than he had at this time last year.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman the date of the letter.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is December 31. It was sent to me on January 10.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Right along that line, let me ask the gentleman how he accounts for the fact that the bureau now, right at this time, is 12 months to 2 years behind in its work? If they are able to carry the current work up, how does he explain the proposition?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I explain that by saying, with all due deference to the gentleman, that in that statement he takes issue with the chief clerk of the Pension Bureau and also with the hearings which were taken before the committee.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Let me say to the gentleman that last week I had occasion to call at the Bureau of Pensions. More than 18 months ago I filed a claim for an old Civil War widow. I filed all the evidence in the case shortly, within 60 days after the time the claim was filed. The old lady is past 85 years of age. If I have written one letter to the Bureau of Pensions, I have written a dozen.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Do not take all my time.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to finish this statement. I have written to the bureau asking why this claim has not been adjudicated, inasmuch as all the evidence had been filed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is, I think, easily explained.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. He explained to me that he had not had the force.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The assistant commissioner stated to the committee that there were approximately 55,000 pensioners removed from the rolls during the last year, and that they had received 117,000 new applications. He further stated that under the Ashbrook law, which raised the pensions of widows, there were 175,000 applications for increase filed.

That law, as you know, was passed in September, 1916, less than two years ago. Yet the Assistant Pension Commissioner stated that, notwithstanding the fact that he had no increased force, they had disposed of 165,000 of those 175,000 applications. He said that on account of raising the limit of marriage from 1890 to 1905 there had been 48,000 cases filed, and there were 16,000 filed by reason of the change of law as to marriage; 9,000 cases were filed on account of the law giving pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars, and 40,000 claims in other classes.

Now, he did say that in the work on claims in which evidence has been presented the office would be current by the 1st of June or July. You gentlemen know how difficult it is to get the necessary evidence. Sometimes the claims have to be sent back to the field and to the pension examiners time and time again before the proof is fully established so that it can be passed upon. I have had the same experience myself. I have had claims which have been sent to one State and then to another State to pension examiners for the purpose of securing evidence.

Now, when the gentleman says that those claims are behind, he states what is necessarily true.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have no objection to the present chief clerk of the bureau bragging on his own administration of his office. He is a personal friend of mine, and I desire to commend him for his faithful and efficient service. But I do know that the bureau is not up to date with its work, and I can pick out a dozen cases from memory right now where——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman may pick out a dozen cases or he may pick out a hundred cases from his district, because he has a great many from his district——

Mr. LANGLEY. That is true——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But I submit to him that in cases where there has been a considerable delay it has been because the applicants have not furnished the necessary proof in the first instance to secure action on the claims. The cases have to be sent sometimes to different pension examiners before the Pension Commissioner can act in one way or another upon them.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; but that argument does not apply to the case referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] and many others that I know of of a similar character, where the applications and the evidence were filed and months and months elapsed before any action, or where the applications have been filed and months pass by before they call for evidence in the cases. I am not criticizing the bureau; I am merely stating facts that are within my personal knowledge.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. If you will turn to page 567 of the hearings you will find that the assistant commissioner testified that all work would be current by the 1st of June or July. We are not making provision here that will become effective before that date, so that before this money is available all the work, according to the Assistant Commissioner of Pensions, will be current, and they will start off with that work current; and this force is to be 100 men more than they now have to do the work next year.

Mr. RUCKER. One hundred less.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wish to repeat, gentlemen, that the committee is not actuated by any other purpose save that of bringing about or continuing the efficient and proper administration of the Pension Bureau and at the same time eliminating any clerks that may not be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. You gentlemen know that under the law which was passed last fall every application for pension to-day by a soldier who was in the Army after October 6 goes not to the Pension Office, but to the War-Risk Bureau. The Pension Office does not consider applications for pensions——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not the time. They do not consider applications for pension on the part of the soldiers who are in the Army to-day. They go to the War-Risk Bureau. Now why, under those circumstances, should we undertake to adopt this provision and permit this bureau to again unduly increase their force if they see fit to do it?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And not only increase it, but, as they did in the past, build up a great, big, top-heavy bureau of high-salaried clerks in comparison with other bureaus in this Government, because I say to you, without fear of successful contradiction, that there is not a bureau in any department of the Government that has nearly so large a percentage of high salaries as are now being paid in this particular bureau, and it is for that very reason that the committee adopted this provision, and it is for that reason that I ask you to sustain the committee in this matter by voting down this amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman speaks of the bureau being top-heavy. It could not put in more men of one class than the committee appropriates for, could it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know this, that to-day, when he talks about there being such a great necessity for clerks, it developed in the hearings that they had a $1,600 and $1,800 position that had been vacant for a time?

Mr. RUCKER. They could not fill it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I beg your pardon. They could have done so.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me ask you a question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will read to you what Mr. Tieman said about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Tennessee offered to answer questions.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may be able to direct the gentleman's attention to what he wishes to quote. The gentleman will find it on page 559 of the hearings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman read it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. I read:

Mr. BYRNS. Take the 34 vacancies which have occurred since July 1, and give us those grades.

Mr. TIEMAN. One medical examiner, $1,800; one chief of division, $2,000; three principal examiners, $2,000—

Now, mark you—

four clerks of class 4, $1,800—

Those were vacancies existing at present, where under the existing provision he could appoint one. Then—

four clerks of class 3, $1,600—

Where he could appoint a clerk whom he had not appointed and where we have reason to assume he does not need that clerk—

seven clerks of class 2—

And yet no appointment to that vacancy, although he is entitled under this provision to make an appointment—

five clerks of class 1, $1,200—

But no appointment has been made under existing law. There is the proof that he has an adequate force.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? That indicates that the Pension Bureau has not been prodigal, but exceedingly careful about filling places where they are not needed.

Mr. STAFFORD. It indicates that they have ample force down there, and we followed that in fixing the number of clerks in the respective grades, basing our action upon this information, so that in the next fiscal year the bureau will not be hampered in any way whatsoever.

Mr. RUCKER. It means that they are not advancing clerks in the bureau where they do not need them, does it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; it means that they are not employing clerks in the respective grades where they can employ them.

Mr. RUCKER. It does not mean anything of the kind. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] another question, if he will permit me. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read the following paragraph of that letter which he received from the chief clerk down there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean with reference to the 60,000 applications?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes. The paragraph which shows that there are 60,000 unadjudicated claims in the bureau right now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is stated in the hearings.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman has not read it. Will he kindly read that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The paragraph to which the gentleman refers reads as follows:

There are now approximately 60,000 active pending claims in the bureau. There are also over 350,000 invalid pensioners now on the roll. These pensioners are dying at the rate of about 30,000 per annum. It is estimated that the death of 30,000 invalid pensioners occasions the filing of approximately 20,000 new claims—widows', minor children's, dependents', and reimbursement claims—and that the death of a certain number of widow pensioners will cause the filing of claims amounting to about one-fifth of that number, which would be, according to the number of widows dying each year, about 5,000 claims.

Now, that is practically the only source from which this Pension Bureau will get its additional claims unless new legislation is passed, because, as I just stated, under the law as it reads to-day, all claims for pensions on the part of soldiers in the Army after October 6 go to the War-Risk Bureau.

Mr. RUCKER. But the gentleman knows there have been a whole lot of applications caused by deaths and injuries before October 6.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why should we undertake to maintain this force at its present size, when the work must necessarily grow less?

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Until my time expires.

Mr. MAPES. I have heard it stated that it was the policy of the bureau to delay the granting of the applications of widows on the theory that they are dying off rapidly, and that if the bureau delays the granting of their pensions a year or so it will not be necessary to give a great many of them a pension at all. What does the gentleman know about that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not believe that there is any truth in that sort of a statement.

Mr. MAPES. I hope there is not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I certainly hope there is not, and my knowledge of the gentleman in charge of the Pension Bureau is such as to make me say that I am satisfied that there is no justification for that sort of a statement.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I had four cases this last year of persons who required the coming of a special examiner to examine their cases, and the special examiners came at four different times, incurring the expense of coming from Washington on four separate trips instead of taking the four cases at one time. They were all pending at the same time and could all have been examined at one time. They came at four different times, which delayed all of the cases. There has been an unwarrantable delay in case after care. I can not see any reason at all for it, and there is no excuse for it. I do not know what to make of it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can see no reason for it, either, unless it be that there was some difficulty in securing the necessary evidence.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Not at all. The evidence was easy. I have in my pocket now a case where the evidence has all been supplied, and yet I have seen a letter from the Pension Department demanding that the same evidence be furnished again, and the evidence has been supplied.

Mr. RUCKER. I am sure there is some mistake about that. But I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee to tell us if there is any other bureau in the Government treated in this way?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; for there has been no necessity for this sort of a provision in any other bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], speaking so resolutely for economy. I believe that, of all the bureaus of all the departments in the Government, the last place where there should be any cheese-paring spirit is the Bureau of Pensions, because it is so intimately connected with the good and welfare of American homes. Its action means comfort in old age for worthy pensioners. It means that those who served the country in its hour of stress and labor should be treated not only courteously and efficiently but promptly. I yield to no man in my expression of gratitude to those who did their part in the days when men were needed; and whenever a claim is presented to the Bureau of Pensions it should receive prompt consideration. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] says they should have all the help that is necessary. Well, if that be so, the gentleman ought to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman pardon me? If the amendment which is now pending be adopted, it will not add a single man to the roll who is not now provided for.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It merely keeps in office those who are there, and who, in my opinion, are insufficient to do the work.

Mr. LANGLEY. And it gives a chance for the promotion of worthy employees.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The gentleman quotes the chief clerk of the Bureau of Pensions. I am going to quote the deputy commissioner, Mr. Tieman. I presume the deputy commissioner is rated a little higher than the chief clerk.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman pardon me for just one moment in that connection, to say one word that is personal?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. The Deputy Commissioner of Pensions of the United States, Mr. Tieman, came to Washington as my private secretary. He was with me, my confidential man, for 15 years. He got the place he has to-day on the recommendation of a large number of the membership of this House, by reason of his faithfulness, his fidelity, and his knowledge of pension matters. There is no better man in the employ of the Government to-day than the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. That is right.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I look upon the postponement of a petition by a veteran or a widow or dependent children as the refinement of cruelty by this Government. [Applause.] I can readily understand that old men and old women may be passing away in poverty, in sorrow, in tears, simply by virtue of the fact that the Government of the United States is lax in its prosecution of their petition. Cite to me anything more diabolical than the postponement of a worthy petition by a veteran of the Civil War.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will.

Mr. LOBECK. Are not the most of these petitioners women?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. And the postponement in their case is more severe than it would be if it was in the case of a man?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Absolutely so. This House has done something for the women in generously voting them suffrage, but they are saying to these old widows, "We will consider your petition months from now." I am going to read a letter from the deputy commissioner to me, and it happens, by the way, that it is dated January 10, 1918, the same date as the letter read by the gentleman from Tennessee from the chief clerk. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, January 10, 1918.

Hon. GEORGE F. O'SHAUNESSY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. O'SHAUNESSY: Answering inquiries made in your letter of the 8th instant in regard to delays in this bureau "in answering letters and settling claims," you are advised, in addition to the information contained in the attached report of the chief clerk of the bureau at the end of the last calendar year, that of the 60,000 active pending claims it is estimated that 20,000 are widows' claims, under the act of September 8, 1916 (the Ashbrook law), in which completing evidence has been filed.

It has been the practice to consider these claims in the order in which the evidence was filed, and claims in which evidence was received up to June 19, 1917, are now being handled in their regular turn. First calls for evidence are being made in claims received up to November 1.

Indian-war claims (act of Mar. 4, 1917) are about 60 days in arrears of reports from official sources in regard to the fact of service and length of same.

Other classes of claims are either practically current or within 60 days of being so.

Of the number of pieces of mail received during the last calendar year 67,000 were congressional letters. Except when they related to claims in certain stages of adjudication, replies to these letters are current in a majority of the divisions of the bureau. In those divisions where correspondence is heaviest replies are sometimes delayed from 10 days to 3 weeks. The delay in answering miscellaneous correspondence is much longer, often from 3 to 6 months.

In this connection I will say that 915 persons are employed in the bureau in the performance of clerical duties, and the average age of these employees is 57 years. I beg to say, further, that the difficulties under which the bureau is laboring could be entirely removed if the 25 per cent limitation clause inserted in the appropriation act, and which relates to the Pension Bureau alone, were eliminated. This would permit the appointment of such clerical help as is needed to keep the work more nearly current and to obviate those conditions which result from a restriction preventing the most effective adjustment of the force employed in the bureau to the labors to be performed in administering persion laws now in existence or which may hereafter be enacted.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. TIEMAN,
Deputy Commissioner.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In view of that statement of the Assistant Pension Commissioner, will the gentleman tell the committee why they have not filled the vacancies of the $1,800 clerk and the $1,600 clerk, which have existed down there for several months?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It has been answered by some gentlemen on this side, that the work of these men is of a special character, and may be men in another division or another class which they have not the power to fill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are all clerks in that class.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do not care whether they are specially trained or not. What I am here advocating is a decent treatment of the Pension Bureau and of the people that have to do business with the Pension Bureau.

It ill becomes the Congress of the United States to take such a position as is attempted to be taken by the chairman of the committee in this bill. [Applause.] Let me say that my complaint was not based on pique, it was based on delay. I am not one of those fractious individuals that takes umbrage at the slightest delay. There must have been some continuing reason for my interrogation of the bureau. While I recognize the splendid work they are doing I would strengthen their hands by retaining the force which in my opinion is not sufficient to do the work.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman let me interrupt him to ask a question of the chairman of the committee at this point?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. At the time of the hearings, I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if there was not very much discussion between the subcommittee and the Deputy Commissioner of Pensions that was not put in the hearings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There may have been some discussions.

Mr. RUCKER. In that conversation did not Mr. Tieman make it plain as possible that what he needed was to cut the shackles that bound him by taking out this 25 per cent limitation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can not get some limitation on this debate.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to see if we can not get some limitation on this debate. I am a little embarrassed in asking it, because I consumed so much of the time myself. I am not going to object to the extension of the time of the gentleman from Rhode Island, but I am going to see if we can not agree on a certain length of time. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 30 minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Reserving the right to object, I believe if the gentleman will modify his request a little there will be no objection to it. The gentleman says "on the paragraph and all amendments thereto."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We have discussed the matter at great length.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is so genial that I want to pay my respects to him once more before I quit. Let the gentleman confine his request "to this amendment."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 35 minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will make it 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee modifies his request by making it 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. Under certain conditions, I want five minutes. Does the gentleman's request contemplate that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Chair will control that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Tennessee has some understanding as to who shall occupy that time. He will have to inform the Chair in regard to that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object to the request.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the motion by making it 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall conclude at the expiration of 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] moves to amend it by making it 15 minutes. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee as amended.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I thought I was given five minutes under this combination. I would like to conclude in an orderly manner.

The CHAIRMAN. But the time of the gentleman from Rhode Island had expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I asked unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Rhode Island have 2 minutes outside of the 15 minutes agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I do not feel embarrassed because I take very little time of the House, but I would like to call attention to this salient fact, that we should be guided by the information of the deputy commissioner and not by that of the chief clerk. We should be guided by the necessities of those who do business with the Bureau of Pensions, and we should not be taken off our feet by this economical plea when we are extending the salaries of everybody in the employ of the Government. We have been cited to the case of some people down in the bureau who have been working there perhaps 50 years and have been receiving the munificent salary of $2,000 a year. We are cited to that fact in order that we may now be economical. We are given in minute detail and refined percentages, so to speak, the number of men who are receiving $1,800 a year, of those who receive $1,400 a year, when the cry throughout the land is the increased cost of living, and then we, the Congress of the United States, say: "Do not mind the pensioners, do not mind the veterans, do not mind the widows, but keep on reducing the clerical force, and thus postpone the day when deserving pensioners obtain a hearing. I am opposed to that policy of delay." [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the original veteran pensioner is passing very fast. Not long will it be until he is but a memory. There were more than 30,000 of them who died last year. The State of Indiana contributed 224,000 original enlistments. There are but 18,000 remaining in Indiana of those original enlistments; but it is not true that the pension work is decreasing. The evidence shows that it is increasing, and the evidence and the practical experience of those who have to do daily with the Pension Department do not conform to the testimony of the chief clerk as submitted to the committee. Only this morning I received a letter from an old lady, the widow of an old soldier, who filed her application for a pension in 1916, furnishing all the evidence that was necessary. She has been waiting patiently from that day to this for some result. I have written three different letters on that one case and I have received back a courteous reply every time after some 10 days or three weeks, stating that the case is under consideration, with a view of early determination. I expect that is a stereotyped answer that every gentleman here receives from that office. If this bill passes as it is now reported, 43 of these men go out as a matter of course, according to the statement of the chairman. According to the figures submitted at the hearings more than 100 go out, and 25 per cent of those who die during the current year will not have their places filled. If the business is increasing rather than decreasing there is no good practical sense in this proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have only five minutes. On the other hand, there is a very great reason why, especially at this time, an adequate force should be maintained down there. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] states from the hearings that their business is current. It depends on what you call current. If these pension claims, where the evidence is submitted, where there is no question about the proof, remain there unexamined and undetermined for 18 months or two years, then I do not like their idea of currency. The time has come with reference to the pensioner, with reference to the widow of the survivor of the war, when her pension claim in no instance, except in rare cases, should be pending to exceed six months. If there is not sufficient force to make an examination in that time there should be.

I wish to say in passing that if there ever was a time in the history of the world when we should reaffirm the promise that was made during the period from sixty-one to sixty-four, that the survivor of the war and his dependents would be the wards of this Nation and receive its constant care and attention, now is that time. We are asking others to do what they did. We should show by our example here that we are true to the promises then made, and if, forsooth, they are passing so rapidly to the beyond, then we should show that we will be true not only to the last one of them but to their dependents as well. I want to say that if conditions were now as they were during the first quarter of a century after the close of the Civil War, when the old soldier dominated this Congress and the legislation of the country, more regard would be paid to him. Now that he is going and has left a dependent widow or child, the duty is none the less incumbent upon those who are filling the place now on behalf of those who bared their breast that this Nation might survive, and that we might stand as a beacon light for democracy in the world; so that I say that now of all times we should not lay a hand upon this last refuge of the old soldier.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that we ought to give to this department every clerk essential to transact the business of the Pension Office with the greatest dispatch, but I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana and to the members of this committee that that is just what the committee in reporting this bill has done. The Ashbrook bill threw on the Pension Office a great many new claims, and yet during the year, according to the letter of the chief clerk of that office, with almost a hundred vacancies in the force by reason of military enlistments, and so forth, the commissioner passed upon 165 of those claims under the Ashbrook Act in addition to the regular business. The assistant commissioner testified that by the 1st of June next the work of the office will be current. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana this question: If there is such great need for clerks down there, why is it that from the commissioner's office there has been detailed all of the year 16 clerks to other departments of the Interior, why is it——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana rose.

Mr. GOOD. I can not yield.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Then why does the gentleman ask the question if he does not want an answer?

Mr. GOOD. Why is it that some of these clerks have been detailed since 1912, if there is a dearth of clerks in that office? Mr. Chairman, this House will find a greater problem confronting it if it adopts this amendment. The Pension Office is disappearing. The Pension Office to-day does not pass on a single claim of any of the men now serving in the Army and the Navy. Those claims go to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. One thousand persons, in round numbers, are employed in that office, and the problem is, how we are going to get rid of that large force after all of the work of the Pension Office has disappeared.

The committee took this matter into consideration when it originated this legislation several years ago. This legislation will not result in postponing for a single moment the consideraton of a single claim.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I regret I can not.

Mr. RUCKER. It did not have in view the establishment of the War-Risk Bureau five years ago, did it?

Mr. GOOD. No. Every claim that comes before the commissioner must go through a certain course of investigation. It must be sent in many cases out into the field, and the field investigators must investigate the facts that the commissioner desires investigated, and when those reports come back, then if there is a discrepancy in the report that discrepancy must be reconciled, and it is that investigation that takes the time. The trouble is with the red tape in the office and not in an insufficient number of clerks. Why, if we even adopt this amendment, it does not affect the field force. It affects only the clerks here in the office, and if you have not sufficient clerks to do the work then why does the commissioner permit the details, some of whom have been detailed from 1912 down to the present time? Mr. Chairman, I have in my district an old soldiers' home. I have a great deal of correspondence with this department. I would not knowingly do a thing here to-day or in the Committee on Appropriations or anywhere that would postpone for a single minute the consideration of the claims of a soldier or the widow of a soldier. These claimants are getting old, and I sympathize with every effort to aid the Government to pass upon their claims with utmost dispatch. I have their interests in mind when I say this, but I have also in mind the interests of thousands of persons employed in the Pension Office—a disappearing office—and sooner or later you will be called upon to enact a law which practically eliminates a great many of those old and faithful employees, and there is hardly a man on the floor of this House to-day who would want to vote for that kind of a measure.

Mr. RUCKER. Is that the reason the gentleman wants to get rid of these employees a few at a time rather than all at once?

Mr. GOOD. We want to provide that no new ones be appointed, that the old ones remain there doing the work, and there are enough of them to do it promptly, for when this money will be available, according to Mr. Tieman's testimony, the work then will be current, notwithstanding the fact that he had in his office almost 100 persons less than were appropriated for, and he had in his office about 50 less than he will have during the year 1918, if this appropriation is used.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. RUCKER. If this amendment is adopted it will not add one single clerk you have not provided for?

Mr. GOOD. If it would not, the gentleman's argument falls to the ground. Then what is the gentleman complaining about?

Mr. RUCKER. I would strike out this limitation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the members of this committee had the facts before it as the subcommittee had them presented by the officers of the Pension Bureau, in my opinion there would be no question whatsoever but what they would approve and ratify the action of the committee. No one on the committee desires to do aught that will cripple the Pension Bureau, but the committee recognized that the additional work imposed upon the bureau was because of the passage of the Ashbrook law in September, 1917. Under that law 175,000 applications for increases were presented, of which at the present time 165,000 have been disposed of.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield in five minutes. Under the two other provisions of that law relating to the granting of increases to widows who had remarried and a pensionable status to those who married after June 27, 1890, the commissioner himself says on page 567 of the hearings that all the work under the Ashbrook law will be current on June 1 of this year. Now, there is no additional legislation pending that will impose additional work upon that bureau except an increase of pensions of soldiers, and yet we see that the existing clerical force have been able to keep up with their work to the extent of 165,000 out of 175,000 applications for increased pensions to widows. But more. The deputy commissioner says that at the time of the hearing in the latter part of last year there were 29 vacancies existing in the respective grades above $1,000 where he could have appointed five clerks, four of class 4, four of class 3, seven of class 2, and five of class 1. As he did not avail himself of the opportunity under the existing provision to appoint these additional clerks, that was proof positive to the committee that his present force was ample to meet, during the next fiscal year, the present needs, and more than ample to meet the needs of applications under the Ashbrook law which have been presented that will be passed upon and be made current on June 1 of this year. Since we passed this same provision last year we have passed the war-risk insurance law, which takes away all cases of pensions arising after the passage of that law. Now, what work will the Pension Bureau have to consider beginning with the next fiscal year——

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not as much new pension work as in the past and very little under the Ashbrook law—I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. The gentleman asks the question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield. I did not ask the gentleman; he is only pestering me. In the Pension Bureau at the present time there are 172 between the ages of 70 and 80 years. We realize there are many chances that these men, occupying these high-salaried places, will drop out continually by reason of death. We do not remove anyone, but we say under this provision the Pension Bureau shall not have the privilege of promoting those clerks in the lower grades into these vacancies which are occurring, say, in the $1,600 and $1,800 grades, and we say they shall only appoint one in case of every four vacancies. This provision has been in the bill for the last three years. It worked no ill, even with the additional work imposed by the Ashbrook pension law, notwithstanding that the work under that law was great. I say with all frankness that the clerks we provide here, schedule for schedule, in the commissioner's office on July 1, 1918, will be ample to meet all the conditions. As set forth by the gentleman from Iowa, for several years there have been 17 detailed from this office into the respective bureaus of the Department of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Pensions, at any time he wanted those $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800 clerks detailed to those various offices, could command their services or direct their return.

The whole testimony shows that the Pension Bureau has as much of a clerical force as is needed. The question for the committee to determine is whether you are going to accept the judgment of the subcommittee, that spent days and weeks and months in the preparation of this detailed bill, or are going to follow the suggestions of Members who have only a superficial knowledge of the conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 42.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. RUCKER took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all of line 17, on page 105, and insert, at the end of line 16, "$1,600 or less than that sum."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUCKER: Page 105, line 17, strike out "$2,250 or above that sum" and insert, at the end of line 16, "$1,600 or less than that sum," so that it will read:

"The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any salary of $1,600 or less than that sum."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

Mr. RUCKER. Hold on!

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto has been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, there are not enough independent men here voting, and I make the point there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-five gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. I am not sure that it is a proper question, but I would like to know who is running this bill, this side of the House or that side?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is a nonpartisan bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman does become nonpartisan at times.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARNER and Mr. STAFFORD requested tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. RUCKER and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee took their places as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 8, noes 91.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem at not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence for persons employed in the Bureau of Pensions, detailed for the purpose of making special investigations pertaining to said bureau and for actual and other necessary expenses, including telegrams, $90,000.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. COX. I offer an amendment to strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "3."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do this for the purpose of calling the attention of the members of the committee to a very important matter, in my judgment. This morning I received the following telegram, dated Sterling, Ill., March 12, 1918:

Congressman JOHN C. MCKENZIE,
Washington:

Can you secure me point of enlistment of Walter E. Moore, reported among wounded in yesterday's casualty list.

(Signed) A. J. PLATT, Mayor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are all aware of the fact that the War Department has issued an order that in reporting all soldiers killed and wounded in France the name of the soldier alone shall be given to the public. We are told that Gen. Pershing requested this to be done, and that he did so upon the request of the French Government. When the order was issued I felt, as I believe every Member of this House felt, that it was a mistake, and that instead of doing the thing they expected it to do, it would only aggravate the matter. And this is the first evidence from my district, and it is evidence which will be coming from every district in the United States in a few days, unless that order is changed.

In my judgment it is not necessary in publishing such lists to give all the details, but it would do no harm to say, for example, that Walter E. Moore, of Sterling, Ill., was wounded on a certain date, and not give the regiment or the company, or even the division to which he belonged.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will ask the gentleman if he does not believe it would be better not to give the name at all unless they are going to give us the address?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; I do; and for this reason: On investigation I have found that this man Moore did not live in Sterling, Ill. Yet his father and mother, when seeing that name published in the local papers or in the Chicago papers, immediately thought perhaps it was their son. Upon investigation I found that the man enlisted in Montana. The effect of the present regulation will be that, if there are 100 Smiths in the Army in France and one Smith should be wounded, the mother of every soldier by the name of Smith in France will not rest until she has word as to whether or not it is her son.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am one of those, as I believe every Member here is, who is in favor of doing everything that will help our Government to win this war, and I would oppose anything that would give the great German Army any information that might aid in taking any advantage of our boys. But when an American boy lays down his life in France, or is even wounded there in upholding the colors of our country, I can see no harm in letting the people of this country know from what locality, at least, that boy came; and I hope that, in the wisdom of the War Department, that they will see the propriety of changing this order, which, to my mind, is uncalled for and unnecessary.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Can the gentleman say whether any information was furnished to our War Department giving the reasons in support of such an order? Can anybody give any sensible reason for it?

Mr. McKENZIE. None; except that they are anxious to keep the Germans from knowing that the American boys are in front of them. But they will find that out.

Mr. LITTLE. That objection would be obviated if we would take them away from there. That would be as good a way as this.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not mean to defend the practice, because I do not yet know enough of the reason for it; but I understand that it is the policy of the department to advise the relatives, or whoever the soldier may have given as his next friend, or next of kin.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. May I have one minute more?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The department advises those who are given by the soldier as his next friends. That is to say, in the case of the soldier to whom the gentleman refers, his friends in Montana were advised?

Mr. McKENZIE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So that the parents of that boy, if they understand it, might feel perfectly safe unless they receive advice from the department itself; that is, if they understood it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. But the unfortunate part of this order is that here is a mother, perhaps, in Sterling, Ill., who thinks this is her son. She will not be advised, while the mother in Montana will be, and rightfully.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the mother in Illinois, if she understood the policy of the War Department, would feel perfectly safe, because she would know if it were her boy she would be informed, because the department has stated that the parents of soldiers would be advised.

Mr. McKENZIE. I know that the War Department is doing what it believes to be the best in this matter, but I do not believe that even the War Department of our country can make no mistake, and I believe this is a mistake.

Mr. LITTLE. What difference would it make to the Germans to know whether the boy came from Austin, Tex., or Topeka, Kans.?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not see what difference it would make to the Kaiser of Germany, or to Von Hindenberg, or Ludendorff, or any great German general to know that John Smith, of Elizabeth, Ill., for example, was killed in front of their lines if the regiment was not named.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Do you imagine that the French Government, after three years' experience, would have made an idle request of this Government? Of course, all of us ascribe a patriotic motive to the gentleman who makes this motion; but do you suppose the French Government, after three years of actual experience, would have presented an idle request to this Government, not backed by a good reason?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I do not. I impute no bad motive to the French Government, but I will say to my friend that in cutting off or denying the right to publish the number of the regiment or the division, that, in my judgment, is a wise military regulation; but I can not for my life see, when the name of a man is published as having come from a certain place, giving no connection whatever with the military organization, why it would affect in any way the safety of the other Americans in France. On the other hand, it would do away with this uncertainty that is bound to sweep over this land of ours if this order continues.

Mr. GLASS. As the gentleman from Tennessee has indicated, there ought not to be any uncertainty if the people will just understand that the nearest of kin or nearest in friendship will always be first apprised of any casualty by the War Department. Then nobody else ought to have any apprehension in the matter.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. GILLETT. I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Does not the gentleman think it possible that a mother, seeing only the name of her son in the paper, might suspect that the War Department has failed to notify her, or that the notification had not reached her?

Mr. GLASS. Yes. That would be a very distressing circumstance. While I do not fully understand the situation myself, I can not conceive that the French Government, after three years of war, would make a request of this sort if there was not something of vital importance behind it. My own view is that there has been too much publicity about these matters.

Mr. McKENZIE. I may say to the gentleman that I feel this way in regard to this matter, so far as the French Government is concerned. I can not help but feel that there must be somewhere along the line a mistake in properly deciphering the cablegrams giving these orders, because I can not understand how the French Government could raise this question.

Mr. GILLETT. Is the gentleman certain that the French Government did request the action taken by our War Department?

Mr. GLASS. No; I am not certain that the French Government did request the action taken by the War Department, except it has been specifically stated in the newspapers that the order was issued in pursuance to the request of the French Government, based on the supposition that these publications would furnish valuable information to the enemy, and that the request was concurred in by the English Government. Whether that is true or not I am not prepared to state.

Mr. MADDEN. There is one thing you can not change, a mother's hope or fear for her boy, and there ought not to be anything done to make it more difficult for her to bear the burden of sending her boy to the front than is necessary.

Mr. GLASS. Well, some of us have as much affection for our boys as others have, and if the boy is killed those who are most concerned are his parents, and if the parents are notified that ought to be sufficient. This thing of thinking that the public should be informed of everything that is done is a mistake, and I say that although I am a newspaper man myself.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman I simply want to say that some of us have not the good fortune to have boys in this Army, but I think every man in the House feels the same way about it, and I am sure he does, that notwithstanding the fact that we may not have sons of our own there we are interested in every boy that we know from our communities.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I think so, too.

Mr. McKENZIE. And when we see the familiar name of a man in the list of casualties we would like to know whether he is from our community or not. [Applause.]

Mr. GLASS. I will say to my friend that I intended nothing personal in my observation. I am just insisting on my view that the French Government, if it did make this request, must have had some very good reason for it or it would not have made it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The British Government to-day publishes in the London Times daily a list of casualties. You can find the paper in the Library. If they have discontinued the practice it has been within the last month or so. They publish a casualty list, giving the command of the man who is killed or wounded. You will find long lists published each day. The French Government has never published any casualty list at any time. It has been the fixed policy of the French Government not to do that. But how much more dangerous is it for us to publish these lists than it is for the British Government to do so?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say right in that connection that so far as I am personally concerned I have no ill feeling in this matter, but I simply call the attention of the committee to the fact that in my judgment it would be infinitely better not to publish the lists at all than to publish them as they are now published.

Mr. GLASS. I do not ascribe any captious motive to my friend in bringing this to the attention of the House. Responding to the interruption just now, I apprehend that the reason why there is no objection to the publication of the lists that we see in the English newspapers is the fact that it is as well known to the German Army as it is to the English Army itself precisely what part of the front the English troops occupy. There may be good reasons for not wanting the Germans to know just what particular part of the front the American Army occupy at this time.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it not the practice also to publish the names in the Canadian newspapers? I have seen in Canadian newspapers lists of names, giving the company, regiment, and division to which a man belongs.

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not say as to that. I do not know.

Mr. ROBBINS. Further, in answer to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the gentleman seems to think there is great objection to publishing the names of American soldiers, on the ground that it is not known that the Americans are over there. Is it not known that Americans have been captured, and that they have been in the front trenches for some time? Of course the Germans know that they are there.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment just to say this: All the statements that I have seen in the press in connection with this order of the War Department to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has just addressed himself have been more or less critical, and it has seemed to me that perhaps the press has inadvertently failed to carry to the next of kin of soldiers information that it could very properly carry, and in the carrying of which it would render great service. That is, that it is the policy of the War Department, under this kind of an order, as it was before, immediately upon receipt of information of a casualty to advise the next of kin of the soldier of that fact. If this could be clearly understood—and if this order is to continue it ought to be understood in the country—then the parents and the next of kin of soldiers of the same name would not be alarmed if they did not receive advices.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, they would.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Because, if they understood perfectly that they would be advised by the department, I do not think there would be any occasion for alarm.

Mr. MADDEN. You never could make a mother understand it though.

Mr. WASON. Can the gentleman inform the House how soon after the information reaches the War Department means are taken to inform the interested relatives?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know, except that I had this experience: There were two young men from my district on the Tuscania. One of them was saved and one of them was lost. I myself made inquiries as to both of them before definite information was received by the department. It had been promised that I would be advised. About 3 o'clock on a Sunday morning I called the department by telephone, and I learned that they had received definite information as to the young man who was saved. They had finished deciphering a cablegram at 1.30 a. m., and had sent out a telegram to the father of the survivor at 1.45 a. m. That was one experience. As to the case of the one who was lost I do not know how long it was before they had definite information. Of course, I do not know how long it takes to get the telegrams out, but that has been one case in my experience.

Mr. WASON. Does the gentleman understand that the department communicates with the relatives of the soldiers by wire?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. By wire in all instances where it is possible to send a wire. They have the telegraphic address and the mail address of the next of kin, as I understand.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I move to amend the pro forma amendment by striking out two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out two words.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I just want to make this suggestion, Mr. Chairman. This is a matter in which everybody is deeply concerned, of course, and the mothers of the country are anxious and will continue to be so. Here is the situation: We have selected to take charge of our armies in France men in whom we have absolute confidence. I think everybody has confidence in Gen. Pershing as a military man and also confidence in those who serve under him. The news comes and is published in the paper that certain named men have been killed or wounded. Just as soon as possible thereafter the department notifies the next of kin, the parents of the boy, that their boy is killed or wounded. The other mothers in the country are, of course, extremely anxious. Now, here is the question: If their sons have not been killed or injured the day of their anxiety and sorrow will soon end; but it is the deliberate judgment of the men who have charge of our armies on the field that it would be to the best interest of the boys who are not injured if this information were not published. So they say to the mothers, "While you may undergo a few hours or a few days of unnecessary anxiety, feeling that this may be your boy, it is better that you do that, because by giving out this information it may give such an advantage of the enemy as may result in injury and perhaps death to your boy."

Now, who is the best judge of that? I think there can be no two sides to that question. The men in France who are charged with this great responsibility—I do not know whether this is the advice of the French Government or the English Government, but I understand from the press that it is and that Gen. Pershing himself agrees to it. If that be true, is it not better for all of us that we suffer these few days of great anxiety than to have a policy adopted which may result in the death of many more boys?

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that it would be just as well to say that 20 Americans, or 50 Americans, were killed on the 14th of March or the 15th of March, and just give the number without the names? Would it not be just as valuable to the public as to publish a string of names, and would it not be advisable to leave the names out entirely?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I confess that to my uninformed judgment on the subject that would answer every purpose. But the general in charge of the Army over there says that it is all right to publish this other information.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very instructive and illuminating discussion, and I think it deserves a better audience. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. RUCKER.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were 7 ayes and 84 noes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is not a quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

R. 10358 and finding itself without a quorum, under the rule had caused the roll to be called, and 295 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he presented a list of the absentees to the House.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. When the point of order was made the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] had the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 105, line 22, strike out the figures "$90,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$120,000."

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, a short time ago the committee saw fit to retain in the bill the provision for limiting the number of employees in the Bureau of Pensions, and to say that in vacancies occurring but 25 per cent should be appointed to fill the places vacated. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] offered an amendment to do away with that practice and to continue in the Bureau of Pensions a sufficient force to deal with the work done there. It was my privilege to read a letter at that time from the Bureau of Pensions, signed by the deputy commissioner, in which he very clearly set forth that one of the reasons why the work of the bureau was behind was on account of this system or practice that had been incorporated into law by the House three or four years ago. That is past history, however. I happen to be speaking just now to a greater number of men than were present in the Chamber a little while ago, and I am dealing with a related proposition. My amendment now is to increase the appropriation for the field force from $90,000 to $120,000, and I calculate that the increase of $30,000 will provide about 20 extra men in the field. With that force we will do away with the revolting spectacle of worthy pensioners, both men and women, seeking what is theirs by right and frequently dying before relief is given to them by the Pension Bureau.

There is no question about it that men and women frequently die before these investigating men, who are charged with many and various duties, get around to their cases; and so we have the spectacle of the United States Government enacting a law asking people to submit their claims to the Pension Bureau in time, being told either directly or indirectly through their Congressmen, "Your case has been referred to a special investigator, and when he gets time your case will be taken up." Generally speaking, these people are very old; they are practically verging on the grave, waiting for the final summons, and in many instances, as I have said, by the time the investigator gets around there is crêpe handing on the door. It amounts to this, that we want to put into the field a sufficient number of men so that there will not elapse, as there did elapse in a case in which I was personally interested not very long ago, one full year before the matter was disposed of. It is not the fault of the Bureau of Pensions; it is no fault of the Pension Commissioner; it is no fault of the force there. It is the fault of the picayune policy of Congress. I wish to protest against that picayune policy. These veterans may not have the same potential power now; they do not have so many votes perhaps, but their cause is just as sacred as ever [applause], and they are just as worthy of pensions as ever, and we should embrace this opportunity of providing a sufficient number of men to go out and do their work, not alone efficiently but promptly, in behalf of worthy men and women. [Applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] will be adopted. Undoubtedly the work of the Pension Bureau is in arrears. The whole issue is whether responsibility should be placed upon the officials of the Pension Bureau or upon the Members of this House for failure to provide sufficient funds. I take it from the statement made by the gentleman from Rhode Island that the responsibility rests with the committee and with Congress. If that be true, then there is no question but that we should do something to relieve the situation. The gentleman from Rhode Island cites a case in his district where more than a year elapsed between the filing of the claim and the granting of the pension. I have had a great number of cases in my district where more than a year elapsed before the cases of widows of Civil War veterans could be adjudicated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman understand the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island to permit the employing of extra help down there?

Mr. KEATING. I understood his amendment is to increase the force in the field.

Mr. WALSH. It does not increase the force in the field; it simply increases the amount of per diem for subsistence.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad to hear the gentleman express the views he has expressed, but I feel that I should say to him that the Committee on Appropriations determined that the Pension Office shall not have an adequate force.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to reflect upon the Committee on Appropriations, and I hesitate to believe that the committee would deprive the Pension Office of a sufficient force. But on this point there can be no doubt—the Pension Bureau is months and almost years behind its work. I can secure from the files of my office many, many letters from widows who filed their claims more than a year ago, and those claims have not been adjudicated. Many of these women are well known in the communities where they live, and there is no question about their right to a pension. I contend that these claims should be taken up and disposed of speedily.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KEATING. Yes.
Mr. SANFORD. Does the gentleman think the Pension Bureau ought to consider a widow's claim out of its order because of the fact that it has an inquiry from a Member of Congress respecting it?
Mr. KEATING. I hope the Pension Bureau will give some consideration to inquiries from Members of Congress. I have written some myself.
Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman kindly answer my particular question? We had here this morning a statement that there were some 60,000 letters received from Congressmen during the last year. It occurs to me that that alone would disrupt the Pension Bureau. Does the gentleman think that the Pension Bureau ought to consider a widow's claim out of its order because of the fact that a Member of Congress has inquired about it?
Mr. KEATING. No; unless the Member of Congress submits some good reason why it should do so. I think Members of Congress should be treated like other citizens of the United States.
Mr. SANFORD. I agree with the gentleman.
Mr. KEATING. I can not believe that the letters written by Members of Congress have disrupted the Pension Bureau, and I sumbit it is up to the present Committee on Appropriations to prove that the present management of the Pension Office is inefficient or to grant a sufficient force to transact the business of that office.
Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KEATING. Yes.
Mr. FIELDS. Is it not fair to assume that a large per cent, probably one-half, of those 60,000 letters that have gone to the bureau are inquiries about undue delays?
Mr. KEATING. I think that is true to a great extent. It has been my own experience.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to say that I was misinformed. I asked the Clerk a little while ago, and my hurried reading of the paragraph led me to believe that the amendment would be applicable. I find that it is not. It merely provides for a per diem, and of course it would involve the offering of an amendment to the force in question. Now, there is in the bill no specific number of field men mentioned, and it would involve a study of the preceding paragraph on page 104 to work out the number who are available for this work.
Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me there?
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do.
Mr. LANGLEY. I was employed for a good many years in that bureau and know something about its work. As I understand it, the gentleman's amendment proposes to increase the allowance for per diem for the field men.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. What I desired to do was to increase the number of men.
Mr. LANGLEY. Well, the gentleman can accomplish that in effect by the amendment he is proposing. It would have that effect because they could detail, if they had a larger lump sum to pay this per diem, a larger number of clerks for the field work, and thus expedite it. If that is the purpose of the amendment it is all right.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. If it can be done, if the appropriation of $120,000 instead of $90,000 could be used for increasing the number of men upon field work, then I leave my amendment stand as it is and allow it to be answered by the chairman of the subcommittee.
Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will.
Mr. WALSH. If it does what the gentleman from Kentucky suggests, the gentleman from Rhode Island and the gentleman from Kentucky would have to wait more than 10 days to get an answer to their letters if they are going to detail a lot of their present clerks on field work.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I am willing to wait for answers to letters; but I want those people who put in definite, legitimate claims——
Mr. WALSH. The gentlemen were criticizing the bureau for not answering letters.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I did not critieize the bureau; I am criticizing Congress.
Mr. LANGLEY. No; it was not my intention, either, to criticize the bureau. I was merely showing that it is not up with its work, and that therefore its force should not be depleted now.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Colorado had been here during the discussion upon the preceding paragraph he would have heard read a letter from the chief clerk of the Pension Bureau, in which he stated that notwithstanding the fact that his force had been depleted 100 in number from what it was a year ago, on account of resignations of members of the force going into the military and other service, that by putting in better methods and cutting out, as he expressed it, the red tape, the bureau was keeping the regular work current. As to this particular amendment the gentleman from Rhode Island has offered, the amendment increases this appropriation from $90,000 to $120,000 for per diem in lieu of subsistence, for the men in the field who make examinations of these pension claims. They have 52 men now detailed for that particular purpose. The Pension Bureau has not asked for a single increase in the number now detailed, and if this committee undertakes to vote this increased appropriation, you are voting for something the Pension Bureau has not asked and does not desire. Now, as a matter of fact, the committee raised this appropriation from $80,000 to $90,000. It gave them an increase of $10,000, and in addition to that allowed an increase of the per diem from $3 to $4 per day. So I repeat, gentlemen, that certainly in this day and in this time, when we are taxing the people as we are and when our Government is being put to an expense never before known in its history, we ought not to increase this appropriation $30,000 when the Commissioner of Pensions himself has not asked us to do it and does not expect it. I hope the amendment will be voted down.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The gentleman, I presume, will not question the correctness of the letter which I read to the committee a little while ago, in which the deputy commissioner states as follows——
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yielded to a question. I did not yield for an argument.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. This is my question. Now, I want to ask the gentleman this question. The deputy commissioner said this:

I beg to say, further, that the difficulties under which the bureau is laboring could be entirely removed if the 25 per cent limitation clause inserted in the appropriation act, and with relation to the Pension Bureau alone, were eliminated.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That has no application to this amendment.
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Let me read:

This would permit the appointment of such clerical help as is needed to keep the work more nearly current and to obviate those conditions which result from a restriction preventing the most effective adjustment of the force employed in the bureau to the labors to be performed in administering pension laws now in existence or which may hereafter be enacted.
Very truly, yours—

And so forth.
Mr BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, the gentleman asks you to increase this appropriation $30,000 in order to further decrease that clerical force and send it into the field, when the Commissioner of Pensions has not asked for it and does not say it is necessary.
Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield, if I have time.
Mr. TOWNER. Very reluctantly, evidently.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, not at all; I will gladly yield to the gentleman, as I always do.
Mr. TOWNER. I notice that the estimate of the department, which the gentleman says was not increased, is $101,600. Upon what ground does the gentleman tell the committee that he has increased the appropriation rather than diminished it?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why, the appropriation for the current year is $80,000——
Mr. TOWNER. Yes.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And we have increased it to $90,000.
Mr. TOWNER. I understood the gentleman to say you increased the estimate——
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; we never increase estimates, I will say to the gentleman. We never allow to a department more than is asked, because it has been my observation and experience that a department never asks for a less sum than is actually needed and very frequently asks for a great deal more.
Mr. TOWNER. Why does the gentleman and the committee reduce the estimates of the department in this case? Ought they not to have at least made the amount what was estimated for, $101,600, instead of $90,000?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The committee, I will say to the gentleman, allowed $10,000 increase, making $90,000. The committee felt, not being asked for additional examiners in the field, that the bureau could get along and take care of the extra increase of per diem with this $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office: Commissioner, $5,000; first assistant commissioner, $4,500; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk (who shall be qualified to act as principal examiners), $3,000; 5 law examiners, at $2,750 each; examiner of classification, $3,600; 5 examiners in chief, at $3,500 each; 2 examiners of interferences, at $2,700 each; examiners of trade-marks and designs—1 $2,700, first assistant $2,400, 6 assistants at $1,500 each; examiners—45 principals at $2,700 each, 90 first assistants at $2,400 each, 90 second assistants at $2,100 each, 90 third assistants at $1,800 each, 90 fourth assistants at $1,500 each; financial clerk, who shall give bond in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,250; librarian, who shall be qualified to act as an assistant examiner, $2,000; 6 chiefs of divisions, at $2,000 each; 3 assistant chiefs of divisions, at $1,800 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the commissioner, $1,800; translator of languages, $1,800; clerks—9 of class 4, 9 of class 3, 17 of class 2, 135 of class 1, 91 at $1,000 each; 3 skilled draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 4 draftsmen, at $1,000 each; 90 copyists; 40 copyists, at $720 each; 3 messengers (one transferred to building for Interior Department offices); 33 assistant messengers (two transferred to building for Interior Department offices); 13 laborers, at $600 each (four transferred to building for Interior Department offices); 45 examiners' aids, at $600 each; 24 copy pullers, at $480 each, who shall be selected without regard to apportionment; in all, $1,416,500.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I shall not ask the committee to return to the item on page 101, which provides for the force of the General Land Office, but I shall beg the indulgence of the committee to discuss that item for a few moments. I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber late Saturday afternoon when this item was reached, and therefore unable to discuss it at that time. I should not, however, have offered an amendment had I been here, as I realize that the committee would not accept without further consideration such an amendment as should be offered. But I do hope that if in the Senate this item shall be considerably modified, the number of clerks considerably increased, and the appropriation increased, the conferees representing the House will see their way clear to approve the increases which will be asked for.

The General Land Office is one of the old-established institutions of the Government. It has been growing for three-quarters of a century and more, and in the main the salaries paid in that office have not been much increased in more than 50 years. The result is that men in that office, having exceedingly important questions to pass upon, aggregating in the course of the year property values of hundreds of millions of dollars, receive salaries much lower than those paid to officials in other and newer bureaus of the Government whose duties are very much less onerous, trying, responsible, and important than those of the law clerks and law examiners of the Land Office.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, one of the most efficient of all of our public servants, has for the past two years been endeavoring to secure an increase in the force of his office and some increases in the salaries of some of the officials of his bureau. He himself should receive an increase of at least a thousand dollars a year, but has not asked for it. I realize that the subcommittee having to do with all of the multiplied affairs of the Government, in all the executive departments provided for in this bill, can not be fully informed as to the needs of any one, much less all, of the bureaus of the Government.

I am, therefore, not criticizing the members of the committee or the subcommittee because the increase in clerks and the increases in salaries that the commissioner asked for have not been granted. I do, however, believe a careful consideration of the arguments made by the commissioner and all the facts he presented would have fully justified the committee in granting practically all he asked.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office asked for 26 additional clerks, with salaries of from $1,000 to $1,600, and amounting in the aggregate to $32,400. In addition to this, he asked certain increases of from $100 to $500 in the salaries of some of the law clerks and examiners in his office. Had all the increases in clerical force and all the increases in salaries requested been granted, my opinion is that the commissioner would still be likely to be short of the necessary force to keep current the people's business coming before that office. Had he been granted the increases in salaries, those increases would not have brought the salaries of the men who would have been the beneficiaries of the increases as high as the salaries of men occupying corresponding positions in new bureaus by several hundred dollars per annum in any one case.

The commissioner made a very strong case before the committee I thought. I can see that the members of the subcommittee might not have realized the force of all the statements made, lacking, as they necessarily are, complete familiarity with the workings of the bureau. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is a very modest man——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. And while he stated his case clearly, possibly he did not state it with the vigor and vehemence that other gentlemen might, and therefore possibly the necessity and importance of these increases did not occur to the subcommittee. This is a part of what the commissioner said. The chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, asked the commissioner as to the condition and progress of work in his office, to which Mr. Tallman replied:

It is not in such good condition as it was a year ago.
Mr. BYRNS How is it in volume as compared with a year ago?
Mr. TALLMAN. The volume of business has increased.
Mr. BYRNS. You mean without taking into consideration the work in connection with the stock-raising homestead act?
Mr. TALLMAN. Yes; without taking that into consideration.

Then the commissioner went on to state the various causes for the increase of the work in his bureau. I shall not take the time to read two paragraphs in which he summed up in the main the important classes of work requiring additional help in the office. They appeal strongly to anyone familiar with public-land matters, and all of those from the West who know about these classes of increased business realize how they have been growing in the work of the office and how important they are. It might have been thought by some that the discussion held a few moments ago with regard to the working force of a certain office was from the standpoint of the interest of the clerks. I certainly have no such purpose of serving any individual's interest in what I am saying in regard to the Land Office. I am thinking only of the people's business—the people's business, which is efficiently handled in this bureau of the Government. No Member from the West has any special favors to ask of the General Land Office.

We simply desire to have the Land Office furnished with sufficient force, paid proper salaries, to secure that speedy, careful, faithful attention to the public business which is necessary. The commissioner made it very clear how a half dozen new pieces of legislation and a Supreme Court decision had very greatly increased the business of his office in the last year, without taking into consideration the new stock-raising homestead act. Now, how about that act? Here is what the commissioner said about it:

Now, the stock-raising homestead act is quite far-reaching; in fact, it is developing into the most important land legislation we have had for a good many years. I kept figures on it up to a few weeks ago, at which time there had been a fotal of over 60,000 entries, covering a gross area of some 24,000,000 acres. Now, that is 8,000,000 acres more than the total business of the year before in the shape of new business. I estimated for 26 clerks in the deficiency bill, thinking we would need them immediately. Fortunately we have not needed them so badly and will not until the appropriation we have under consideration comes into effect, for the reason that the entries under this stock-raising homestead act are not allowed until the land is designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

So, while we have gotten along, as it happens, fairly well without those 26 additional clerks, we will need all of them, and probably many more, to handle that business. I think 26 additional clerks will be sufficient to take up the work for the year and see how it turns out, and ascertain where we stand after working on it for a time.

The commissioner stated that very modestly. As a matter of fact, the business under the stock-raising homestead act alone in the year for which the appropriation in this bill provides will require a large additional force.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the committee will indulge me for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Of the 26 clerks which the commissioner asked for, the committee allowed 8, a little less than one-third; 4 at $1,200 and 4 at $1,000. I am somewhat familiar with the business of the General Land Office, as every man from a Western land State is, and after careful inquiry and investigation I am of the opinion that every one of these 26 clerks is needed, needed badly, imperatively, if the public business is to be kept anything like current, if the business of the people is to be properly cared for.

One gentleman with whom I discussed this matter suggested that the war would make some difference in the Land Office business. That is true; but it makes this difference, that in the case of many classes of entries the war will greatly increase the business. Here is what the commissioner said of some of the classes of increases. There are others, some of them growing out of the war:

Mr. TALLMAN. One thing is the very large demand for certified copies of documents and the consequent necessity for searching and examining old records; another cause is new legislation, adding new forms of public-land business; and aside from that it is simply the current demand for public lands. You understand, the final proofs on entries made three and four years ago are just now coming in. The decision of the Supreme Court in what is known as the Deseret case released some 2,000,000 acres of suspended State indemnity selections for immediate adjudication. Much business has resulted from the building of the Alaska Railroad, particularly with respect to railroad town sites. Under the act of March 4, 1915, for the relief of desert-land entrymen, we have taken action on over 5,000 cases since the law was passed. The oil-land controversy, including the administration of contracts under the act of August 25, 1914, has required continuous attention by a considerable number of employees both in the office and in the field. The so-called "surface" acts, such as that of July 17, 1914, add complications to the matter of adjudication. Moreover, as a result of changed laws and policies and numerous withdrawals and restorations, it requires nearly double the work to adjudicate claims, as compared with some years ago. For example, irrigation under the desert act is now mostly by means of large projects; we examined and passed on 130 detailed engineers' reports of our field service on such projects last year. Our original entries, new business, shown in my annual report for last year—that is, for the year ending June 30, 1917—was over 16,000,000 acres of land entries, up to the average for recent years. That does not include any of the stock-raising business, you understand.

Mr. EVANS. That is due fundamentally to the desire of the people to acquire land?

Mr. TALLMAN. I should say so.

Mr. EVANS. And there is more contest work?

Mr. TALLMAN. Yes, sir. The contest work has increased a little lately. It fell off a little during the last two or three years. It is running now in round numbers a little over 5,000 contests from which, in round numbers, 4,000 are cases of default or failure to prosecute or to appeal. For instance, in the oil business in California we have records come to us of hundreds of pages. Those cases involve literally millions of dollars. The same thing is occurring in the Wyoming oil cases. For instance, we had to handle this year and are handling now the Oregon-California land grant. There are 2,300,000 acres which we have to classify. The results of the field examinations all have to come to our office to be fully assembled, examined, and platted. To do that we had to take the Oregon-California land grant and examine every tract of land that the railroad had ever received or could receive within the grant limits and ascertain from that every acre that the railroad might be entitled to, so as to close that grant. The amount of detail work on a proposition of that kind is very large. It keeps several people working on it all the time. Now, we are getting that classification under way. By next spring we have to furnish the public information as to what was shown by that classification and examination and open those lands to entry. At the same time we have got to prepare schedules showing our cruises of all the timber we have to dispose of and conduct the sales. All of that work has to be done in our office. Under many acts we have to do much original work in the nature of working out the governmental policy. For instance, Congress recently passed a law, the potash-leasing bill, with which you are familiar. It was a very general bill and gave the department very large authority. It is necessary to work out that whole scheme of procedure practically and to consider all of the technical and legal propositions that arise in connection with working out that plan. The same was true as to the leasing of Alaska coal lands.

The war, instead of decreasing the business in the General Land Office, has very considerably increased it; and, in addition to that, very few days pass without some new land legislation, all of which lays a new burden and an additional requirement on the General Land Office. As the public-land area decreases the amount of work connected with entries increases, for we are multiplying the classes of entries, we are constantly making new requirements in regard to almost all classes of entries, we are scrutinizing all classes of entries more carefully than in the past.

This public-land service is one of the most valuable under the flag. It is a service rendered to the pioneers who are developing the undeveloped resources of the country, making two blades of grass grow where one or none grew before, opening rich veins and fountains of mineral wealth, bringing fructifying waters from the mountain streams over the arid wastes, and making them blossom as the rose.

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. MONDELL. The public-land service is a service which has aided in creating great Commonwealths amid the mountains and on the desert plains, vastly increasing the wealth of the Nation, and establishing new and flourishing communities in the glorious and golden West. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I rose some little time ago to ask the gentleman to yield, but I was so charmed by his eloquence that I could not prefer the request. The gentleman is an expert upon this particular sort of legislation and probably the best-posted man in the House upon public-land matters.

Mr. MONDELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is any scheme or plan which is in operation or which may be put in operation whereby these public lands will at some time or other be turned over to the various States, for them to assume the burden of jurisdiction over them, and thus relieve the General Government of this supervision, which has been exercised for many years?

Mr. MONDELL. The plan and purpose of State ownership has been suggested and promoted at one time and another, but never very successfully.

The western people have never been a unit on the matter, and Congress has never shown any considerable disposition to enact the legislation. There are many people in the West who would be willing to assume the burden.

Mr. WALSH. There is no existing law for it?

Mr. MONDELL. There is not.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, as a new paragraph, to be inserted at the end of line 6 on page 107.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RUCKER offers the following amendment: Insert as a new paragraph, following line 6 on page 107, the following:

"Appointment shall not be made to any of the positions herein appropriated for in the classified service of the Patent Office not actually filled June 30, 1918, nor shall more than 25 per cent of other vacancies actually occurring in any grade in the classified service of that bureau, during the fiscal year 1919, be filled by original appointment or promotion. The salaries or compensation of all places which may not be filled as hereinabove provided for shall not be available for expenditure, but shall lapse and shall be covered into the Treasury. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any position with a salary of $2,250 or above that sum."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, or I will reserve it if the gentleman desires me to——

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, let the gentleman make his point of order. I am not asking any favors.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. RUCKER. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That it is legislation, and that it can not come under the Holman rule, which retrenches expenditures. There are no vacancies in the Patent Office, such as exist in the Pension Bureau, and therefore it is an entirely different proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is identical in language with a paragraph found in the bill in another place. If it should be adopted, and there should be three deaths of clerks in the Patent Office, would there not be a saving of money, because it would save three clerks, and one could not be appointed until there were four vacancies? You would have to kill four before one could be appointed. This is the same point that was before the Chair a day or two ago and, I think, the same identical question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will note in that case the Chair particularly inquired, before ruling, whether there were any existing vacancies, and the answer was that there were existing vacancies.

Mr. RUCKER. That answer did not come from me.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it came from the chairman of the committee, based upon the evidence submitted to the committee. The vacancies, as the Chair understood, were of record, and undisputed. The Chair will further call attention to the fact that the amendment proposed presents an entirely different situation from the one heretofore ruled upon. It may be very likely, indeed highly probable, in the light of experience that there will be vacancies during the time to which the amendment relates. But that is a purely speculative proposition. In the case referred to there were actual existing vacancies which could not be filled, provided the paragraph remained in the bill. The retention of that paragraph kept those vacancies from being filled, and that result was, in effect, a reduction of existing employees of the Government, and of official salaries. That reduction brought the paragraph within the benefit of the Holman rule. But the case in hand, is as stated, a speculative proposition. There may be vacancies hereafter arising. It is highly probable that these vacancies will occur, but that is as far as we can go. The Chair can not say, that there is a moral certainty that these vacancies will take place, and unless it is a moral certainty that they will occur, thereby taking that occurrence out of the domain of speculation, the amendment proposed will not operate ex proprio vigore, to reduce expenditures. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules let me say that I am not advised, and therefore will not make a statement to the Chair, with reference to whether there are vacancies there or not. Before we reach another bureau I think I will have the opportunity to find out, and then I will offer this amendment again. For the present I withdraw the amendment, and I move now to amend, on page 107, line 4, by striking out "$600" and inserting "$750."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to withdraw the amendment which was read?

Mr. RUCKER. I have tried to withdraw it; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment by Mr. RUCKER: Page 107, line 4, strike out "$600" and insert "$750."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am not going to trespass upon the time of this committee and therefore will not ask any extension of time. It might be objectionable to some gentlemen to grant me an extension. I do not want to be interrupted during the few minutes I shall occupy the floor.

Mr. Chairman, there was a time when I was not much in favor of the amendment that has just been offered, and which, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, was not allowed to be acted upon. Really I had no confidence in its wisdom until recently. I have been converted to the idea that perhaps the limitation upon the appropriations for the Pension Bureau may have some merit. My good friend, the genial gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], I am sure by his solemn and impressive manner impressed upon the minds of the occupants of the galleries that he enjoys some ministerial connection; and I am sure everyone was impressed when they heard the deep pathos of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who pleaded his devotion to the soldier whose affairs are attended to in the Pension Bureau; and then the gallant, distinguished, and oratorical gentleman who talked with vim and vigor and almost ferocious eloquence. I am sure he and they succeeded in convincing this committee that the very wise provision they wrote into this bill ought by right to remain in the bill, because the Committee of the Whole voted down my amendment to strike it out. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was not willing to let the committee express its judgment on the propriety of making the same identical limitation apply to other Government bureaus. His very actions, to my mind, condemns the language, and I fully understand why he does not want to thus hamper and cripple other bureaus. But I offered, gentlemen, at the end of another paragraph, their own language, language which they incubated upon, if that is the proper word. [Laughter.] I withdraw it. No; it was hatched by the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency and given to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I know the gentleman does not want to do any injustice to the committee nor to the Bureau of Efficiency. I will say, as I have said before, that the Bureau of Efficiency had absolutely nothing to do with suggesting, preparing, or even intimating this provision.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not want to be interrupted very long or very often by the gentleman because he can get more time than I can.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that it is a singular circumstance that when I pleaded with the gentleman in the most pathetic language I could command to tell us if there was a single other bureau in the Government that is handicapped like this, and although I called his attention to it again while he was on the floor, he refused to answer. I appealed to the gentleman from Iowa, and he promptly denied me the courtesy of a reply and refused to answer. I applied to the loquacious gentleman from Wisconsin who always has an answer for everything and for every one, whether right or wrong—most of the time wrong—and he was so busy talking about something else that he said he could not yield in five minutes, though he knew that he had plenty of time and could get plenty more if he desired it. [Laughter.] These gentlemen could not answer the question without betraying conditions for which this House would not stand. If I had them before an ordinary jury and could compel responses, I think I could develop some facts which would not justify the action of which I complain.

Now, gentlemen, I ask you, in the light of all that has been said, why should not this limitation be placed upon the appropriations for every bureau of the Government if it is placed against one? I seriously doubt if the policy that has been pursued is a wise policy. We are allowing gentlemen who have grasping dispositions to usurp too much power in the House; and when you undertake to bring people in here to outvote them, the gentlemen resort to all sorts of tactics, even to calling for tellers, in order to make delay in the transaction of the public business; and the gentleman from Iowa seems to have locomotor ataxia and can not walk at all. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 107, line 5, after the word "each," strike out the words "who shall be selected without regard to apportionment."

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment for the purpose of eliciting from the chairman of the committee the reason for this singular provision in the bill that takes out of the classified service the apportionment between the States of 959 employees drawing salaries annually of $1,416,500. Why is it that they are not to be apportioned among the various States like other employees of the Government?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will read the paragraph, he will notice that the language applies only to 24 copy pullers, at $480 each.

Mr. ROBBINS. The paragraph does not limit it to that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ROBBINS. How do you make it appear that way? If that is true, I do not wish to urge my amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will observe the punctuation, he will readily see that it applies only to 24 copy pullers.

Mr. ROBBINS. The paragraph is divided by semicolons all the way through, and that limitation does not apply only to the last four employees, to wit, the copy pullers.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will notice the semicolon, and then follows this language: "Twenty-four copy pullers, at $480 each, who shall be selected without regard to apportionment; in all, $1,416,500." I think if the gentleman will examine it closely, he must come to the conclusion that the language to which he objects applies only to the 24 copy pullers. I will say that that was put in upon the request and insistence of the Commissioner of Patents, who said that these copy pullers are boys and that it is impossible to get boys to come here from the States and accept a position at $480. For that reason he asked that the apportionment be waived with reference to these 24 boys, known as copy pullers, so that he could get them in the District of Columbia. The committee felt that under the circumstances the request ought to be granted.

Mr. ROBBINS. To clarify it you ought to insert "which last-mentioned employees shall be selected without regard to apportionment."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there is the slightest trouble about the paragraph as it reads; that would simply encumber the bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. There ought to be cleared up now what is ambiguous. You begin at the bottom of page 106, and each class of these employees is set off by a semicolon. It runs right along and there are 45 "examiners' aids," at $600 each; and then "24 copy pullers, at $480 each, who shall be selected without regard to apportionment; in all, $1,416,500."

Where is the limitation that fixes it, so that all of these employees enumerated in this section will not be entitled to be relieved of the restriction of "apportionment" now applied under the civil-service law to these employees?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I just tried to explain to the gentleman that it is contained within those semicolons.

Mr. ROBBINS. I do not so understand it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a very profound intellectual controversy going on here about the construction of this legislation, and I think we ought to have the help of more Members. I therefore make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. RUCKER to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 13, noes 47.

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote discloses the lack of a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum, had directed the roll to be called, when 289 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in the names of the absentees for publication in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 107, line 4, after the word "pullers," strike out "at $480 each" and insert after the word "apportionment," in line 5, the words "at $480 each."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of building for the Civil Service Commission, $16,875.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry. Why is the Civil Service Commission in this item in the bill? Do they not occupy a building that is constructed by the Government?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; they do not. They have a five-year lease of a building they occupy on F Street, and this is the contract price.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in regard to the item in line 17, page 118. What is the pay the 58 charwomen get in salary?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They get $240 a year, the customary salary.

Mr. LOBECK. Two hundred and forty dollars a year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Two hundred and forty dollars a year, $20 a month. That is the statutory salary paid to charwomen.

Mr. LOBECK. Oh, no; they are paying in the Treasury Department more than that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What is that?

Mr. LOBECK. They are paying more in the Treasury Department. The custodians of these same buildings are paying more money than that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Only in case where they are working all day, but not where they are working as these do from two not to exceed three hours in the evening or early in the morning in cleaning up the rooms.

Mr. LOBECK. Does the gentleman mean to say they only work two or three hours?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is about all; about two or three hours; just as the charwomen in the House Office Building do, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. LOBECK. But where they are working four or five hours they are getting more pay than that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand these women work two or three hours a day.

Mr. LOBECK. Well, the women in the Federal buildings under the direction of the Treasury Department, also in the Post Office Buildings are getting at the present time $25 a month. In New York City they are getting $325 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOBECK. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. For how many hours a day do they work?

Mr. LOBECK. They are supposed to work between four and five hours.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, even those in this instance where they are apparently receiving a higher compensation are not receiving proportionately as much as we are paying them here in the District. The testimony in the hearings of various chief clerks of whom we have asked, and we have asked several chief clerks, who have charge usually of the employment of these charwomen, that the time of the employment was usually two or three hours, rarely three, generally two to two and a half hours on the average.

Mr. LOBECK. I looked over the hearings, and I did not find anything in the hearings bearing on the subject.

I find in the payment of salaries of laborers in the Post Office Department they are paid $70 a month. In the Treasury Department they are paying $50 to $55 for the same service—that is, this Government is—we are paying for the women who are acting as charwomen in the Treasury Department in the same building, doing the same kind of work, and working the same hours as in the Post Office Department at the rate of $25 a month. There is a bill now before Congress to increase that pay to $35 a month for the women, instead of $25. I think $20 a month is too small a wage, and if it were proper to add an amendment—although I am afraid it would go out on the point of order—to increase the wages, I would do so; but I think it is wrong to pay these women—I do not care whether they work two or three hours in a day mopping the floors and cleaning up—only $20 per month, and most of these people have to pay car fare.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Are these women who get this small compensation for the two or three hours' work employed in any other department so that they work continuously all day long?

Mr. LOBECK. I do not think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are instances, if the gentleman will permit, where charwomen employed in one department in the early morning are employed at another department late in the evening or in the early evening hours.

Mr. HICKS. It practically makes continuous labor?

Mr. STAFFORD. The testimony is that most of this labor is performed by women who are heads of families. They go to the departments in the early hours and return home in time to arrange matters in the home, the cooking and the like.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOBECK. Do they not return in the evening and finish the work they started in the morning?

Mr. STAFFORD. The testimony is that these women either come in the early morning or in the afternoon. If they perform service during the entire day of six hours, their compensation as fixed in this bill is $480, which is double that for the two and three hour period, for which we pay them $240.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman from Nebraska permit me to interrogate the gentleman from Wisconsin in his time?

Mr. LOBECK. I will.

Mr. HICKS. Do I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to say that these women have practically continuous service throughout the day?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. So far as I have been able to glean from the testimony, they are employed only once a day for two or three hours and then return home and perform their duties there. There are instances, however, where some charwomen are employed in two different departments, in two different shifts, for which they receive double the salary, or $480.

Mr. HICKS. That is, for two shifts?

Mr. LOBECK. Do they receive pay in one department first and then in another?

Mr. STAFFORD. Exactly.

Mr. LOBECK. I have looked for the testimony in the hearings, but was not able to find it. I am glad to get the information.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would permit me to state my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this section because there are two or three items in it that are raises of salary. Of course, this committee had originally no jurisdiction to legislate, but they have done so. But the question of jurisdiction was not made. But under the rules they can not legislate in an appropriation bill. I think the point of order can be well sustained to the words "$3,000," on line 18, page 117, and on two or three smaller items that I do not care to make the point of order on.

Now, the increase here is very small, and it might have gone by unnoticed, but I desire to direct the attention of the House to the policy that is involved in this matter. This committee can not legislate. It ought not to undertake to raise salaries in this bill. It has no power to do that. But I realize, further, the fact that the Committee on Appropriations itself is not so much to blame when the representatives of the Post Office Department go before it and seek an increase of the salaries of officers in that department.

Now, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has authority, and it is the only committee that has, to legislate for that department. It legislates not only for the Postal Service but for the departmental service, and while it is true that this committee may appropriate for departmental service but not for the Postal Service, yet it must appropriate in accordance with existing law. The representatives, as I said, of the Post Office Department go to the committee and ask for these increases, however.

They ought to go to the committee that is provided by law to determine them, and if they go there and do not get them they ought not to circumvent the jurisdiction of the committee that has control of legislation in reference to the Post Office Department by bringing the question again—or for the first time, as it may be—before the Appropriations Committee, and the Appropriations Committee ought not to submit to such a request. It puts the Post Office Department in bad attitude in reference to legislation, both as to the two committees and as to the House, and it ought to be rebuked. And while I do not know the officer who is getting a little increase of $250, and while that may not amount to very much, and it may be that it is due him, the place for him to get that increase under the law, if he is entitled to it, is before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in my judgment. Therefore I make the point of order on the words that I have read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the point of order which I understand the gentleman to make is directed to an increase of salary of the assistant solicitor from $2,750 to $3,000. The point of order is unquestionably good. I am very glad indeed to know that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has had a change of heart in regard to legislation on appropriation bills, for I think if the record is investigated it will be found that a year ago when the Post Office appropriation bill was presented to this Congress, coming from his committee and under his charge, it contained more legislation upon an appropriation bill than any other appropriation bill that has been introduced in this House since I have been a Member of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, in justice to the committee: The Postmaster General has been making a reorganization of his department ever since he has been Postmaster General. He has done that with the result of reducing the number of employees in his department by 189 persons, drawing salaries aggregating $174,360. In other words, the Postmaster General——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will excuse me, I will make this statement.

Mr. RUCKER. I will excuse you.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In other words, the action of the Postmaster General along this line has resulted in the saving in that one department alone of $174,360 every year.

Now, the pending bill, Mr. Chairman, under the recommendation and the estimate submitted by the Postmaster General, reduces the number of employees in that department by 37, their aggregate salaries amounting to $28,120.

Now, the Postmaster General came before the committee with that sort of a record and that sort of a statement, and the statement was made that this assistant solicitor had increased work, and that he acted as solicitor in the absence of the chief solicitor. In addition to that, it was shown that even before the war started there was a considerable natural growth in the volume and importance of the work of the legal officer for the Post Office Department, on account of the necessity for considering cases relating to lotteries and the misuse of the mails in the furtherance of schemes to defraud the public. Since the war, added responsibilities have been imposed upon the office of the solicitor, involving the administration of certain provisions of the espionage and trading with the enemy acts. This particular assistant attorney is doing a great deal of that work.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is well taken, but this increase is well deserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] makes the point of——

Mr. MOON. One moment, Mr. Chairman, there is another point of order to be made here. We have not done with this yet. On page 118, line 1, are the words "telegrapher, $1,500."

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reply to my friend from Tennessee, I want to say this: Suppose it were true that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads did bring in a bill that had an immense amount of legislation on it. That is no justification for this action. That is begging the question. But the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, when it brought a bill into this House, has had the candor to say to this House, "This is new legislation and is subject to a point of order," at the beginning or else it has asked, in accordance with the rule, for a special rule to make it in order.

The gentleman says there has been great economy effected. Suppose there has been. The gentleman does not insist for a moment that the raising of salaries above what they were in any way contributed to that economy. That was the work of the department, without any intervention on the part of the Committee on Appropriations. The objection I make—and it is one that I think the House ought to well consider—is that these department officials, when they can not get what they want before the proper committee, have no right to go to another committee. They might in this instance just as well have gone to the Committee on Labor or to the Committee on Acoustics as to have gone to this committee. It is a bad practice and we ought to have a rule in this House, if I may be permitted to say it, that will require some respect to be paid to the judgment of this House and its constituted committees.

I am not speaking of the Post Office Department especially, but the practice of all these departments is that when they can not get what they want in one place—in the House—they go to another place, and if they can not get it in the House, they go to the Senate and get it from friendly conferees, finally, and the judgment of this House is thus overridden. There ought to be some rule in this House to protect us in legislation, and it is no part of the functions of this committee to participate in the usurpation of power and authority that belongs to another committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to this particular item for a telegrapher at $1,500, the salary heretofore was $1,400. It is proper, perhaps, to raise it to $1,500. I do not know. If the gentleman insists upon it, I will withdraw the point of order if he thinks the whole interests of the Republic rest upon this increase by his committee of $100 to a salary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman wants to make the point of order on this man getting $100 increase, he can make it. The committee unanimously felt that in all justice and fairness he ought to have this slight increase.

Mr. MOON. Well, if the gentleman is defiant about it, I will make the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is sustained. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members answered to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 10358, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 237 Members answered to their names, and he reported the names of the absentees to be printed in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer in line 18, page 117, to insert the figures "$2,750" after the first word "one."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand where that comes in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 117, line 18, after the first word "one," insert "$2,750."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MOON. I reserve a point of order on the amendment for the purpose of asking my colleague if he recollects whether $2,750 is the amount fixed by the general law for this salary, or was that an increase on an appropriation bill over and above the original amount fixed by the general law?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the amount fixed by act of Congress passed March 4, 1915.

Mr. MOON. A general statute?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if that restores the figures of last year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As in the preceding case?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER), there were—ayes 70, noes none.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 118, after the word "telegrapher," in the first line, I move to insert the figures "$1,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 118, line 1, after the word "telegrapher," insert "$1,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In making readjustments hereunder the salary of any clerk in any class may be fixed by the Postmaster General at $100 below the salary fixed by law for such class, and the unused portion of such salary shall be used to increase the salary of any clerk in any class entitled thereto by not less than $100 above the salary fixed by law for such class. The Postmaster General shall assign to the several bureaus, offices, and divisions of the Post Office Department such number of the employees herein authorized as may be necessary to perform the work required therein; and he shall submit a statement showing such assignments and the number employed at the various salaries in the annual Book of Estimates following the estimates for salaries in the Post Office Department.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if that section is not new law, beginning with line 21, on page 18, and ending with the word "class," in line 1, on page 119?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that I think the first sentence of the paragraph is clearly subject to a point of order. It was inserted at the instance of the Postmaster General for the first time in the legislative bill last year, so as to enable the Postmaster General to promote or demote a clerk $100 at a time instead of $200. He made the statement that in some cases a clerk would not be entitled under his efficiency rating to a $200 increase, but he would be entitled to a $100 increase; or in some cases he could make two promotions of $100 each instead of leaving one clerk at his old salary and promoting another clerk, no more competent, $200. For that reason he felt that in justice to the employees of the department he ought to have that authority, and the committee inserted it in the bill last year for the first time. There was no objection made to it at that time.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I think the place for the Postmaster General to go to get laws passed in reference to his department is before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and not to these other committees. I make the point of order on lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, on page 118, and on line 1, on page 119, down to and including the word "class."

The CHAIRMAN. Has the chairman of the committee anything to say on that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office Fourth Assistant Postmaster General: Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500; division of rural mails—superintendent $3,000, chief clerk $2,000; division of equipment and supplies—superintendent $3,000, chief clerk $2,000; topographer, $2,400; in all, $19,900.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "two thousand dollars," line 16, page 120.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will state that that really is a reduction of expenses of this department. There were formerly fixed by statute a division of supplies, with a superintendent at $2,750, and a division of equipment, with a superintendent at $2,750. The statute created two divisions and fixed the salary of the two superintendents at $2,750 each. Under the reorganization the Postmaster General has provided for a division of equipment and supplies, with one superintendent, at $3,000, which is a reduction of one salary and a rise, of course, of $250 to the man who takes both divisions.

Mr. ASHBROOK. And one of the most obliging officials in the Post Office Department, Mr. Ellsworth.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We have been so assured, and in view of the fact that the duties are doubled, looking out for two divisions, the Postmaster General felt that he was entitled to the modest increase of $250, and by that reduction we save $2,500 to the Government.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, by making a reduction of a few dozen other matters they might save $25,000 more. The question is, Is this legislation in this bill? The statute provides $2,750 for the superintendent, and it does not provide for $3,000. This is one separate and distinct proposition, not connected with anything else. There is nothing on the face of this bill to show that there are any dual duties performed. It is simply proposed to raise the salary from $2,750 to $3,000.

Now, I do not care about the amount of salary; that is insignificant. But the idea is that the adjustment of these matters ought to go to the proper committee.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I am persuaded by what the gentleman from Tennessee has said that this really is in the interest of economy. This is one of the most efficient men in the Post Office Department, and if the gentleman had a district like mine, requiring the work that is done there, he would so view it.

Mr. MOON. Where is this gentleman from?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know, he is always there. He is not from anywhere. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. Is he from Missouri?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no; I think he is from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON. I have made the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and if the gentleman insists on it, it is not very material. I wanted to show to the House that legislation of this sort ought not to be encouraged, but in view of the solicitation of the gentleman from Missouri, and in deference to my friend from Tennessee, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We have thus far made so many improvements in the bill that I am thoroughly satisfied with it now. I added some very desirable amendments to it myself and therefore if the gentlemen of the committee do not need my assistance any longer I am going to my office. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How long does the gentleman from Tennessee plan to sit to-night?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, we want to read 8 or 10 more pages. There are no controverted questions and it will only take a very few minutes. If the gentleman will permit us to get down to a point where we can consider the bill in one more day. The gentleman knows that we have not had an opportunity to read any considerable portion of the bill to-day, and I hope the gentleman will bear with us a few minutes longer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That surely has been no fault of this side. The gentleman, I understand, proposes to ask to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow, and it might be well to have the day start in in good humor. Gentlemen have been here all day.

Mr. SHERLEY. These 10 pages will probably be read in 10 minutes. We are not going to get into any controverted matters late to-night.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suggest that they read up to the Department of Justice.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to read as far as the Department of Commerce.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman indicate how long he intends to run?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that if the committee remains in good humor the reading will be completed very soon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Post Office Department: For stationery and blank books, index and guide cards, folders, and binding devices, including purchase of free penalty envelopes, $25,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, there is a typographical error in the spelling of the word "department," in line 19, page 120.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word will be spelled correctly.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle for official use of the Postmaster General to cost not exceeding $4,000; purchase and exchange of a motor truck; maintenance, repair, and operation of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle and of motor trucks, to be used only for official purposes, and garage rent, $7,500.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this to ask the chairman the purpose of the use of this, and if this is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think it is new legislation; I do not think it is subject to a point of order. I will say to the gentleman that the purpose of this paragraph is to authorize the purchase of an automobile for the official use of the Postmaster General. All Cabinet members are now provided with four horses and from two to four carriages, and the committee has made a thorough investigation and has come to the conclusion that it is a matter of economy to have an automobile instead of the horses. These horses cost from $30 to $35 a month each for board, in addition to the stable hire, and the repairs to the carriages, and the cost mounts up. The gentleman will recall that a year ago an automobile was authorized for the Secretary of State, and that automobile was purchased under the same terms provided here for the Postmaster General—and which I may say to the gentleman that has been done for all other Cabinet officials—and the actual facts show, as reported by the chief clerk of the Department of State, that the automobile has cost $1,000 less to the Government during the year than the horses and carriages.

Mr. ROBBINS. Which automobile saved that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The automobile purchased by the Secretary of State.

Mr. ROBBINS. And now it is proposed to purchase one for the Postmaster General for that reason, is it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. And I may say to the gentleman that we have already provided automobiles in this bill for the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior, and those items have been passed without objection.

Mr. WALSH. But they are not all of the time preaching economy.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And I want to say this in justice to the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General stated to the committee, through his chief clerk, that he did not want an automobile. He said that he preferred the use of the carriage and horses. Later on he came to the committee room and stated that he had been informed by another Cabinet officer that it was the opinion of the committee that money could be saved. Then he said, "While my personal preference is for my horses, yet if the committee thinks that it can save one dollar to the Government, give me an automobile and take my horses and carriages from me."

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think by expending $4,000 for an automobile that the Government is going to save money?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no question about the matter of saving, if the gentleman will look into it.

Mr. WALSH. Does it cost $4,000 to keep that span of horses?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Those horses will be sold. Their upkeep will cost much more than the automobile will cost.

Mr. ROBBINS. Who owns the horses and carriages now?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Government owns the horses and carriages. Let me say to the gentleman that it costs from $30 to $35 a month to board each one of those four horses. It cost nearly $2,600 last year to maintain the horses and carriages and expenses incident thereto of the Postmaster General. Does the gentleman think that it will cost $2,600 to maintain an automobile?

Mr. ROBBINS. If it costs $2,600 to maintain the horses, what will it cost to buy gasoline and hire a couple of chauffeurs?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The $2,600 does not take into consideration the cost of the drivers. It is simply the board of the horses and the cost of maintaining the vehicles, and purchasing horses when needed to take the places of those which die or become worthless.

Mr. ROBBINS. I think $2,600 is entirely too much to contribute to the mere board of horses.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that it costs a great deal to board horses now, and the statement was made to the committee——

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee want to move to rise?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think we ought to have some understanding about finishing this bill.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota moves that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. NORTON) there were—ayes 40, noes 39.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers [Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. NORTON] reported that there were—ayes 32, noes 46.

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 32, the noes are 46, a quorum is not present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 179 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he reported the list of absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] has a point of order pending.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this section, in line 3, beginning with the word "for" and ending in line 5 with the semicolon.

The CHAIRMAN. What page?

Mr. TAGUE. Page 121.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What part of the bill?

Mr. TAGUE. Page 121, lines 3 to 5.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. To the whole paragraph?

Mr. TAGUE. No; ending with the figures, "$4,000."

Mr. NORTON. On what does the gentleman make the point or order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman leaves in the maintenance of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle. The gentleman's point of order would strike out the automobile and leave in the maintenance.

Mr. TAGUE. I make the point of order to the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 2 insert the following: "For purchase, exchange, and maintenance of horses and horse-drawn, passenger-carrying vehicles, purchase of a motor truck, repair of vehicles including motor trucks and harness, $3,200.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I want to ask the chairman of the committee——

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us have the point of order determined, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. NORTON. I make the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. NORTON. I make the point of order that that part providing for the purchase of a motor truck is new legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for just one minute?

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us get it passed upon. If the point of order is to be made, let us get rid of it and get along with the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state that this provision has been carried in the bill heretofore. If gentlemen are going to deny to the department a motor truck, necessary to carry supplies from point to point, and similar facilities, I do not know how the department is going to operate. Now, it seems to me that the gentleman ought to take into consideration the fact that this department needs some vehicle of this kind.

Mr. TAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. TAGUE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is not aware that the Post Office Committee gave the Post Office Department $400,000 for new automobiles?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And not a dollar of that sum can be expended in the District of Columbia, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. TAGUE. I would like to ask the gentleman where the automobiles that are in the District will come from?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit? Not one dollar may be spent in the departmental service, but any amount can be spent in connection with the Postal Service in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true so far as the Postal Service is concerned, but not one dollar can be spent in connection with the departmental service.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield? I want to get some information. Does this provide——

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the point of order.

Mr. NORTON. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the bill provides that the money hereby appropriated for the maintenance of these motor trucks shall be used in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is so provided. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan, in the bill later on. There is a provision to cover that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I insist on the motion. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 49.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is not a quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think, Mr. Chairman, there is a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, but the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members are present, a quorum.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations made for the service of the Post Office Department in conformity with the act of July 2, 1836, shall not be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Post Office Department at Washington, D. C.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who has had to leave the Hall on account of illness, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 1854, commonly known as the daylight-saving bill, may have a privileged status.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks unanimous consent that the daylight-saving bill, so called, S. 1854, shall have a privileged status.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 13, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who didst command the light to shine out of darkness, shine in our hearts with Thy truth that we may have knowledge of the glory of God and in the faith of Jesus Christ, Thy Son. Give to us spiritual inspiration for the duties of this day. May we be guided by Thy spirit of truth and of love and of wisdom in all that we do, that Thy will may be accomplished in us as a Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

H. R. 175. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes; and

S. 3471. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant furloughs without pay and allowances to enlisted men of the Army of the United States.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of Texas Branch, National Woman's Party, of Corsicana, Tex., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Pasadena, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for extreme penalties for persons guilty of attempting to destroy or destroying property, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Robert P. Dixon, president of the Board of Trustees of Lincoln, Cal., praying for universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Britain, Conn., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hartford, Conn., praying for the self-determination and independence of Lithuania, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of Milford Branch, National Woman's Party, of Milford, and of sundry citizens of West Hartford, Hartford, Bridgeport, New Haven, and New Britain, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the submission of Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a telegram relating to war prohibition. As I understand, the Senate has given the President all authority that is necessary to carry out the purposes of those who sent the telegram and that nothing is pending before the Senate, but as I have been requested to have it read and incorporated in the RECORD I ask that that be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., February 26.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Union preachers' meeting of Boston and vicinity asks following petition be printed in full in RECORD. News from Russia reminding of danger of social revolution at war's end, when many war industries collapse, brings supreme argument for immediate war prohibition to remove saloons as firebrands, that world reconstruction may be done soberly. Ratification of constitutional prohibition might come too late. Urge Congress and President invite Britain and France to joint prohibition for war and demobilization to win war and prevent anarchy, also because our farms this year have 2,000,000 fewer workers than last year, and grain can not be spared to make beer that wastes food and weakens fighting.

Mr. WEEKS. I present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[The Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In the year 1918.]

Resolutions in favor of the creation of a league of nations to safeguard permanent peace upon the termination of the present war.

Whereas the President of the United States has declared that our present and immediate task is to win the war; and

Whereas he has proclaimed that the chief aim of the war is to secure a permanent peace guaranteed by a partnership of free nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, By the general court of Massachusetts that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts pledges all its resources to the vigorous prosecution of the war until Prussian autocracy has been defeated; and be it further

Resolved, That the Commonwealth of Massachusetts favors the entrance of the United States, after the war, into a league of nations to safeguard the peace that must be won by the joint military forces of the allied nations; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President and to the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from Massachusetts.

In house of representatives, adopted February 6, 1918.
In senate, adopted in concurrence, February 11, 1918.
A true copy.
Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. WEEKS. I present resolutions adopted by the General Court of Massachusetts, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[The Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In the year 1918.]

Resolutions in favor of the ratification of regulations establishing a closed season on waterfowl.

Resolved, That the general court of Massachusetts favors the approval and ratification of the regulations recommended by the Bureau of Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture on the 13th day of May, 1916, in pursuance of an act of Congress providing for a closed season on waterfowl in Massachusetts between the 16th day of January and the 30th day of September, said regulations being ineffective, owing to their not being approved and ratified on August 16, 1916.

Resolved, That the general court of Massachusetts favors the ratification of the aforesaid regulations and requests its Senators and Representatives in Congress to take such steps as may be necessary to secure the approval and adoption of said regulations.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts and to the Bureau of Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture.

In house of representatives, adopted February 7, 1918.
In senate, adopted in concurrence February 12, 1918.
A true copy.
Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. WEEKS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Suffolk County, Mass., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have received several telegrams this morning from citizens of Mississippi, protesting against the enactment of Senate bill 3426. I submit two of these telegrams and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I ought to say to the Senator from Mississippi that my understanding is that the bill has been recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs and a hearing has been given this morning.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall ask, then, that the telegrams be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I did not know the bill had been recommitted.

The telegrams were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LAKE, MISS., March 12, 1918.

Senator JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Please do what you can to prevent passing of Senate bill 3426. I feel that most all sawmills are doing their best to furnish the lumber requirements of our Government. Car shortage and embargoes causing more trouble than anything else. Government may have all my lumber if they want it.

JOHN E. SUDOIS.

MEEHAN JUNCTION, MISS., March 12, 1918.

Senator JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Reference Senate bill 3426. We have shipped 34 cars this month; could have shipped 125 if cars had been supplied. Have orders hundred cars, Government business, awaiting cars. We are doing our mightiest, but willing that Government take over our plant if it will relieve the car and embargo situation.

COTTON STATES LUMBER CO.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have received many telegrams and letters and petitions on various subjects. I have generally referred those letters and telegrams to the departments of the Government which I thought had special charge over the matters, but I desire to present to the Senate and have inserted in the RECORD four telegrams on as many different subjects.

One of them has relation to the potato crop in northern Michigan and the method by which it is being handled or the lack of methods; one relative to a rumor, which I think is well founded, to the effect that the Director General is to adopt spot charges for the placing of cars on private tracks at various factories; one relative to the shipbuilding industry of the country as affected by labor; and the other has reference to the lumber situation. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARQUETTE, MICH., March 12, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

What provisions are being made to take care of the surplus potato crop in Michigan? The upper peninsula farmers are very much dissatisfied, as they hold in pits and cellars most of their crop of last year. They were willing to sell last fall, but no market. A fair sample: The farmers surrounding Grand Marais raised 10,000 bushels of potatoes, could not sell them, and they are still on hand. We are facing a mighty serious situation unless the Government helps out. The farmers will not exert themselves this year unless taken care of.

JOHN D. MANGUM.

MIDLAND, MICH., March 9, 1918.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.:

The Dow Chemical Co., of Midland, Mich., maintain 6 miles of standard-gauge track, and two locomotives perform their own switching; take cars consigned to us from Pere Marquette rails; return either loaded or empty to Pere Marquette rails. We are opposed to the Director General's proposition of making $2 charge for every car placed on siding. Would be pleased to know Director General's reason for assessing this charge. If this measure is passed it will cost the Dow Chemical Co. better than $250,000 per year.

THE DOW CHEMICAL CO.

DETROIT, MICH., March 12, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Feel gravely concerned over comparative failure in vital matter of shipbuilding. Best brains of country should be called for construction of all kinds of ships—steel, wood, and concrete. Red tape should be eliminated. Present attitude of labor union intolerable. Strikers are traitors and should be so treated. Situation serious. Trust you will do your utmost.

JOHN N. STALKER.

CADILLAC, MICH., March 11, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Please be advised that the lumbermen of Michigan are not in favor of the passage of Senate bill 3426, as we consider same impracticable and think better results will be obtained under present conditions.

MICHIGAN HARDWOOD MFRS. ASSN.,
Per J. C. KNOX, Secretary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Olympia, Wash., expressing its opposition to the bill providing for a long-and-short-haul clause for interior cities and relating to the hearing that I understand is to be held by the Committee on Interstate Commerce to-day.

I also have a telegram to a similar effect from the Chamber of Commerce of Aberdeen, Wash. I simply state the substance of these telegrams and ask to have them referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They will be so referred.

PRICE OF OFFICERS' UNIFORMS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, quite a while ago I introduced a bill to stop profiteering in officers' uniforms. The Senate acted promptly on that measure and passed it. It is now resting somewhere outside of this body, possibly at a place that it would not be parliamentary for me to refer to by name, but I am receiving a great many letters from those who are interested in that measure who seem to think that there is something further the Senate can do in reference to it.

I wish to take this opportunity to place in the RECORD the facts with reference to the legislative situation regarding it and also to call attention to an editorial relating to the matter in the Louisville Courier-Journal of March 8, and to read just an extract or two from the editorial showing how the people of the country are looking upon it. It is headed:

RESERVE OFFICERS ROBBED.

Everyone who has looked in shop windows and seen upon display at fancy prices garments and articles which military officers must have as a part of their required equipment has expressed the opinion that the young men who left lucrative positions in civil life to become candidates at training camps for officers did so at a great financial sacrifice. That profiteering has been done upon the principle "all the traffic will bear" has been plain to the wayfarer, though a fool. The New York Times attempts to estimate the amount of which the reserve officers have been robbed, and sets it down at $29,000,000. These figures relate to equipment only.

The Times reaches that conclusion in this way: We have taken into the Army something like 100,000 new officers. According to reports from officers who have fitted themselves out, they have had to pay $500, $600, and $700 for their uniform and equipment, when the Government could furnish it at practically half that price, and the Times estimates that on an average they have paid about $290 apiece more than they ought to have paid. I think that is really a conservative estimate. That gives the amount $29,000,000. This editorial says:

Officers formerly bought equipment from the Quartermaster at cost. When the camps for training reserve officers were instituted an order was issued suspending that privilege for reasons not quite clear. The result was that there was created an opportunity for tradesmen to charge officers extortionate prices. Suitable equipment being obligatory—the officer could not escape being fleeced by the merciless vendors of his necessaries.

The officer had to get these uniforms, and he had to get certain equipment—

These are facts well known. When the men from the June encampments were getting their equipment the head of a wholesale hardware house called the attention of the Courier-Journal to the fact that his younger brother, a lieutenant, had showed him a pair of spurs for which he had paid a retailer $5. They were worth at retail, with a good profit to the dealer, about $2.

That is in line with the examples that I have placed in the RECORD from time to time. Then, omitting a great part of the editorial, it says:

The officers who have been skinned are majors, captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants. Very few majors were commissioned from the training camps, and the majority of the officers who were compelled to buy at $500 or $600 equipment worth $200 or $300 were below the rank of major, their pay running from $141.67 to $200 a month. Some of them were men of independent means; many were not. The robbery of the well-to-do young man who must buy equipment is not as severe a test of his patriotism as if he were poor, but it is not less unpatriotic upon the part of the tradesman on that account.

The editorial closes:

While the Government has limited the price of wheat and taken other measures to prevent farmers and middlemen from profiteering in food, merchants have been permitted—virtually invited—to fleece the young men of every community who offered their services to the flag, many of them above draft age and many of them heads of families. In allowing tradesmen to make prey of the reserve officers the Government placed itself in a situation for which there is no defense that suggests itself readily to the observer.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that summer is coming and new classes of uniforms will have to be secured by the men who have already gotten their uniforms and by others who may be taken into the Army, and I hope that Congress before that time comes will have put upon the statute books legislation that will protect them from further extortion. The sooner this can be done the better it will be not only for these young men who are offering their all for their country but the better it will be for the honor of the country itself. Congress should stop this extortion at once.

The Senate has acted upon this matter. The bill rests somewhere outside of this body and the responsibility for further extortion from these patriotic men rests there.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask the Senator if this must be done by law. Is it not possible for the department by some regulation to enable these officers to obtain from the Government the necessary clothing, and so forth, at prices that the department itself will fix?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The department has not been doing it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My question is whether it is not possible for it to do it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not prepared to say whether it is or not. They have not been doing it. The bill gives them legislative authority, in fact it is a legislative direction to do it, and if necessary then they could commandeer the stock that is found in different stores and take care of the situation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will pardon me a word more, I think out of any stock the Government has it could fix such a price as in its judgment seems fair and just, and if legislation is to be delayed and this experience is to be repeated it seems to me that an effort might be made for the adoption of a resolution of inquiry of the department to ascertain whether or not the remedy which I speak of could not be at least temporarily introduced.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will state to the Senator that I wrote to the War Department asking why it was not furnishing these uniforms and received a letter stating that it was not feasible to do it. They did not say that they did not have authority to do it, but they are not doing it. The Senate has acted, and I hope Congress will act.

SHORTAGE OF FARM LABOR.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have here a letter from Mrs. K. Josness, a resident of my State, with reference to a matter which I have heretofore called to the attention of the Senate, and that is to the shortage of labor upon the farms. I do not desire to incorporate the entire letter in the RECORD, because it it a long letter, but I desire to read a certain paragraph of it, which will take less time than it would to otherwise dispose of it. This letter is based upon a survey which has been made of the county from which the letter comes:

The amount of ground intended to summer fallow this year is 58,616 acres, while last year it was 87,531. This is a report covering half of the county.

After some further statements in regard to that matter, the letter goes on to say:

But the farmers who are in the sorest financial straits are not on their farms. They are working in the shops or elsewhere to earn their daily bread. Hence I should say our summer fallow is short by 75,000 acres. Even this is not all. From the report you will see there are 26,045 acres ready to be seeded this spring for which there is no seed and the 179 farmers who have no feed are of these who have ground ready but no seed. If this represents half, let us say, then 50,000 acres or more will lay idle.

This is attributed, Mr. President, in part to the fact of the shortage of the labor supply on the farms, to want of a proper farm-credit system.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that the letter may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which is now engaged in hearings on this very subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to send a copy of the letter to that committee.

PRODUCTION OF COAL IN COLORADO.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to report the result of the Garfield drive on the State of Colorado up to the close of business last night:

Mines closed, 37.

Total tonnage per day, 12,200, equivalent to 366,000 tons per month or 4,392,000 tons per year.

Miners idle, 2,600.

Wages at $5 per diem, $13,000 per day, or $390,000 per month.

LAND IN SANDERS COUNTY, MONT.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 933) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain land to school district No. 9, of Sanders County, Mont., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 312) thereon.

ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF WAR.

Mr. THOMAS. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 9352) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 311) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890 (26 Stat., p. 17), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"There shall be in the Department of War an Assistant Secretary, a Second Assistant Secretary, and a Third Assistant Secretary, each of whom shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of $4,500 a year, payable monthly, and shall perform such duties in the Department of War as shall be prescribed by the Secretary or as may be required by law."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 11, to strike out "$4,500" and insert in lieu "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

OSAGE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably the bill (S. 3833) to authorize Cole and Osage Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across the Osage River, and I submit a report (No. 310) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. MYERS. The bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes, is on the calendar, having been reported from the Committee on Public Lands. I am the author of that bill, and I ask that it be recommitted to the committee. There are some matters in it that should be considered further. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be rereferred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] Morning business is closed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is a conference report to be brought before the body upon a very important subject, and as there are Senators who have asked to be informed, I take the method of informing them now by suggesting the absence of a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 3752, known as the railroad-control bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the conference report that the conferees have inserted new matter in the report contrary to our rules.

On request of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a very interesting letter from the governor of Oklahoma upon the subject of the taxation of railroad properties under the proposed legislation.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF OKLAHOMA, EXECUTIVE OFFICE.
Oklahoma City, January 14, 1918.

Hon. T. P. GORE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: May I be permitted to call your attention to the importance that any congressional action re Government railroad control, does not interfere with existing methods or privileges of individual States and local units of taxation of railroad property or receipts. At this time in our State a large portion of the State's revenue is derived from taxation paid by railroads, and to amend in any form would greatly embarrass this State, necessitating new methods of taxation which would probably force the calling of an extra session of the legislature, and would be most burdensome and unfortunate to the whole of the State.

I do not know that any legislation contemplated will interfere with the State rights in this respect, but inasmuch as the Government is assuring stockholders a certain profit on their investment, it would seem, at least, wise to present our responsibility, in order that any regretable situation may be prevented. It is important that the present State rights and privileges relative to taxes from railroads, either by receipts or ad valorem taxation, be not amended or interfered with, but be saved and provided for in Federal legislation relative to taking over of the railroads.

Pardon me for calling this matter to your attention, but its importance prompted me to do so.

Very truly yours, R. L. WILLIAMS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will ask if the Chair is ready to rule on the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the point of order to be that the committee of conference has inserted new matter in the report not in either the bill as it originally passed the Senate or as it passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. GALLINGER. And also that they have stricken out matter agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that on March 1 the subject-matter involved in this legislation was submitted to the conferees. The subject-matter was made up under the old rule and practice of the Senate. On March 8, which was Friday, the conferees reached an agreement. We asked for a confidential print of the agreement of the conferees. That print was made. We had reached this agreement on the morning of March 8. We then adjourned to look over the report and to see that there were no typographical errors. It happened by a remarkable coincidence that this very amendment which is now in question was left out of the print of the conference report, and we met and had it reinserted. The whole matter, however, was completed before the adoption of the new rule by the Senate on March 8.

The subject-matter having been submitted under the old rule and practice of the Senate of putting in anything and everything that seemed to be germane or pertinent, the conferees were allowed much discretion in order to reach what they thought was the desire and purpose of the two bodies or what would meet their approval. Working along that line, we proceeded and completed our labors without any knowledge whatever that any such rule was at all imminent. Our printed report was on the desks of Members on Friday morning, with the elimination to which I have referred. As I have said, we made the correction, and I submitted the formal report on Saturday, March 9.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator give the date when the rule was adopted?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It was adopted on March 8, and we had reached our agreement on March 8.

Mr. POMERENE. Before the adoption of the rule?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We met in the morning and reached our agreement before the new rule was adopted by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair ask the Senator from South Carolina whether it is his opinion that the conferees control the Senate or the Senate control the conferees?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senate controlled the conferees when they gave us the subject matter under the old rules and practices and referred the bill to conference. The point I am making is that we reached an agreement under the old rule.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. May I make an inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. Does the Senator from South Carolina contend that under the old rule the conferees would have the right to insert in a conference report or in a bill any matter that had been prohibited to them by both Houses?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I maintain, Mr. President, that to all intents and purposes this is in no wise new matter. I was arguing from a different standpoint and giving reasons, cumulative in nature, why the point of order is not well taken. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has called attention to the precedents that existed before the new rule was adopted; and until the House and Senate see fit to forbid it, the practice of striking out and inserting must obtain. What I am saying is simply cumulative of what the Senator from Arkansas has said.

Mr. KNOX. Without any reference to any variance of views—and there is a variance of views as to whether this matter in the report is in line with the instructions—I should like the Senator from South Carolina, if he is willing to do so, to answer the specific question.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I consider it is not new matter.

Mr. KNOX. I understand that perfectly well, but some Senators consider that it is new matter. That, however, is not my question. My question is, Does the Senator contend that under the old rule the conferees would have the right to insert new matter that had been prohibited, assuming now that it had been prohibited, by both Houses?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would take this view of it, that heretofore, under the old rule and the practices of the Senate, the conferees might have had a larger latitude than they have under the new rule, although I doubt if the interpretation——

Mr. KNOX. I am driven, Mr. President, to the conclusion that the Senator from South Carolina does not wish to answer the question that I have propounded to him.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I propose to answer it in my own way; and if the Senator can get any comfort out of my way of answering it, he is welcome to do so.

Mr. KNOX. Very well, I will repeat the question. Of course the Senator will answer in his own way, and I am not trying to suggest that he should answer in any particular way; but I want the Senator from South Carolina to thoroughly understand the question. Does he contend, without any regard to the question as to whether in this particular case this is or is not new matter, that under the old rule the conferees would have a right to insert matter that had been prohibited by both Houses?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That had been prohibited?

Mr. KNOX. Yes, sir; that is the point.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not think the conferees would have any right to insert, nor did we insert, anything that had been prohibited, because in both of the bills there was subject matter that was capable of a construction as binding as the provision incorporated by the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us get down to the real question. The mind of the Chair has long been clear on the proposition that conferees have no right to insert new matter in a conference report and that they have no right to strike out anything that has been agreed upon.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We did not strike out anything that had been agreed upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Exactly; the present occupant of the Chair has threatened a number of times to sustain a point of order under such circumstances, but for various reasons has been too timid to do so. If new matter has been inserted—and the present occupant of the chair does not know anything about that; he does not know as to the facts—but if new matter has been inserted or if matter has been stricken out which was agreed upon by both Houses the point of order is well taken; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from South Carolina, I think, is conclusive of this matter; but I think there is at least one other proposition that is also determinative of it, and I want to take the liberty of asking the Chair's attention to it.

Under the parliamentary situation there has been no agreement between the two Houses on any provision of this bill, and I will proceed to show why that is true. The Senate passed the bill; it went to the House of Representatives, and the House struck out all after the enacting clause. When the bill came back to the Senate the Senate disagreed to the House amendment. Now, under every parliamentary rule, that left the whole matter in disagreement. Neither House had agreed to anything that the other House had done. It is immaterial that there happened to be in the bills passed by the respective Houses identical language; the parliamentary fact of importance is that there was nothing agreed to between the two Houses. The House had stricken out the entire Senate bill, which was a disagreement, of course, to the Senate provision, and the Senate had disagreed to the entire House bill, which put the whole matter in conference.

Now, the rule of the House of Representatives has for many years been the same, substantially, as the new Senate rule, and it is to that feature of the matter that I now call the Chair's attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Arkansas pardon the Chair for an interruption?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That gets down just exactly to where the Chair was. The Chair made a ruling upon the assumption that it was agreed that there was new matter inserted——

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Or old matter stricken out; but if that be a disputed question of fact, that is not a question for the Chair to settle; that is a question for the Senate to settle.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Chair will permit me, I think it is purely a question of law that the Chair can decide, and I think the Chair is right in his proposition that if it is a question of fact the Senate ought to determine it. But there is no dispute as to the facts. There is a controversy as to the legal effect of those facts, but I do not think there can be any serious parliamentary question as to what the status is. According to the decisions in all of the cases, there has been nothing agreed to between the two Houses, and there can be no such thing as the insertion of new matter under the parliamentary situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pardon me—not agreed to between the two Houses, but in dispute between the two Houses.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, the whole matter is in dispute between the two Houses, under the parliamentary status here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, the House did not consider the Senate bill at all. It struck it out entirely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I understand that fact. Now, is there anything in this conference report that was neither in the bill that the House passed nor in the bill that the Senate passed?

Mr. ROBINSON. There is some language there, certainly; quite a good deal of language.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I do not know about language.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; that is not the proposition. There is no subject matter in this conference report that was not embraced in the House bill, which was the basis of our consideration in this conference committee; but I want to call the Chair's attention now to the decisions on this rule.

I have already stated that the rule in the House has been for many years substantially the same as the new Senate rule, and the House has always placed on its rule the construction which I have just placed upon this new Senate rule. Now, here is a case exactly in point, if the Chair please, where the House decided that the action of the conferees now complained of was not the insertion of new matter and was not, therefore, obnoxious to the rule—that is, the rule of the House, which I have already repeatedly said is substantially the same as the new Senate rule. Until the adoption of this new Senate rule, which was adopted after the conference report was in fact agreed to, there was no limitation, so far as the Senate was concerned, upon the power to embrace new matter in a conference report.

Here is the House ruling, in volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, section 6424:

Where the disagreement is as to an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire text of a bill, the managers have the whole subject before them and may exercise a broad discretion as to details. * * *

A Senate amendment having provided an appropriation to construct a road, and conferees having reported in lieu thereof a provision for a survey, it was held that the provision was within the differences.

Now, going back to the first case, here is what the Speaker said in ruling on that question:

The House substitute, by way of amendment, went to the Senate.

That is exactly what happened here.

The Senate disagreed to every line, paragraph, and section of the House provision.

That is what has happened here.

And with that disagreement to the Senate provision, and with the House provision in effect a disagreement to the original Senate bill, the whole matter went to conference. That is, by this action there was committed to conference the whole subject of immigration, and, as connected therewith, the prohibition of immigration by way of contract labor in the fullest sense of the words.

The case there determined was much broader than the one that is in controversy here. In the pending case the Senate passed a provision as follows:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation.

The House passed the following provision embraced within its substitute for the Senate bill. Mark you, now, the House struck out the entire Senate bill. It did not agree to any language that we used. It struck it all out after the enacting clause. The House language is as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein these regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, or Government supplies, the regulation of rates, the expenditure of revenues, the addition to or improvement of properties, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

It will be noted that the House adopted an entirely different provision from the Senate provision. It struck out the entire Senate provision and inserted a new one; and while it employed some of the language that happened to be in the Senate provision, it modified that by other language. The conferees struck out a part of the House provision and added to that a proviso, and it is the language of that proviso which it is claimed here is obnoxious to the rule forbidding the insertion of new matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or the striking out of matters agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think the Senator wishes to be understood as saying that there was a word of difference between the House provision and the Senate provision relative to the question of taxation.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I have not said so. But the House modified our language by adding thereto.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the Senator to say that the House adopted an entirely different proposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. It did adopt an entirely different proposition, save in a parliamentary sense.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not in reference to taxation.

Mr. ROBINSON. But, as I have already said, it included in the proposition that it adopted some language that was identical with language that was in the bill passed by the Senate. The House, however, did not consider the Senate bill. It struck out all after the enacting clause and wrote a new bill and sent it over here, and when the Senate disagreed to the House substitute it put the entire matter in conference, according to the decisions of the House of Representatives, based on a rule almost identical with the rule which the Senate has adopted.

The Senator from South Carolina, in my opinion, is correct when he says that this conference report should not be governed by the new rule, because the conference was had and the agreement reached under the old rule and before the new rule became effective. But even if that were not the case, even if the new rule had become effective before the conference report was made, under the precedents of the House of Representatives, based upon a rule almost identical with our rule, his matter would not be obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I take the liberty of asking the Senator if he still adheres to the proposition he laid down when this matter was before the Senate a few days ago. That was that if one body struck out the entire text the whole matter went to the conference committee and they could write a new bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; so long as it is germane to the subject matter of the original bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. They could write a new bill and they could leave out matter agreed to by both Houses?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. That is the authority that I have just read, relating to a case which holds that nothing is agreed to under the status which existed when this measure went to conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is reading from the decisions of the House of Representatives?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Technically speaking, we have no right to even quote the House; but waiving that——

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, well; the Senator has referred to the House. I can say "the body at the other end of the Capitol" just as well as the Senator can; but I do not think the Senator would resort to that sort of a contention at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no. I said I would waive that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment before the Senator asks me a question.

The Senator from New Hampshire has repeatedly asserted that it is not proper for this body to take into consideration the precedents of the body at the other end of the Capitol. Mr. President, the decisions of the body at the other end of the Capitol are strongly persuasive in this case, because, as I have repeatedly said, the rule of the Senate is almost identical with the rule of the body at the other end of the Capitol; and the constructions which the body at the other end of the Capitol, if the Senator pleases, has placed upon that rule ought to be given consideration in determining the proper construction of this rule. We have adopted the House rule, and with it the constructions which the House has placed upon it.

I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say to the Senator that I agree with him that it is perfectly proper to refer to the decisions made in the House of Representatives, and they ought to have weight, I think. I am not finding fault with that. But the Senator has made the assertion, and it is in one of the decisions, that where one House strikes out the entire bill after the enacting clause and inserts a new one, the whole matter goes to conference, and the conferees can draw a new bill if they want to.

Let me ask the Senator this question, based upon that proposition: Suppose this bill were an omnibus pension bill and it passed the Senate containing pensions to certain individuals, and the House struck out the entire bill and put in another bill, including some of the ones in the Senate bill and others, and then the matter went to conference. Would the Senator claim that the conference committee had a right in that case to put in pensions for individuals that were not included in either the House bill or the Senate bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is a question that is purely hypothetical.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it is not. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me, I do not know what the rules of the respective committees of the House of Representatives and of the Senate concerning omnibus pension bills may be, and I would not like to assert either that the conferees could not or that they could put in the names of pensioners not embraced in either bill. But I do make this proposition: That while it is not necessary to go that far in this case, I believe it is a correct parliamentary principle that generally whenever one House strikes out all after the enacting clause in the bill of the other, and the House first passing the bill disagrees to the amendment of the one so striking out and making a substitute, in the very nature of things, and of necessity, and according to well-established parliamentary rules, the effect is to put the whole subject matter in conference; and the conferees are undoubtedly given a very broad discretion, much broader than where the House takes the Senate bill and simply modifies it without striking out all after the enacting clause and adopting a new bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, will the Senator permit me further? The very question that I have asked him is decided, I think in the very volume from which the Senator is reading, by the House of Representatives. It is not a hypothetical question, as I view it; but it is passed on, I think, in volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents—the one, I think, that the Senator has before him. It was there expressly decided—perhaps it was in the case of an omnibus claims bill—that the conferees on such a bill had not authority to put in any claim that was not included in either one or the other of the Houses, or to exclude any claim that was included in both of them.

Mr. ROBINSON. On reflection, I think that is clearly true, because the inclusion of pensioners not in either bill would involve an entirely different subject matter. I think I can answer now, in view of the Senator's statement made subsequently to his first question, that I do not think the conferees would have such power, because it would be the insertion of new subject matter. But here the subject matter of Federal control of railroads and their taxation by the States was embraced in the bill, and this gave the conferees jurisdiction. In my opinion, even if the House had not pursued the course of striking out the Senate bill and adopting the substitute to which the Senate disagreed, even if the House had taken the Senate bill and amended it, since the bill contained the provision relating to taxation, which was modified by the House of Representatives, the conferees had the right to add this proviso.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Just so that I may know the exact position the Senator takes, let me cite a case to him.

Suppose the House of Representatives passed a tariff bill and provided that there should be a tax of 10 cents a pound upon news-print paper, or any other item. Suppose the bill came to the Senate and the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and made a new bill, but the Senate bill still provided a tax of 10 cents a pound upon news-print paper, the same as the House bill had provided. Does the Senator hold that when that bill went to conference the conferees would have any power whatever to change that 10-cent rate?

Mr. ROBINSON. In the event that the whole bill of the House first passing it was stricken out, I think undoubtedly the conferees would have power to do it. I do not think, though, that the question the Senator has asked me is germane to this question, for the reason that the distinctions in the two cases are apparent.

Mr. SMOOT. I am asking the question to get the Senator's viewpoint of the rule. I had no reference whatever to the present case.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the Senate and the Chair are more interested in the viewpoint I may have touching the particular case in controversy. I would prefer not to discuss every hypothetical case that might be suggested here. I think that in this particular case there can be no question that, for three reasons, the point of order should be overruled. The first is that the conference report was agreed to by the conferees before the Senate rule became effective. The second is that the House of Representatives——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator was interrupted when he was about to read a very interesting matter that I wish he would read, and that is the proviso. He was stopped from going on with his speech and not allowed to read it. I wish he would read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In order to clarify the discussion, will the Senator from Arkansas let the Chair ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be delighted to yield to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate of the United States passed this proviso in this bill:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation.

The House of Representatives, in the substituted bill, included that language exactly, and added to it:

or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein these regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, or Government supplies, the regulation of rates, the expenditure of revenues, the addition to or improvement of properties, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

Is that right?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir; that is exactly right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, you put the House clause and the Senate clause in your conference report?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; all of the Senate bill language you have quoted and a part of the House provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And then you added the further proviso:

Provided, however, That no State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, shall levy, assess, or collect an amount of taxes from railroad property within the State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, while under Federal control, in excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bore to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for the year previous to Federal control.

That is what you added.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, so far as the subject of taxation was concerned, was there any controversy between the Senate and the House in conference?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What was it?

Mr. ROBINSON. The whole subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. You are getting back to your discussion of it; but on the face of the two bills what was there upon the subject of taxation that was in dispute between the Senate and the House?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate bill, of course, had been stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I know.

Mr. ROBINSON. We were considering the House bill, and there were some who favored eliminating the entire provision. The whole subject of taxation by the States was in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Chair will pardon me, the point I am trying to make is that the mere fact that when the Senate passed its bill there was some language in the Senate bill, which was also to be found in the House bill, could not estop the conferees, after the House had stricken out the Senate bill, from modifying the House provision. We took the House provision and simply modified it by striking out a portion of it and adding a proviso. That is what we have done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I think I get the view of the Senator from Arkansas, and very clearly. So the bill going to conference, the House having stricken out the Senate bill, the entire subject of taxation was before the conferees, and they could change it in any way they pleased.

Mr. ROBINSON. So long as the change was germane to the original bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So long as it was germane to the bill. Now, there is no doubt, I say, that the proviso that you added totally changed both the Senate and House text.

Mr. ROBINSON. It modified it; certainly. That was the object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And limited the power of the State to impose taxation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there is no doubt of that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And your contention is that upon the subject of taxation the House and the Senate both agree.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; there is where the Chair is wrong, if he will pardon me. They did not agree on anything.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was in the bill of each?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was in the bill of each. Let us get through with this. The Chair sustains the point of order and the Senator appeals from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before this vote is finally taken I wish to be heard briefly.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has referred to the fact that the House struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and added an entirely new bill and to that the Senate disagreed. He correctly stated the legislative status.

I want to submit as a rule of legal construction that where a statute has been passed in one State and has received a judicial construction and later the same statute is passed in another State, ordinarily the courts of the second State adopt the construction which has been placed upon that statute by the courts of the first State. Applying that simple rule of judicial practice to the question now before the Senate, if the House has a given rule and has adopted a particular construction of that rule and later the Senate adopts substantially the same rule, it is at least persuasive upon the Senate that the construction placed upon that rule by the House should be the construction placed upon it by the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I want Senators to bear in mind the proposition I am about to state. I do not know what was meant by the Committee on Rules when it used the expressions "new matter" or "matter" in the recent amendment to the rule. I do not know whether it is to receive a narrow construction or a broad construction; but I submit that the subject matter of legislation before the Senate and before the House is the question of the control of the railroads, or, to express it in another way, the question is, How far will the Federal Government take over the control and operation of the railroads and how far shall it remain a subject of legislation for the States?

It is true that one of the subjects of State control has been the question of taxation. The Senate adopted the provision as read. The House adopted that provision plus something more, namely, a limitation upon the power of the State over the subject of taxation. But that was not all. The House went further and said upon the subject of control, we are going to reserve to the States the power over the subject of taxation and also the police power of the States as theretofore.

The lawyers in the Senate will agree with me when I say that one of the most difficult problems which has ever presented itself to the legal profession or to the judiciary is to distinguish between the taxing power of the State and the police power of the State. To illustrate: States time out of mind have tried to place licenses upon traffic in the States, and the question arises as to whether or not the charge made is a license fee or a tax or burden upon interstate commerce.

When we join the two subjects of taxation and police power of the State we do away with those difficult problems. I dare say there is not any Senator who would attempt to lay down a rule which in every instance will distinguish between the taxing power and the police power of the State. We all recognize that around the taxing power there is a sort of a twilight zone. The same is true of the police power. But when we join the two together we do away with that twilight zone.

When the House saw fit to add to the taxing power the police power it in effect said that we are giving back or rather we are reserving to the States a twofold power in the exercise of which there shall be no difficulty. In other words, we are making that which in the Senate bill was uncertain so far as the taxing power is concerned certain when we combine with it the police power.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a minute. I submit when the House sent over to the Senate this particular section combining the taxation power and the police power they changed the legislation which we sent to them from the Senate and gave us the right to add to or to modify or qualify the language that was in the House bill if we did not have it under the contention of the Senator from Arkansas, which, if I may repeat, is that the House having struck out of the Senate bill all after the enacting clause and inserted new matter, and the Senate having disagreed to the amendment places the entire bill in conference.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he believes that this railroad-control bill would have passed the Senate had there been anything in the bill which in any way attempted to control or minimize the right of the State to tax property in its own way?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as a general proposition I agree with the Senator, but when the House saw fit to couple with that taxation power another power which is closely allied to the taxation power, as closely allied as the police power of the State, then it changes the situation and the House reserved to the States a broader power than they would have had under the Senate provision.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator is very frank in his reply, as he usually is. I wonder if he would be willing to say, as I am willing to say, that any attempt on the part of the Senate to nullify the State's right to taxation would be met with my disapproval. I would not have voted for the bill, and I do not believe the Senator from Ohio would have voted for it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I have made at least my position clear so far as this matter is concerned.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I am sure the able Senator from Ohio did not mean to convey to the Senator from Michigan that it was his conviction that this bill deprived the State of the privilege and right of taxation. I ask the Senator from Ohio now, does he not understand clearly that under the bill a privilege of taxation still remains in the States? It is the mere application of it that has been changed.

Mr. POMERENE. Under this bill the complete power of taxation remains with the States save and except as we put this limitation upon it in the proviso.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois did not quote me correctly. I used the word "limited."

Mr. POMERENE. I think I understood the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know it is not the purpose of the bill to supersede the constitutional right of the State to impose taxation upon property within the State in its own way, but I say that you have suspended temporarily at least the right of the State to tax property, and to that extent you have limited its constitutional and appropriate function.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I feel very clearly that the conferees of the Senate and of the House were within the scope of their authority when they added the limitation contained in the proviso in this amendment, but I believe——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, the Senator will permit the Chair to interrupt the Senator. The Chair does not want anybody to be controlled by the ruling of the Chair. The Chair has not the slightest intention of affecting anybody's opinion about it.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not questioning the position or the good faith of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; but Senators will vote on this question without regard to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I fairly state the position of the Senators who are opposed to this conference report when I say that they have not invoked the rule recently adopted by the Senate so much out of regard for the rule itself, as they have because they want to defeat the placing of any limitation upon the taxing power of the States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is my position practically.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that fairly states the matter in dispute, and it is to that question, briefly, that I want to address myself at this particular time, though it might be more pertinent if we were discussing the general merits of the legislation itself.

No Senator who opposes this conference report is more jealous of the right of the States than I am. I believe that we should interfere as little as may be with the power of the States, but, on the other hand, I am very firmly of the opinion that the States ought not to do anything that is going to paralyze the arm of the Federal Government in this time of war.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Should the State impose any excessive taxation have not the railroads recourse to the courts?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, well, I realize that; in an extreme case, if they saw fit to place a tax upon the railroads which would consume the entire earning power of the railroad I have no doubt the courts, slow as they are, would grant some relief. But that does not militate against the right of the Congress of the United States to place a reasonable limitation upon the power of the States. Now, let us see what is going to be the effect of this.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, not being a lawyer I feel at liberty to ask a lawyer a question, even though it may be a foolish one.

Mr. POMERENE. I am sure the Senator could not ask a foolish question.

Mr. GALLINGER. The provisions of the conference report absolutely traverse the constitutional provisions in the State of New Hampshire, which provide that all property shall be taxed equally upon the principles of equality. Now, if they deny the State the right to tax the increased value of the property which may accrue after the passage of this law, certainly the constitutional provision is made inoperative.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator is wrong in his conclusion. We simply provide in this proviso that the ratio of the taxes as between the railroads and the other property in the State shall not be changed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; shall nôt be changed, but the States could change the taxes on all other property next year, but could not change the taxes upon railroad property if this law is in effect.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; they can. If there is an increase of 10 per cent upon the railroad property or upon the other property of the State there can be an increase of 10 per cent upon the railroads. The purpose of this legislation is to prevent discrimination against the railroads.

Now, I ask Senators to allow me to proceed a little further with my argument.

The subject of the present controversy came to the conferees in a very serious form, as we believed. In the legislatures of certain States—and I do not care to name them—bills were presented the purpose of which was to increase to a very great degree the taxation upon the railroads. In one of the States, where the property valuation is not very high, a bill was introduced which would increase the taxation upon the railroads of that State $500,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did it pass?

Mr. POMERENE. Well, we did not know whether it would pass or not. I have observed that even in the Senate of the United States we are sometimes very much interested in preventing certain burdens being placed upon our States, and at times we are very much interested in getting all the revenue we can out of the Treasury of the United States for our respective States. Members of the legislatures in the States are not very different from the Members of the Federal Congress in that behalf.

Under the pending legislation the Federal Government has assumed certain obligations, among which are these: First, to pay the operating expenses of the railroads, including taxes, with certain exceptions; second, to pay the cost of repairs; third, to pay the cost of maintenance; fourth, for the purpose of paying the just compensation, which shall be fixed by the President by agreement with the different railroads. That is assuming a serious burden; and to the very extent that the taxes are increased in the several States and the subdivisions thereof, to that extent they will increase the burden of the Federal Government.

I think I fairly state, in a word, the general position throughout the country when I say that, whatever the conditions of taxation may have been some years ago, now, in most of the States, the railroads and public utilities are paying their fair share of the burden of taxation; in fact, in some States if there has been any discrimination it has been a discrimination against the railroads and not in favor of them. Under these circumstances, while we want the States to exercise the full power of taxation, ought we, sitting here as a Federal Congress, to say to them: "You may go on and raise your taxes upon the railroad properties as far as you can consistently with the laws of your own State, and thereby add to the burdens of the Public Treasury in a time of war"? That is a serious proposition.

Senators, while I am dwelling upon this subject, if I may, I wish to say just a word upon another proposition which was raised the other day, and that was as to the constitutionality of this limitation upon the powers of the States. Until the question had been raised on the floor of the Senate I did not believe there could have been any doubt about it. My investigation since the question was raised has confirmed my former opinion. Senators are familiar with the national banking act and the decisions of the Supreme Court under that act. In one of the sections of that law the Congress authorized the States to tax the national banks, but only in a certain way. They can tax the shares of the capital stock and they can tax the real estate belonging to the banks, but beyond that they may not go. In the case of the Owensboro Bank against Owensboro, in One hundred and seventy-third United States Reports, it was clearly held that the States could not place any taxes upon national banks, which are an instrumentality of the Federal Government, except as Congress permitted them to place such taxes and only in the way it prescribed. The syllabus, in part, reads:

A State is wholly without power to levy any tax, either direct or indirect, upon national banks, their property, assets, or franchises, except when permitted so to do by the legislation of Congress.

Let us bear that rule in mind and then apply it to the bill under consideration. I do not think anyone will doubt the authority of the United States to take over the railroads as a war measure. That we have done. We have taken possession of them; we are operating them; we have control of them. The railroads can not move a train without the sanction of the President of the United States. Have not these railroads thereby become an instrument of the Federal Government? Are we not using them for the purpose of prosecuting this war and of keeping moving the necessary industries of this country as a handmaid to the war power? Though our possession of these railroads is temporary—for one year, two years, three, four, or five years—while we are operating them and taking the proceeds derived from that operation, I do not think there can be any doubt about their being property belonging to the Federal Government, or at least the Government has a qualified property right in them. Can it be said that, as a matter of constitutional power, we may not say to the States and to the subdivisions thereof, "You shall not place burdens upon these railroads which will drain the Treasury of the United States and hamper the Government in its financial operations"?

It is often interesting to refer to decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the earlier days, particularly when it was graced by the great Chief Justice Marshall, and I want to refer very briefly to the case of McCulloch against Maryland. I read from page 432:

If the States may tax one instrument employed by the Government in the execution of its powers they may tax any and every other instrument. They may tax the mail; they may tax the mint; they may tax patent rights; they may tax the papers of the customhouse; they may tax judicial process; they may tax all the means employed by the Government to an excess which would defeat all the ends of government. This was not intended by the American people. They did not design to make their Government dependent on the States.

And, again, if I may read from page 435:

The people of all the States have created the General Government and have conferred upon it the general power of taxation. The people of all the States, and the States themselves, are represented in Congress, and, by their Representatives, exercise this power. When they tax the chartered institutions of the States they tax their constituents, and these taxes must be uniform. But when a State taxes the operations of the Government of the United States—

And is not the control and operation of the railroads an operation of the United States?—

it acts upon institutions created not by their own constituents but by people over whom they claim no control. It acts upon the measures of a Government created by others as well as themselves, for the benefit of others in common with themselves.

On the following page this paragraph occurs:

The court has bestowed on this subject its most deliberate consideration. The result is a conviction that the States have no power, by taxation, or otherwise, to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by Congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the General Government. This is, we think, the unavoidable consequence of that supremacy which the Constitution has declared.

In the light of these authorities, how can anyone say that Congress can not place reasonable limitations on the power of the State to tax, so as to prevent their embarrassing the Government in time of war? If the railroads are not now an instrumentality of the Federal Government, what are they, and why did we take them over? Do we not use them to transport our troops and military supplies? Are they not instrumentalities employed by the Government in its war operations just as much as the trucks in the Quartermaster Department or the ships in the Navy? If so, then we have the right to say to the States, thus far you may tax them, and no farther.

Judge Cooley, in discussing this subject—and I shall only read a sentence, which follows a discussion of the very case from which I have just read—says:

So the States may not impose taxes upon the obligations or evidences of debt issued by the General Government upon the loans made to it unless such taxation is permitted by law of Congress, and then only in the manner such law shall prescribe, any such tax being an impediment to the operations of the Government in negotiating loans and, in greater or less degree in proportion to its magnitude, tending to cripple and embarrass the national power.

So that it seems to me that when the Congress has said, as it does say in this bill, that the powers of taxation shall lodge with the States as heretofore, except that now, the Government having taken over as a part of the war power the railroads, they thereby become an instrumentality of the Federal Government, and the States shall not tax them to an extent which will embarrass the Government.

Mr. President, the Federal Constitution itself declares that the "Constitution of the United States and all laws made in pursuance thereof" and all treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States "shall be the supreme law of the land." Strange, indeed, it would seem if having taken over the railroads we should leave them entirely to the tender mercy of the taxation agencies belonging to the individual States. While Senators are jealous of the powers of the States and have received protests from time to time insisting that the taxing power shall rest with the States, I dare say there is no respectable element in any one of the States that would say, "We insist upon the exercise of this power to the extent that we choose, even though it does drain the Federal Treasury."

Mr. President, I do not know that I care to occupy the time of the Senate further, but it does seem to me that it would be a very great mistake at this particular time to eliminate this provision and let the States and the subdivisions thereof be in a position where perhaps some of those who are clothed with a little brief authority might have a greater interest in the local financial welfare of their States or subdivisions than in the great war enterprise which we are now conducting in the interest of America and of civilization the world over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not care at this time to discuss the conference report. I shall have some remarks to submit on that question when it is properly up for consideration. Nor do I care generally to discuss the merits of section 15 of the report. I rise simply to say that I trust the decision of the Chair will be sustained, because I think that decision is right and of much more importance than the provision involved in the conference report. The rule is a wholesome one, and there is no question but that the conferees acted contrary to the expressed wish of the two Houses. I felt at the time when the matter was up that section 15 should be eliminated, because I believed that it added nothing of any value to the bill.

I do not believe the Federal Government has a constitutional right to interfere with the tax laws of a State affecting merely State property, and I do not believe that under the other provisions of the bill the States could tax the interstate railroads at this time in such a manner as to interfere with Federal control. It was unnecessary, in my judgment—and I so stated—to write this provision into the bill at all. It is simply irritating; it calls the attention of the States to the fact that there was an attempt made to restrict their constitutional taxing powers, whereas the Congress could not do that if it wanted to do it, in my judgment; and my offhand opinion now is that this provision is unconstitutional and will be so declared if it is passed and an attempt is made to enforce it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The wisdom of the proposed legislation or the question of the constitutionality of the provision under consideration are not the matters now before the Senate for determination. It is rather a question of the interpretation of a Senate rule; and it occurs to me that unless the Vice President's decision shall be sustained we might as well repeal the rule adopted a few days ago. In my judgment the Vice President's ruling is sound, his reasoning is logical and clearly upholds the purpose of the rule. Whatever may be my views regarding the conference report, there is nothing left for me to do, if I shall follow the dictates of reason and my own convictions as to duty, but to vote to sustain the ruling of the chair.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the statement of the Senator from Mississippi. There have been times when I have not agreed with him on matters of legislation, but I have never had doubts about his ability or integrity. There is no man in the Senate for whose honesty and patriotism I have greater regard than I have for those of the Senator from Mississippi. He is absolutely right in the proposition that the question of constitutionality or the merits of this proposition are not now before the Senate. He is also right when he infers that reversing the ruling of the Chair may lead to very serious results. At least it will nullify the recent rule which we all voted for, every Senator, I think, believing that it was a most wholesome provision to guard the processes of legislation. If I am correct, however, that it makes no material difference as to the powers of the Federal Government whether we leave this provision in or not, it seems to me clear that it is the duty of the Senate to sustain the ruling of the Chair as he interpreted the rule which we so recently passed unanimously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I submit that we have no quorum present.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll for the purpose of ascertaining the presence of a quorum.

So the ruling of the Chair was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is rejected on the point of order and recommitted to the committee of conference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, does the rule automatically recommit the report to the conference committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule.

The SECRETARY. Rule XXVII, paragraph 2, reads as follows:

Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and, if the point of order is sustained, the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report is automatically recommitted to the committee of conference.

Mr. MARTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I point out the fact that a rule of the Senate can not automatically recommit a report to the conferees. It can only do it so far as the Senate is concerned. The House of Representatives would have to take similar action. Otherwise one body could control a conference to the exclusion of the other. However, since the House can not act on the report until the Senate has approved of it, there will likely be no objection to the withdrawal of the report from the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MARTIN. I am willing to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the conference report is rejected, it goes back to the committee automatically.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand that the report has not been made to the House, and therefore it would automatically go back.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MARTIN. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I merely have this suggestion to make: This is the first time the matter has come before the Senate under this rule. The precedent may be of some value in the future. I do not think you can send a report back to a committee of conference without creating the committee.

I think that under the precedents when the conferees of the two Houses have acted and made their report to their respective Houses, whether it has been acted upon by one House or not, their duties are ended, their functions have ceased, and it is necessary then for the House that has the bill to take some affirmative action. I think the wiser and safer proceeding would be for the Senator from South Carolina to ask for a disagreement to the House amendment and have a further conference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The reason why I asked for the parliamentary status is because I was not very familiar with the last rule. I therefore ask that the Senate disagree to the House amendment and request a conference and I suggest the names of the conferees.

Mr. NORRIS. May I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina, it seems to me he ought to omit from his request that the Senate disagrees. We ought not to say to the House we disagree to the House amendment, but we ought to say to the House the conference report has been rejected and we ask them for a further conference. Otherwise there would be no conference, of course.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is my opinion, on hearing the rule read, that automatically we have the same conference. I have made the motion, and if it is agreed to the Chair will appoint them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The motion is that the Senate disagree to the House amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator ought to include in his motion that the Senate disagrees to the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My motion will necessarily involve the whole matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is apparent there is no conference report. That has been rejected by the Senate. The conference report is dead. There is no conference report to disagree to. The conference report is wiped out of existence by the point of order just as much as if it had been rejected by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the rule specifically says:

> And if the point of order is sustained, the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I realize that a technical construction of the rule would amount to that, but the conference committee ceased to exist when they made their report. I will state the reason why I make this point. I am not concerned about what disposition is made of the pending bill at this time, whether it goes back to the conference committee automatically or whether it goes back to conference by the action of the Senate, but this is the first time this question has arisen, and I am objecting to its automatically going to the conference committee, because I think it makes a dangerous precedent. A technical reading of the rule would indicate that that was the course to be pursued, although I doubt whether you could make exact the proposition to the House of Representatives that we had disagreed to the report and ask for a further conference just automatically under the rule. But I will state the reason why I am objecting to the Chair or to the Senator adopting that procedure. It does not make any difference in this instance, because the same thing is going to happen whether it is automatically done or on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina. But there may a time come in the future when a conference report comes before the Senate and is rejected under the rule and before it goes back to the House the Senate may want to take some affirmative action on it. By adopting the rule that automatically it will go back to the House, in the future when a conference report is rejected in that way this body will lose control of the legislation and the papers will go to the other House without our having any option in the matter. I think that is an unwise position for the Senate to take.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will yield to me for a minute, the point he makes sends it back to the House automatically and leaves it exactly where it was when it went into conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not. Any man who knows anything about the procedure of the two Houses must understand that neither House can act on a matter without the papers. If you make this procedure automatically, what will happen? The conference report is rejected. The House has a right to determine before it establishes another conference whether it will accede to the Senate amendment or whether it will not. The result is that you have to message the papers back to the House of Representatives, and when they go back to the House of Representatives they will determine whether they will have a further conference or not. You can not automatically deprive the House of Representatives of its right to determine whether it will have a conference or not, no matter what your automatic rule will do. If you say it automatically binds the Senate, you may bind the Senate, but you can not bind the House of Representatives, and when it goes back there they have a right to determine themselves the matter. I say it would be a very unwise precedent for the Senate to set to make a construction of the rule that it will act automatically when you reject a report because it is in violation of the rule. You are going to lose control of the papers.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. STONE. There is a difference between the two Houses upon the passage of a bill and a committee of conference is appointed. The Senator says that when the conferees come to an agreement and report to their respective Houses the conference committee is automatically dissolved.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it is a full report, but if it is a partial report that is not true.

Mr. STONE. I was uncertain about whether it was absolutely dead and a new conference committee had to be appointed, or whether, if either House disagrees one way or another to the conference report, the committee appointed by the two Houses to confer and bring a conclusion out of the differences of their respective Houses would not have charge of it again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can only call the Senator's attention to the universal precedent of both Houses. Of course, this does not apply where there is a partial conference report, but in cases where there is a full conference report. Suppose this conference report had been rejected directly by a vote of the Senate on the report and not on a point of order, what would have happened? If no point of order had been made and the report had been submitted to the Senate for approval, and the Senate had disagreed to the report, what would have happened? Would the conferees have gone back and told the House we want another conference? No; the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill would move a further disagreement with the House and ask for a further conference, because that is the only way that the House of Representatives would officially know that we had rejected this report. It can only be done by sending a message to them that we have rejected the report. You send a message that you have disagreed to the report and ask for a further conference, and reappoint the conferees. That is the universal practice. The House of Representatives is not going to surrender their right to control these papers when it comes back there for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to state the situation as it seems to me. The report was received here. A point of order was made against the report. The report was rejected and, according to the rule of the Senate, the conferees are in the position of having made no report. That was decided by the Vice President before the new rule, and will be found on page 124 of Gilfry's Precedents. A point of order was made by the Senator from Maine against the report, and a vote of the Senate was taken on it and the point of order was sustained. The Vice President decided that the Senate having refused to receive the report, it automatically went back to conference, no report ever having been made.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You can message it back to the House; but when the two Houses have made their report and they have made the report on the bill in the House——

Mr. SWANSON. But the Senate has refused to receive this report, holding that it was not in order. Consequently, the point of order being made against it, it ceases to be a report because the conferees have not complied with the rule of the Senate in making the report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not familiar with that decision; but I know the universal practice in the House always has been that when a conference report is rejected by reason of a point of order the bill is there for any action the House sees fit to take. Here is the reason: It does not apply in this case, no one is objecting to the bill going back to conference, and I have not the slightest objection to the procedure, but suppose after the report was rejected, as it has been, the Senator from South Carolina, still believing that his report was wise and proper had desired to make an amendment to it, if you held that it goes back automatically, how could he get at it? He could not. It is not material in this case, but there might a case arise where the conferees exceeded their authority, the President of the Senate held they had exceeded their authority, and the report was rejected; and yet the men on the conference might believe that the Senate on a reconsideration would agree, if it had a chance to vote on it, to the subject matter put in the report. Yet this action will throttle them and keep them from doing so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senate has charge of these papers. The House can not act upon the report until the papers get in the possession of the conferees of the House. The conferees of the House have not made any report to the House upon this conference, nor can they make any report to the House until the papers are in their possession. The Senator from Virginia was perfectly right in the statement that he made.

Mr. SWANSON. They can not make a report to the House until they get the original papers.

Mr. SMOOT. They can file their written report, but it is not before the House until they get the papers from the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Neither House can act on anything except they have the original papers.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the House can not act.

I say to the Senator the case cited I remember very well. Not only that, Mr. President, but two years ago when the Indian appropriation bill was before the Senate it was sent back to conference three times by the Senate and there were no conferees appointed. The present occupant of the chair [Mr. ASHURST] had the bill in charge, and he knows it went automatically back to the conferees. Until there is a final report made that is accepted by the Senate the whole subject matter, as far as the House is concerned, is still in conference.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina first and then I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the action the Senator speaks of is automatic here and the same conferees have the bill in charge and have the papers, what will be the action on the part of the House?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senate conferees would notify the conferees on the part of the House that the Senate has disagreed to the report and that they will hold another conference, and if they can agree upon a report they will sign a report and submit it to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The point I want to get is that they have filed the report in the House. Would they have the right in the House without further action to modify that report?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, as soon as they get possession of the papers. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Utah will permit me in his time, the House upon receiving a message that the Senate has recommitted the bill to the conferees can give the conferees of the House authority to withdraw the report. I will state that there are two precedents which have been called to my attention in connection with this matter. May 11, 1917, in connection with the bill to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, the House of Representatives, which had charge of the papers, as the Senate now has charge of the papers in the case, recommitted the bill to the conferees, and thereupon the House of Representatives sent to the Senate this message:

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. South, its Chief Clerk:

Mr. President, I am directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives has recommitted to the committee of conference the report of the committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Thereupon, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] withdrew the report, which had been submitted to the Senate, as the report on this bill has been filed with the House of Representatives. To my mind the matter is very clear. Under the new rules, in so far as the Senate is concerned, the bill is automatically committed to the committee of conference, and the Senate will therefore notify the House of Representatives of that fact. Then the House of Representatives will, of course, take such action as it sees fit concerning the matter, and will probably permit the managers on the part of the House to withdraw the report, or itself recommit it to them, whichever it prefers.

Mr. SMOOT. I call the attention of the Senate to another case. A year ago when we had the legislative appropriation bill before the Senate, after it had passed the House, there was an amendment to that bill increasing the salaries of employees of the Government 10 and 15 per cent, according to the amount of salaries that they were receiving. That went to conference. The conferees agreed upon the amendment offered to the bill in the Senate. That report was made to the House. They had possession then of the papers, and they were the first to ask for a conference. The House turned down the conferees by a vote of the House.

Mr. President, all the Senate did was after they had been notified by the House of the action the same conferees met upon that legislative appropriation bill, and not only did the House turn them down once but they turned them down twice, and the same action was taken.

Mr. President, this automatically goes back to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And to the same conferees. Is there objection to that order being taken? The views of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] very strongly impressed the present occupant of the chair that the report is returned to the same conferees by virtue of the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. And the House will be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair assumes that the House will be notified by the Secretary.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent to have an order making two or three committee assignments. I send it to the desk.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That on their own requests, respectively, Senator WALSH is relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, but not from membership on said committee; Senator HENDERSON is relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Industrial Expositions, but not from membership on said committee; and Senator PITTMAN is relieved from further service as a member of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Senator WALSH is assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Pensions, and Senator HENDERSON is assigned to the chairmanship of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

JOSEPHINE W. BRECKONS.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 213, submitted by Mr. WARREN on the 11th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Josephine W. Breckons, widow of Joseph A. Breckons, late clerk to the Committee on Engrossed Bills of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

LAND AT YELLOWSTONE, MONT.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 41) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel purposes. In making this request I will simply say that the permit expires April 17, 1918, and if anything is going to be done for the building of a hotel there it ought to be under way now. It is for that reason that I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "hotel," to insert "and other"; on page 2 to strike out from line 1 to line 11 and insert:

Lot 3 and the northeast ¼ of the southwest ¼ of section 34, in township 13 south, of range 5 east, Montana principal meridian, including the area at present covered by the right of way for the wye tracks of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Co.; also all that portion of the southeast ¼ of the northwest ¼ of said section 34 lying south of the right of way and station grounds of said company, the entire tract above described consisting of 88.02 acres.

And on page 3, after the word "Forest," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That any hotel erected on said lands shall be operated by the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., or its successors in interest, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the conduct and operation of hotels within the Yellowstone National Park.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to sell and convey to Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah and authorized to do business in the State of Montana, its successors and assigns, for hotel and other purposes, and at a price to be fixed by appraisement at not less than $25 per acre, and under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, the following described lands, situated in Gallatin County, Mont.: Lot 3 and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 34, in township 13 south, of range 5 east, Montana principal meridian, including the area at present covered by the right of way for the wye tracks of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Co.; also all that portion of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section 34 lying south of the right of way and station grounds of said company, the entire tract above described consisting of 88.02 acres; the right of way and station grounds of said Oregon Short Line Railroad Co. and the right of way for the wye tracks of said company being designated in the filing map of the Yellowstone Park Railroad Co. filed with the Secretary of the Interior, the land described being within the boundaries of the Madison National Forest: Provided, however, That any hotel erected on said lands shall be operated by the said Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., or its successors in interest, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe for the conduct and operation of hotels within the Yellowstone National Park.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel and other purposes."

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The motion was agreed to.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the civilized nations of the earth to-day are joined in the great struggle which it is hoped will forever banish autocracy and the force of militarism. Men and women are ready, as they have never been ready before in history, to give themselves, their life's blood, the things they hold nearest and dearest, for a cause which is greater than personal gain—a cause which means freedom to the world.

Those of us who have had convictions before and have been willing to see others work while we stood quietly aside or busied ourselves with other affairs, realize now that we have a duty, a great duty, which must be performed by sending hundreds of thousands of our young manhood to fight on the other side of the ocean.

Here in the United States another fight is going forward; a lesser fight, to be sure, and one in which no blood is shed, and still one which is linked irrevocably and indisputably with the fight for democracy which is being waged across the seas. I refer to the struggle for the enfranchisement of women. The final step, as far as Federal action is concerned, I am sure will culminate in success during the present session.

Never before in the history of our country was conscience so necessary to the world; and even if it were not the right of women, even if every phase of our economic and industrial life did not call for the giving to her of the right to vote, I should still say that it is our highest duty to bestow on her the suffrage, that we may add to the conscience of the vote at a time when democracy is fighting for its life—at a time when we need, more than we have ever needed before, a sense of moral values in settling the questions that are to affect civilization for generations to come.

There had to be an American Revolution and the various experiments with government on the part of the Colonies, in order that democracy should be a fact; and there had to be a land professing liberty before there could be a truly free people.

Important as was the Revolution of 1776, it was not more important than the revolution of the first 40 years of the last century, when the property qualification was slowly removed and suffrage was extended to men without regard to their wealth.

Men said then, in discussing the granting of suffrage to those who had no property, "that they were not prepared, that the common people were uninformed, and that it was a dangerous experiment."

Incidentally it was a man from the disfranchised class, a poor boy who came to New York with but a few dollars in his pocket, Horace Greeley, who affected more than any other individual in the country the vote that through the election of Abraham Lincoln led to the emancipation of the slave. Rhodes, the historian, tells us that possibly one-half of those who voted for Lincoln had probably at one time or another come under the influence of Horace Greeley, a single personal influence such as this country had never seen, an influence that was used always for democracy, an influence that came purely out of democracy, the greatest single influence in the freeing of the slaves, the third great triumph of democracy in this country.

It is interesting, too, that though he lived in a time when the woman's rights movement was considered a jest, and he died long before it had assumed serious proportions, Horace Greeley battled with the same earnestness and wrote with the same genius in behalf of the rights of woman that had distinguished his wonderful fight for abolition and for a more democratic country.

The triumph of American independence affected what had been but a part of a nation, the freeing of the slave affected a race, while the freeing of the women affects all humanity.

There are those who claim that this is no time to consider the question of woman suffrage; but the question of suffrage at this time is not only a right to women, but it is also a question of war-time efficiency for a country struggling in the throes of this great world war.

There are those who say, too, that women do not want the vote; that when they have the vote they do not use it.

The fact that women do want the vote was proven by the signatures of the 1,033,800 women now in the possession of the New York State Woman Suffrage Party.

That women who have the vote use it is evinced by the fact that in no suffrage State has suffrage ever been regretted or revoked after it once was given to women; that in every suffrage State labor legislation has advanced, not in tremendous, overwhelming strides, perhaps, but yet with a steady and parallel growth in each State, which shows that the women who have the vote use it to the best of their ability, use it to help conditions in the home, in the school, in the moral life of the community, in those developments of community life which are particularly women's sphere.

I have not always been in favor of woman suffrage, but have insisted that every opportunity should be given for an expression of opinion on the subject. It has seemed to me that when the women of the Nation really desired the right to vote the men would give it to them. In my opinion, that time has now arrived, and I have no doubt that if the subject was fairly presented a majority of our women would be overwhelmingly in favor of having the franchise.

In New York State, when a law was passed providing for the registration for war purposes of every person in the State between the ages of 16 and 50 years of age, the woman's party of the State offered their services without pay to take the registration. The governor accepted the offer, and every State and county official will testify to the value of the work performed. Almost 6,000,000 names were recorded. Every individual received an identification card, and complete lists were prepared and forwarded to the governor. Two-thirds of the work performed in obtaining this census was done by our women, without compensation, and so valuable were these lists that the governor has just furnished to the Department of Labor of the United States 69,000 names, with addresses and vocations, of men residing within the State of New York who are qualified to work in the shipyards of the country.

In the election of 1917 New York State gave a majority of 102,353 in favor of woman suffrage. It has been erroneously stated that this majority was obtained through the activity of the Socialist Party and pro-German elements in the city of New York. Let us see if that is so. In 28 of the 57 counties of the State outside of the city of New York, all strongly Republican, the Republican candidate for attorney general received 250,479 votes, the Democratic candidate 125,219 votes, and the Socialist candidate 32,230 votes, while the suffrage amendment received 203,178 favorable votes, conclusive evidence, I submit, that in the rural sections of New York the Socialist vote was not influential in settling this important question.

Everyone residing in New York City knows that the Socialist Party was not the deciding factor in determining the result there. It was my privilege to speak for woman suffrage at a great mass meeting in New York City shortly prior to the election. The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was present and delivered an eloquent address. He will recall that Mr. Mitchel, the Fusion candidate, and Mr. Hillquit, the Socialist candidate, were present and advocated suffrage for women, and that letters were read from Mr. Hylan, the Democratic nominee, and Mr. Bennett, the Republican, all urging the approval of the suffrage proposal. All four candidates for mayor in that election favored suffrage.

There are 62 assembly districts in the city of New York. In the recent election the Democrats carried 34, the Republicans 18, and the Socialists 10, but all 62 were carried for woman suffrage. Let me point out the result in some of these districts. In the ninth district of New York County, a Republican section, 6,318 votes were cast for the amendment. In this district only 735 votes were cast for the Socialist ticket. In the fifth district of New York County, a strong Democratic section, 5,656 votes were cast for the amendment and only 854 for the Socialist ticket. The same result holds good in the other counties of the city. In the seventh district of Brooklyn, a strong Democratic section, 4,549 votes were cast for the amendment and only 738 for the Socialist ticket; and in the twenty-first assembly district of Brooklyn, the strongest Republican district in the city, 7,683 votes were cast for suffrage and only 1,131 for the Socialist ticket.

Perhaps no more decisive evidence of the fact that the vote for the suffrage amendment in New York State was a patriotic one can be given than the soldier vote cast in the camps of the country. This was 26,664 in the affirmative to 15,760 in the negative, a majority of nearly 11,000. I submit, Mr. President, that the result in New York State on this question was obtained because the women of New York convinced the men that they wanted the vote and possessed every qualification for it.

Those of us who believe in democracy believe that when, in a time which brings into play the most serious and honest impulse and thought of an entire people, there arises a greatly preponderating opinion in favor of a particular measure it is safe to accept the conclusion thus reached as fundamentally sound and as one that will stand the test of experience. So I feel justified in saying that the conclusion reached in other warring nations, and particularly in the great conservative State of New York, in favor of granting woman suffrage is almost conclusive evidence both of what will be done and what ought to be done in this matter. As the war prepared the way for the settlement of this issue abroad, almost certainly the war is preparing the way with us and, I believe, with the same result.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator a question, but if he is going to discuss the matter later he may defer his answer. We hear the charge often made that women do not take an interest in voting and did not go to the polls as men did in the recent election in New York a few weeks ago. Could the Senator from New York enlighten us, or does he propose to do so, as to the percentage of women who were registered and who voted, and what interest women took in the election as compared to the percentage of men who voted? If the Senator intends to refer to that matter, I do not want to intrude on his most excellent address, but I think that information would be interesting.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I did not intend to touch upon the question raised by the Senator from Iowa, but I will say to him that about 35 per cent of the women who were entitled to vote in the recent New York City congressional elections registered. This, in my opinion, was very large, particularly in view of the fact that the election came in the middle of the winter, when there was little interest, and the additional fact that they only had one full day of registry and three hours on another day.

Of the number of women registered, about 93 per cent voted. The registration last fall was utilized in permitting men to vote. There was an additional day for men, but very few took advantage of it. So the vote of the men was based on the registration of the fall of 1917. Of the men who were entitled to vote, less than 37 per cent took advantage of the opportunity; so that with a large registration of men very few more voted than women. In the eighth congressional district, which is entirely within the confines of Brooklyn, as many women voted as men, with a registration of about one-third of the total registration of the men.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] that we have had in operation a law permitting woman suffrage in the State of Colorado for 25 years, and there is nearly the same percentage of women who vote as of men. They keep a tabulation of the sex of voters in the cities; that is, in Denver, in Pueblo, and in Colorado Springs, but they do not keep such a tabulation in other parts of the State. As to Denver, in the last two elections, 82 per cent of the men who were registered voted and 78 per cent of the women. There is a variation of not more than 1 per cent either way in excess or in diminution of that percentage in other elections. Women vote practically in the same proportion as do men.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

From now on practically every woman must be directly affected by a vast majority of the activities of Government. Government in concerning itself with the activity of the individual, in whatever direction, must take account of, provide for, and satisfy women. If we are convinced that democracy is sound in principle, if we are determined to protect and extend and perpetuate the system, must we not concede to women the right and must we not ask them to assume the obligation of assisting to direct the course of the State and Nation? Let me earnestly solicit the support of the Republicans of the Senate for this amendment.

The States where suffrage has been granted women are in the main Republican. When the vote was taken in the House of Representatives on this question, five-sixths of the Republican membership voted for it, and at the recent meeting of the Republican National Committee at St. Louis the action of these Representatives was unanimously approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before the Senator from New York leaves that point, I should like to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps it would be well to say that I am positive that there are over three-fourths of the Republican Members of the Senate who, when an opportunity is given, will vote for the woman-suffrage amendment to the Constitution. I am not going to ask that three-fourths of our Democratic friends vote for the amendment, but I do not have to ask that, nor do I have to ask that even two-thirds of their membership vote for it; but if they will give something approaching two-thirds of their voting strength for the woman-suffrage amendment it can carry in the Senate of the United States and may be passed at any time.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator from Utah for his interruption.

It has been suggested that in States where equal suffrage exists the women have lost their love of home and family. The slightest inquiry will demonstrate the falsity of this statement.

The men of New York have accorded to their women the right to vote. They have no fear that it will take from them any of the womanly virtues. It will not only preserve these, but it will add to their usefulness in many respects. It will require them to interest themselves in public affairs. It will make them more than ever the intelligent partner of the man, which, after all, is the true place of woman. Let me urge upon the Senate the approval of this amendment, which will give to all of the women of America the privilege already accorded to their sex by nearly half of the States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I can state to the Senator from New York that what he has predicted would be the result of woman suffrage in New York has actually happened in the State of Colorado. The woman vote has been the most wholesome element that has aided good government in our State. It has produced reforms of most excellent character, and it has made the people practically unanimous in favor of the suffrage. While here and there a man may be found who deplores its existence, there has never yet in the General Assembly of the State of Colorado been presented even a resolution or petition to rerefer the question to the people.

There was one senator in the legislature of seven years ago who, after his election, made the boast that he would have the law repealed. I made the prediction at the time that he would not even introduce a resolution into the legislature to resubmit the question. As time passed, however, he boasted of his power and of his strength in the State senate, but after a while he began to conclude that he did not have the support which he thought he had. When the last day of the session arrived, when it would have been in order for him to introduce a bill or a resolution, he said he was unable to find a single senator who would join with him in support of such a measure. Such has been the sentiment of the people for the last 25 years in the State of Colorado.

By the adoption of woman suffrage we have had a splendid element added to the body politic of our State, which always votes in behalf of good legislation. On all occasions you will find that whenever a moral question arises the woman is upon the right side. Woman suffrage has a tendency to make better politics; to make better nominations; to make better laws. It can not be possible when we take into the political system of our National Government our mothers, our sisters, our wives, and our daughters that we are introducing an element that will be a detriment to good government. In fact, it has been a most excellent addition in behalf of good government, and I have no doubt that in New York it will prove, as it has proved in the State of Colorado, to be one of the most valuable reform measures that has ever been incorporated into the constitution of our State.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the record has been properly kept, as I assume it has been, by our very competent clerks, the pending amendment is one that I have offered to the substitute offered by the chairman of the committee [Mr. GORE] for the committee amendment. The Senator from Oklahoma, when we last had this bill before the Senate, offered a substitute for the committee amendment. I do not have before me a copy of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire the amendment stated?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I will ask the Secretary to state the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] as a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee, on page 92, lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, and lines 1 to 9, inclusive, on page 93, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and operate plants for the drying or dehydration of vegetables, fruits, and other edible products, including the erection or rent of necessary buildings and cooperation with plants maintained and operated for the manufacture of such products, to purchase raw material, to standardize, sell, or otherwise dispose of dried products, and for all necessary expenses, including salaries in Washington and elsewhere, $250,000, which sum shall be immediately available upon the passage of this act, and this fund may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1919.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would wait until I ask the Secretary to read the pending amendment.

Mr. GORE. I merely wish to make a correction, I will say to the Senator, in the copy of the amendment just read by the Secretary.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. GORE. The words "and cooperation" in line 4 ought to be stricken out and the words "to cooperate" ought to be inserted. I ask that that change be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified. The Secretary will now state the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment proposed by Mr. GORE it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, upon the request of the President, to use all or any part of this appropriation for the establishment of such plant or plants at any place in the United States for the purpose of supplying food for the Army and Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered, as will be seen from its reading, gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority, when authorized so to do by the President, to use all this appropriation or any part of it to construct on behalf of the Government a dehydration plant or plants for the purpose of supplying food for the Army and Navy.

The dehydration, or drying of fruits and vegetables, as was stated when we had this matter under consideration several days ago, is a process that is very old; it was known and practiced a great many years ago. It possesses, as I think I shall be able to show by the testimony given by competent persons before the committee, some very material advantages over any other known method for the preparation and preservation of food products. Coming now at a time when the question of food, not only for us but for the entire world, is the paramount question of all, it is exceedingly desirable, if it can be done, that we take advantage of the modern methods of dehydrating or drying fruits and vegetables for the purpose of economizing and for the purpose of supplying food particularly for the Army and Navy, and incidentally for all our people, as well as for the people of the allied Governments and of the neutral nations.

I think I shall be able to show, Mr. President, that there are some advantages in this method of preparing and preserving food which indicate that, under existing circumstances, we will make a serious mistake if we do not put it into active operation. If we should fail to do so, I think we would make a mistake, even if we were not at war. I think it is a question that could well be considered and investigated, with a view of supplying information as to the methods by which this work can be carried on even in times of peace. But particularly is it important now when, as we are advised—and I think truthfully—everywhere over the country that food will win the war, the corollary being that without food we can not win the war.

The amendment is peculiarly a war proposition. I would not favor it, Mr. President, if we were not at war; but the effect of the amendment is to give to the Government the right to use the money proposed to be appropriated under this item for the construction of governmental plants for the purpose of drying food and vegetables in connection with our war operations for our Army and our Navy.

The testimony before the Committee on Agriculture showed that in the Boer War the British Government, contracting, I think—although, as I remember, that question did not appear, but it is not material—with a private individual or individuals or corporations, had on hand a quantity of dehydrated food of various kinds. The British Government had purchased this dried fruit during the Boer War, and at the conclusion of hostilities had large quantities of it on hand, and, of course, had no further use for it so far as war operations were concerned. So these dehydrated fruits and vegetables remained in storage from the time of the Boer War until the breaking out of hostilities in the present war. Then the British officials investigated to ascertain the condition of those fruits and vegetables, and found they were in exactly as good condition as they were years before, when they were put up during the Boer War. So they were actually being given to the soldiers of the British Army during the present war and used by them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Was that fruit dried by the old process or by the new process?

Mr. NORRIS. I am not informed as to the exact process employed in the drying of those fruits and vegetables. I presume the Senator refers to the particular fruit and vegetables to which I have made reference, acquired by the British Government during the Boer War?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know what process was used. There are various processes; but, after all, they nearly all come down to the same fundamental proposition. The essential principle is the taking of the water out of the fruit and vegetables; that is all there is to it. When that is done properly the product can be kept indefinitely; it is not necessary to put it in an expensive container; it is not necessary to take any precautions to protect it from freezing or from heat, although it must be kept dry and kept free from vermin. It is less expensive to prepare and less expensive to keep fruits and vegetables preserved in this manner than by any other known method.

I have here, Mr. President, some samples. I only have a few; but this process can be applied to almost any fruit or vegetable. I will have something to say later on about applying it to potatoes, a crop that in some years is very abundant and in other years is very short, as we all know. Last year we did not have sufficient potatoes, and a potato became a curiosity, while this year, in answer to appeals made to them, our patriotic people all through the West and all through the potato belt everywhere put out potatoes. We now find potatoes spoiling in Idaho, in Washington, in Nebraska, and in Wisconsin because the producers are unable to get them to market, the expense of bringing them to market being too great, and oftentimes it is an impossibility to get cars in which to ship them to market.

If the potato crop were dried it would not make any difference whether it were shipped this fall or next fall or next spring, but under present conditions potatoes must be shipped within a given time. If they were dried the same quantity of potatoes could be shipped by the use of one-twentieth of the number of cars, and it would be unnecessary to pay any attention to freezing or cold weather, as is the case in shipping raw potatoes, making the shipping of the dried product a much less expensive operation.

This process can be applied, as I have said, to almost every known fruit and vegetable. For instance, I have here [indicating] a sample of corn, a sample of parsnips, a sample of potatoes, and a sample of onions. The samples, with the exception of the sample of onions, I have taken home. Mrs. Norris has prepared, and I have eaten in connection with my family food prepared from these samples, and I want to say, for instance as to the corn I have here, that I have never tasted canned corn in my life that I thought equaled in flavor this dried corn.

This little box [indicating] containing the package is still three-fourths full, and yet I ate out of it more corn than I could eat in one meal, and, in addition, other members of my family ate of it, although perhaps not all they might have eaten. It is only illustrative of the fact that it is possible, under this method of preserving vegetables and fruit, not only to save space, not only to save expense in putting it up, not only to save expense in preserving it and keeping it, not only to save the expense of transportation and the use of a large number of cars, but absolutely to have a food product that is the equal of food prepared by any method known to man, so far as its preserving qualities are concerned.

Here is a sample of potatoes, out of which I had one meal, known as riced potatoes. You could carry in your pocket enough potatoes to last you a week put up in that form, and all you have to do is to put hot water on it and cook it, and then season it as you may desire, and you will have fine mashed potatoes. They are not only put up in that form—riced potatoes, I believe they call that form, very fine—but they are sliced and dried in that way. You can dry corn on the cob if you want to and have roasting ears a year afterwards by simply putting the corn in water and soaking up and getting the water back that you took out.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. I was going to ask the Senator further about some other form of putting up these potatoes. I had a letter not long ago from the manager or owner of a factory in Aroostook County, Me., which is, I think, the most productive potato-raising section in the United States, in which he sent me samples of potatoes that were sliced and dried in some way. I have not the letter at hand, but it indicated that very large quantities of those potatoes were being sold for the use of the allied armies. That was before we became engaged in the war, as I recall it; but he stated that it was developing into an important and useful industry.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that potatoes are put up in various forms. We had samples before the committee sliced, as the Senator says. They can be put in that form just as well as in this form. The only advantage in having anything that you may want to put up in small quantities is to make the drying process easier, because all you do is to take the water out of it, and if you have it in a large bulk it is a little more expensive to do it than the other way.

Potatoes are also put up after they are cooked. They first cook them thoroughly and then dry them. In that case they are very available, especially in the Army, because all you have to do is to put water on them and heat them, and you have them ready for human consumption.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if the Department of Agriculture has issued any bulletins on this subject, and if they have been distributed throughout the country?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; they have issued some, and I am going to read the Senate a little later some testimony from some of the officials of the Agricultural Department. They have been doing considerable work along this line, making considerable investigations.

I should be glad to have the Senators examine these samples, any of them.

I want to refer now to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator if he can tell me the number of these factories that have been established in the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I can not give the Senator that information.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There are a number of independent, privately owned factories, are there not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The purpose of this appropriation is to establish a Government-owned factory?

Mr. NORRIS. The purpose of the appropriation is to permit the Government to do that as a sort of experimental proposition—not experimental, either, but to carry it out to the people where they have never done anything of this kind, and show what can be done. The amendment that is pending, that I have offered, gives to the Government the right to use this $250,000 appropriation to construct dehydration plants to prepare food for the Army and Navy.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wanted to know of the Senator if it had not really passed the experimental stage?

Mr. NORRIS. I think it has. I will be frank. There is not any experiment about it. The people of the country, however, outside of a few places, have practically no knowledge of the ease with which the fruits and the vegetables of the country can be prepared and preserved for future use.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it the purpose of the Senator to establish a Government-owned plant to treat vegetables in this way for the consumption of the Army, or just to teach the masses of the people, as the Senator says?

Mr. NORRIS. I take it that it is more the object of the amendment to disseminate the information and show the practicability of the business; but the amendment which I have offered, as I have said, permits the Government to go into the business directly, and construct these plants for the purpose of getting food for the Army and the Navy.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Starting with an appropriation of $250,000?

Mr. NORRIS. Starting with an appropriation of $250,000; yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That will not go very far, will it?

Mr. NORRIS. Not very far, no; but it will go as far as $250,000 will go. My idea is that the appropriation ought to be larger.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the committee any information as to what it will cost to install such a plant?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I will give that information a little later on.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. I will withdraw the question, then.

Mr. NORRIS. Through the West—for instance, through the potato country, as far as I know—the people do not understand how easily potatoes could be preserved for years, and how, instead of seeing millions of bushels of potatoes rot, we could see them properly preserved for future use, even for future generations, if necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That reminds me of a suggestion that was made some time ago by a gentleman of California, who brought several samples of this same sort to my office—Mr. Horst—and I think it well to put this suggestion in the RECORD.

Out in our State we have a great many hop-drying houses, where the hops that we raised had been dried. Our people are going out of the hop-raising business to a considerable extent, and Mr. Horst stated that with very little expense there hop-drying houses could be converted into establishments where these vegetables could be dried.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what Mr. Horst is doing. He is a hop man also, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I know he is.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall have occasion to read a little from his testimony. He had a large hop industry in California. He has gone out of it, and he is transforming the plants into dehydration plants.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] asked me about the factories which are in existence, I think. The particular samples that I have here were made in the Senator's State, at Pittsfield, Mass., by a private institution. They have a patent process. I have seen the samples that have been dried by Mr. Horst, who does not claim any patent on anything, and also samples from a Chicago institution that claims to have a patent process, and, of course, the samples that I have here; and I do not think anybody can detect any difference in the product. The effect of all the processes is exactly the same.

I presume most of the Senators remember, years ago, when we used to dry various kinds of fruits and vegetables and preserve them in that way; but the country gradually drifted into the canning business, and the canning business has been carried on all over the country on a very large scale. Until some of the gentlemen that I have mentioned recently went into the business there never has been any dehydration on a large scale. A man could establish a plant on his own farm and dry his own potatoes, but it would not be the most economical way to do it. It ought to be done in a larger plant.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. How does this differ from the process of drying apples, peaches, and so forth?

Mr. NORRIS. There is no difference. They dry peaches and apples in just the same way.

Mr. KENYON. As I remember from boyhood days, drying apples and peaches is a process that has been in vogue for some time.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; and they have dried corn and fruit of nearly all kinds, for a great many years. As I said, there is not anything new about it; but gradually the country has gone out of it, and has been canning these things instead. Now, in my judgment, there is not any doubt but that any fruit or vegetable properly dehydrated, properly dried, will in no case be inferior to the same product canned, and in many cases it will be far superior; and that is the testimony.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Do I understand that now the private interests are doing this work of drying potatoes, carrots, radishes, and all that?

Mr. NORRIS. Somewhat; yes.

Mr. KENYON. Then, just what is the need of the Government going into it?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I may not have the proper view of it, but to me it seems perfectly plain that with an army of a couple of million men, and with the probabilities that we are going to increase it to five or six million, with armies of our allies of eight or ten million, with millions of people in the allied countries that must get their food from this country, with millions of people even in the neutral countries that we must supply with food, we are presented with the proposition, How can we do it with the least possible expense and with the least loss? We have hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes rotting now in some sections of the country, while in other sections people are going hungry because they have not the money to buy potatoes at the prices they have to pay. They can not get the cars. We have the same difficulty, only probably in a less degree, with all the canning industries of the United States. You first have to get the cars to ship the cans to the canning factory, and then you have to ship lumber to crate the cans. That takes cars, it takes money, it takes labor, it takes men. Then you put the product back in the cars again, in crates, and ship it to the consumer.

If the same product were dried, there would be no shipping of cans. Those cars would be eliminated from the equation, and only from one-twentieth to one-thirtieth of the cars would be necessary to ship the finished product.

Now, we have got to feed our soldiers. Of course this can not be done this year; but I am going on the theory—and I believe everybody wants to do that—that we ought to legislate just the same as though we knew that this war was going to last for years. So that for the purpose of legislation we ought to go on the theory that next year we are going to be called upon to send thousands of bushels of potatoes to Europe to our soldiers, to be taken out in the trenches, thousands of tons of corn, of tomatoes, of onions, and of all the other vegetables. The Government now can get ready to take the next year's crop and put it in such a condition that it can be handled at perhaps one-twentieth of the cost and the effort that we will be put to if we do not resort to something of that kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator could add another proposition, which I believe is even more important than those he has already mentioned. We can raise enough agricultural products in the United States, including corn, barley, wheat, and so forth, to feed ourselves and our allies, provided we have the shipping. Now, we can not very well use corn over in Europe, because we can not ship the corn. It spoils on the way after it is ground into flour, and of course, as a rule, we can not have mills at the front. It will spoil in a few days in such a climate as they have in France. Now, if we could find a method of drying that corn in immense quantities, it could be used in Europe just as well as in the United States, and it would not be incumbent upon us to have wheatless days in order to get sufficient wheat or other cereals over to Europe, because then they could use corn as well as we could.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator; and I will say, in addition to what he has said, that not only would we be enabled to get it there, because it would not take nearly so many ships to carry it, and we could handle it better when it got there, but if we did not use it the first week we could use it the next week; if we did not use it this year, we could use it next year; if we did not use it next year, we could use it the year after. All we would have to do would be to keep it dry; and if an accident happened to it and it got wet all we would have to do would be to dehydrate it again before it was spoiled and you would have the product preserved. You can not do any of those things unless you put the food in this state.

Mr. President, we had before the committee two or three witnesses to whose testimony I now desire briefly to refer.

First, I want to read a few testimonials as to the value of this product, showing that this is, as a matter of fact, the best way to preserve fruits and food. I do not claim for it, Mr. President, that corn, for instance, dried in this way, would be just the same as a fresh ear of corn taken right out of the field; but, in my judgment, it would be superior to any canned corn. The same thing is true with other things; for instance, with tomatoes. They put those up in several forms. I have not any of those samples here, but I took a sample home with me and had tomato soup made of it. It was a powder, a dry powder, nothing but a powder; and all you had to do to make your soup was to pour enough hot water on that powder and boil it a little. In that way you would have tomato soup just as nutritious and just as fine as any tomato soup you ever tasted; and you can carry it into the trenches in France without any danger of breakage and without any danger of its freezing, with one-twentieth of the expense to take it there, and to that extent you can release all these methods of transportation to be used in other activities.

Mr. President, I could give here all the balance of the day the testimonials of practical men, commercial men, who have put this product into use and the hotels that have used it. Here is a letter to Mr. Horst, in which the writer says:

> After having given your dry vegetables a thorough trial, I am pleased to state to you that they are very satisfactory, and as soon as you have them in quantities so that they will be put on the market, will you please send me a price list, and I shall be glad to give you an order.
> I find that the flavor is much fresher after they have been prepared than that of canned goods, and it is much easier to keep and to store.

That is from the Stratford Hotel in Chicago, one of the leading hotels in the United States and of the world, where they have put this product to a practical test. I might go on and read you testimonials from institutions like that, where they have been given samples, and where they have tried it all over the country, but I am not going to burden the RECORD or take up your time with it.

Mr. Horst says in his testimony:

> As to the subject of expense, of course the dried vegetable is not going to be as cheap as the fresh vegetable, because there is the cost of drying; that is, if you take the fresh vegetable in season and dry it you have the additional expense of drying the product. But when you take the vegetable out of season, then the dried product will be cheaper than the fresh product and far cheaper than the canned goods.

Now, I wish Senators would listen to this:

> For example, a case of canned tomatoes that cost roughly $4—solid-pack tomatoes—2 dozen tins, which weigh 2 pounds each, the gross weight of the case being 60 pounds, and you have $4 for a case of tomatoes containing a total of not over 15 cents original cost of tomatoes. In other words, you have spent $3.85 to preserve 15 cents' worth of tomatoes.
> The same illustration holds good in a number of other products to the same extent, and to a lesser extent in all vegetables that are canned. The cost of dried vegetables is the cost of drying plus the cost of the fresh vegetables; in other words, in round figures the cost of dried vegetables is less than double the original farm price of fresh vegetables, while with canning it takes approximately twenty times and often more than twenty times the cost of the fresh vegetable to make the cost of the canned product.
> On the question of weight and transportation, a 60-pound case of canned tomatoes, when the tomatoes are dried, gives you, in round figures, 2½ pounds of the dried product.
> The same illustration roughly holds good of other vegetables, like spinach, and perhaps sprouts, and all these other light-weight vegetables that contain much moisture, say, something like 75 to 95 per cent moisture.
> When you have canned goods, you have to ship not only the canned goods but you have to ship an equal number of cars of empty cans to the cannery. For instance, 30 carloads of canned tomatoes would be equal to 1 carload of dried tomatoes. * * * If you take the tomatoes of 30 carloads of canned tomatoes and dry them, you will have one carload of dried tomatoes. * * * The contents of 30 carloads of canned tomatoes * * * can be put in one carload. * * * When you have your 30 carloads of canned tomatoes, you have to add on another 30 cars for the movement of the empty cans from the can factory to the cannery. That makes 60 cars.
> Then, again, you have in a carload of canned tomatoes 10,000 pounds of tin and 14,000 pounds of lumber, a total of 24,000 pounds. Then you have the movement of the tin-making material from the mines to the tin-plate factory, and the movement of the tin plate from the tin-plate factory to the tin-can factory, and the movement of the logs to the sawmill and of the lumber to the box-shook factory, and the box shooks to the cannery, which gives you a grand total of about 105 carloads as against 1 carload of dried product.

He says further:

> Just before I left California I saw a shipment of 50 pounds of green sprouts from California to some point East, where the express rate is 12 cents per pound. In order to ship these 50 pounds of green sprouts to the East they had to ship a 100-pound cake of ice and pay the expressage at the rate of 12 cents per hundred pounds on the ice and the 50 pounds of sprouts, making 150 pounds at 12 cents a pound, which made $18 to ship this 50 pounds of sprouts. The whole 50 pounds could have been dried and shipped as 3 pounds by parcel post at a cost of 35 or 36 cents instead of $18 for expressage alone, and not counting the cost of the sprouts and ice. So that the differences in cost for vegetables, no matter how you figure them, is in favor of the dried product. * * * It is estimated that of all of the vegetables grown in the United States, potatoes included, that there is about 40 or 50 per cent of the product that never reaches the dinner table; those are the losses between the farm and the consumer and by the consumer.

Mr. Horst says:

> The drying plants in Germany are estimated to be in number somewhere between 1,000 and 2,000. There were something like 850 plants before the war, and it is reported—how reliably I do not know—that they now have close on to 2,000 plants, the purpose being, of course, to save everything. * * * The quantity of potatoes dried in Germany for the last year of which there is official record by our Government is 800,000,000 bushels, which is more than twice the quantity of potatoes that are raised in the United States per annum; and figuring it on a per capita basis it is seven times as many potatoes as we raise. On top of that quantity, of course, Germany raises a very large additional amount of potatoes. Their crop in 1915, according to our Government Yearbook, was, in round figures, 2,000,000,000 bushels, as against 350,000,000 bushels in our country.

Now, Mr. Horst speaks of the process, and I should like to have Senators notice what he says in regard to it:

The process of doing this is very simple. It involves no patent whatever—that is, the process itself involves no patent.

As I have said, there are some factories operating that claim to have a patent process of doing the work.

There are minor features of it, perhaps, affecting the cost of operation that are covered by patents, but they can be utterly ignored, as they are of no value whatever in the general proposition. The business is very simple; there is no secret about it. The sum and substance of the proposition is to dry the product quickly, and not too quickly, and to use only air in doing it. And any plant by which the air is run through the product in sufficient quantities will dry the product in proportion to the water-carrying capacity of the air that is passed through the product. In other words, if you take air at ordinary humidity, say, about 75 per cent, there is the 25 per cent left for water-carrying ability of the air, and at low temperature that water-carrying capacity is very small, and you would have to drive enormous quantities of air through the product, while by raising the temperature to, say, 130°, 140°, or 150°, you do absolutely no injury to the product and you greatly increase the drying capacity of the air. In other words, say, at 150° you dry roughly about ten times as fast as with air at 80°. I have not those figures in my mind, but I have a memorandum here in my pocket from which I can get the figures, if you care to have them.

Now, in regard to the cost, Mr. Horst gives us some information:

You can get up a home dryer with which you can dry celery tips and your odds and ends around the house. The Department of Agriculture has been working on it; they have the plans, and they know the cost better than I do. But it can not be more than $20, I suppose. Of course you have not much capacity with such an outfit. For practical business—that is, to run drying on a scale such as it ought to be done in this country—you will need large plants, and those plants ought to be distributed throughout the United States in the agricultural districts to arrange for the different products.

Mr. Horst refers to the flavor, and I want to read what he says about it:

Vegetables will not lose their flavor as compared with cooked vegetables. If you take a raw vegetable, dry it, and then soak it—that is, put the water back in it—it is not going to taste, uncooked, the same as the fresh fruit or vegetable does before dried. But if you take the two products and cook them, then you have the dried product at least as good as the fresh product, unless, per chance, you take your fresh product directly on the farm and eat it on the farm. You get a crispness and snappiness on the farm that you do not get in the city.

The chairman asked Mr. Horst this question:

Mr. Horst, I wish you would file with your statement these conversion figures, or ratios, the weight of the fresh vegetable as compared with the dried vegetable.

Mr. HORST. I can give them to you in round figures. For instance, potatoes, about 6 to 1; cabbage, about 20 to 1; tomatoes, about 20 to 1; spinach, about 18 to 1; turnips, 14 to 1; carrots, about 9 to 1. That gives you the general relation.

Senator NORRIS. That is bulk?

Mr. HORST. In weight; and in cubic measurements you can take your dried products and compress them so that the question of bulk is entirely eliminated. We press—

That is another proposition that I have mentioned. If perchance after this product was dried you are still short of space you can compress it in a much smaller compress and save space so that the question of bulk is entirely eliminated.

We press cabbage, onions, spinach, and tomatoes. I have a little brick of tomatoes here, which weighs 7 ounces, and five of those little bricks is equal to a 60-pound case of canned tomatoes; and I have the chemist's report on that quantitative analysis to confirm those figures.

And that 60-pound case of tomatoes he can almost carry in his vest pocket when put up in this way.

I want to read a small portion of the testimony of Dr. Carl L. Alsberg. Dr. Alsberg is in the Agricultural Department here in Washington and has been for a good many years. He is one of the chemists and one of the recognized men along that line in the United States if not in the world. He was asked this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you agree about the product being substantially as good as the fresh vegetable?

He was referring in the question to the dried product.

Dr. ALSBERG. That depends upon what you mean by "as good." It has the same food value. It has not in all cases exactly the same flavor. It is not in all cases exactly the same product, any more than the ordinary dried apple that is on the market is the same product as the fresh apple; but the dried apple is a very useful and valuable food, and has the food value of the apple from which it is made.

I will say right here, Mr. President, that it is not all the foods that work out in a completely satisfactory way in my judgment. The apple, for instance, is one that does not. The dried apple as I have read the testimony, and if I had time to go into it it would show, loses some of its flavor, and while it may have technically, as the chemists say, the same food value, it lacks in a good many other respects. But that is not true of anything that is used, for instance, for soups; potatoes that are cut up in little small cubes and dried and then used to make potato soup are just as good, and all the chemists say they are just as valuable 20 years after they are put up as they were the day they were put up.

So some of these vegetables will be regarded—as just the same as the fresh product when they are properly prepared; others will be regarded as bearing the same relation to the fresh product that the ordinary commercial dried apple bears to the fresh apple.

Mr. President, to my mind when we are going to spend millions and millions for our Army, when we are short of cars and are going to be short of cars, when we are short of tin and have a famine almost of tin; when we are short of lumber; when we are short of labor, we ought to avail ourselves of every opportunity that presents itself to prepare the products if it can be done in such a way as to avoid as much as possible the use of tin, the use of lumber, the use of cars, and the use of labor. To my mind the Government could well go into Idaho, Washington, northwestern Nebraska, North and South Dakota, and into Colorado, where they raise potatoes, and down in Georgia, where they raise sweet potatoes, and in Alabama——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will yield to me, I will state that great quantities of sweet potatoes are raised in the State of Georgia.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Government would put up factories, if private individuals will not do it, and probably we can not expect them to spend a million dollars in putting up these drying plants, when we have a crop of potatoes like we had last year we will settle the question of food as far as potatoes are concerned. If we can dry all the potatoes that are going to waste we would settle it for next year as well as this year, and we can feed the Army and the balance of the people at much less expense. Indeed, we can feed them where now it is sometimes almost impossible to supply them, with the car shortage and all the other shortages that we have got to contend with, and will continue to contend with.

It seems to me, therefore, it would be good policy in the places where these products are produced, if private parties will not do it under reasonable conditions, to have the Government itself put up a plant and dehydrate these products.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish, with the Senator's permission, to say in his speech at this point that the potatoes alone which could be cared for in this way furnished to our troops and our allies ought to take the place of an immense quantity of flour that would otherwise be required.

Mr. NORRIS. It would; there is no doubt about that. We will not always be able to give them potato soup; we will not always be able to give them potatoes or, as the Senator from North Dakota said, when we get them there they will not be in a condition where they can use them like they can be used in this condition. We will not be able to give them corn practically as good as fresh corn right off the farm; we will not be able to give them onions, parsnips, and parsley, and the other things. It strikes me that here is an avenue by which we would be enabled if we took advantage of it, to meet the situation squarely and not only supply the Government and the Army and the people but to prevent the almost sinful waste of these products that is going on every year for the lack of shipping facilities and other facilities.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator whether this dehydrating process has been used on anything except fresh vegetables and fruit?

Mr. NORRIS. On vegetables and fruits.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is not any such thing, then, as taking in June a dozen eggs and dehydrating them and having fresh eggs in February?

Mr. NORRIS. Not that I know of. I will say to the Senator.

Mr. President, I do not know that I have anything further to say. It seems to me that this amendment ought to prevail and we ought to give the Government the right to construct these plants and supply our own Army. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will consent, as far as he is concerned, to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there is no doubt about the value of this method of preserving foodstuffs. I can not say how long the process has been in practical operation, but I think it extends over quite a number of years. The value of the process and its simplicity long ago addressed itself to private enterprise, where it properly belongs. If it was in the experimental stage, if advanced processes were in the experimental stage, I can well understand the propriety of including an appropriation for its development in an agricultural bill.

The process of preserving fruits is well known. The processes of canning are equally well known and both are well established. I can see no difference, therefore, between an appropriation for the drying and dehydration of vegetables in connection with the land-grant colleges in the several States and an appropriation for preserving and canning fruits in similar fashion.

The process of curing meats and of pickling them are both very old ones. They have been resorted to for many years for the preservation of meat foods. They are also in the hands of private enterprise where they properly belong. Hence there is no necessity for appropriations for the purpose of preserving meat in connection with our land-grant colleges or otherwise.

This is a small appropriation as appropriations go in these days of billions; it is hardly worth talking about; and I have no expectation that my remarks will affect the action of the Senate, but I shall protest as vigorously as I can against the constant introduction of new items of appropriations in our agricultural and in our other bills. If we are to feed our Army, if that is the purpose of this appropriation, it is entirely too small. The dehydration of vegetables for a million men, and more than that if we include those receiving their rations from the Government here, if the Government is to manufacture as well as to distribute, $250,000 for the erection of structures and factories would be infinitesimal.

There being no occasion for experimenting with an established process, and no possibility of using this amount of money to preserve food to feed the Army, why do we have it at all? Machinery is extremely expensive in these days. Some machinery is not available at all. The drying processes used by the beet-sugar factories, if I am correctly informed, have all been turned over to those engaged in the dehydration of vegetables so that they can add to their product during the war. The obtaining of similar machines not only takes considerable time, but I doubt whether they can be obtained at all.

This is, therefore, Mr. President, an appropriation that can subserve no useful purpose whatever except as the entering wedge for similar appropriations hereafter. If the Government was going to establish these plants at the land-grant colleges of the several States it would need more than $250,000. There are 48 States, and I think some of them support more than one agricultural college, and if it is necessary to have them at the agricultural colleges it is equally essential that we should provide them at the agricultural stations, and by the time we have done that every locality in the country will want a plant at its own door, since the money expended for its construction will be circulated through the community. This is sufficient, therefore, to start the procession. Next year we will have $500,000, perhaps, to establish plants elsewhere, the next year $750,000 or a million dollars, and so it will go just as with so many other appropriations which disfigure this bill.

We have appropriations here, as I said the other day, for the investigation of the attempted destruction of nearly all the insects that infest the earth. Some of them go back a good many years. The insects which were to be exterminated by them have thriven vigorously upon them. We are now appropriating money to kill coyotes, wolves, and other predatory animals which are said to infest the stock-raising districts. We began with, I think, $100,000. We are appropriating now over $500,000 for that purpose. The coyotes and the wolves and the other predatory animals also thrive upon these appropriations, and the Lord only knows what will become of that class of gentlemen who are supposed to destroy these animals if they should become extinct. Their source of livelihood would be gone, and, of course, it is to their interest to see that their victims propagate freely, increase, and multiply. In an old novel called "The Cloister and the Hearth," which was very popular when I was a boy, is a character, a soldier of fortune, who, whenever excited, would say, "The devil is dead." He uttered that exclamation once in the presence of two priests, who devoutly crossed themselves and said, "God forbid." When asked why, they replied that if the devil were dead their occupation would be gone. If these chinch bugs die, if the gypsy moths and the other moths should disappear, if the coyotes should no longer sing to the moon on the western prairies on cold nights of the autumn, and if the other predatory animals should disappear, God knows what calamity would overtake those who are supposed to destroy them. These appropriations are a constant succession of progressive increases.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield in just a moment. If it be true that these appropriations only serve to increase the pest they are supposed to destroy, why not begin the other process and decrease the pest with a decrease of the appropriation? I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I was going to ask the Senator, as he speaks of these appropriations increasing progressively, if he has noticed that something has been accomplished in this bill, and that there is no appropriation this year to study the diseases of wild ducks?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am astonished at that. My distinguished friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was one of the champions of the wild-duck disease, and he is quite a stickler, too, for economy. I am inclined to think perhaps the Senator has concluded that the more money expended upon the extinction of diseases of wild ducks the more the diseases multiply.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say that I think $10,000 was appropriated for the eradication of the diseases of wild duck, and just as soon as that was accomplished no one was ever found here asking for an appropriation to look after ducks unhatched and have experts watch for the disease among them as they were hatched.

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad to know that in this desert of increasing appropriations there is one infinitesimal oasis out in Utah. I hope it will not be revived, because if so, the ailments of wild ducks will increase also.

I venture the forecast that this $250,000 appropriation next year will be $500,000, and so on as future bills are introduced and considered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I dissent from everything that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has said. I believe that the agricultural bill is full of splendid items, and the appropriations through that bill are of inestimable value to the people of this country. Of course, occasionally something may have been spent that did no good, but as a rule it has been beneficial and helpful and productive and has brought many, many times its cost in return not only to the farmers but to the whole people of the country.

I shall vote for this amendment. I was very much impressed with the value of this work. I agree with the views expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. If this drying machine built by the Government accomplishes what it seems probable it will accomplish, and they are built then in large numbers by private citizens, as I believe they will be built, it will be an immense contribution to the food supply of the country, and the immediate production of these machines, I think, will be valuable at this particular time. I cordially support the measure.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in favor of this amendment. One of the problems that confronts us very seriously now is that of transportation. We are suffering very much in many sections of the country for lack of proper transportation.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to some evidence given by Mr. Horst, of California, on that subject. I read from page 10 of the hearings before the committee, in which he says that "if you take the tomatoes of 30 carloads of canned tomatoes and dry them you will have 1 carload of dried tomatoes." Then he was asked if it meant that much in bulk or space. He said "the contents of 30 carloads of canned tomatoes can be put in 1 carload." He emphasizes that fact and then goes on to show that "when you have in a carload of canned tomatoes 10,000 pounds of tin and 14,000 pounds of lumber, a total of 24,000 pounds," you are making a very great saving if you can by dehydrating these vegetables put them in one carload.

Not only, sir, will there be an immense saving in transporting the tin and the lumber necessary for the canned tomatoes or the other canned vegetables, but you will be enabled to carry this thing out in many sections of the country far away from the railroads where it would be impossible to get transportation. It will enable the people in the country districts to can their vegetables and save them where they are now lost.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the testimony given when this matter was before the Agricultural Committee, and it struck me as one of the most important things that has been before us in a long while.

I shall not detain the Senate, Mr. President, by making any prolonged speech on this subject, but I wish to say that of all the measures in this bill I know of none more important than this, and I hope that it will be adopted.

RAILROAD CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, on behalf of the conferees on the part of the Senate I submit the conference report upon the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator desire to have the whole report read, or just the action of the conferees, to-day?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No; just the part stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. All that was done was to strike from the bill the proviso that was objected to on a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 9 of the printed bill the conferees strike out the proviso.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, however, That no State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, shall levy, assess, or collect an amount of taxes from railroad property within the State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, while under Federal control in excess of the ratio which the taxes derived from railroad property bore to the total taxes of such State or subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for the year previous to Federal control.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether there is any objection or not to this report. I am not going to object to the consideration of the report at all. I want, however, to suggest the absence of a quorum so that other Senators interested in the report may have an opportunity to be here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will please call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McNary	Sutherland
Baird	Hitchcock	Martin	Swanson
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	New	Thomas
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Thompson
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Townsend
Fletcher	Kenyon	Sheppard	Vardaman
France	Kirby	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Smith, Mich.	Williams
Gallinger	Lewis	Smith, S. C.
Gore	McCumber	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have responded to their names. There appearing to be no quorum present, the Secretary is directed to call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. STONE, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. WATSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and also of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] on official business.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. STERLING, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. OWEN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. SHIELDS, and Mr. WALCOTT entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having responded to the call, there is a quorum present. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on Senate bill 3752, known as the railroad-operation bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House, insert the following:

"That the President, having in time of war taken over the possession, use, control, and operation (called herein Federal control) of certain railroads and systems of transportation (called herein carriers), is hereby authorized to agree with and to guarantee to any such carrier making operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission, that during the period of such Federal control it shall receive as just compensation an annual sum, payable from time to time in reasonable installments, for each year and pro rata for any fractional year of such Federal control, not exceeding a sum equivalent as nearly as may be to its average annual railway operating income for the three years ended June 30, 1917. That any railway operating income accruing during the period of Federal control in excess of such just compensation shall remain the property of the United States. In the computation of such income, debits and credits arising from the accounts called in the monthly reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission equipment rents and joint facility rents shall be included, but debits and credits arising from the operation of such street electric passenger railways, including railways commonly called interurbans, as are at the time of the agreement not under Federal control, shall be excluded. If any lines were acquired by, leased to, or consolidated with such railroad or system between July 1, 1914, and December 31, 1917, both inclusive, and separate operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission were not made for such lines after such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, there shall (before the average is computed) be added to the total railway operating income of such railroad or system for the three years ended June 30, 1917, the total railway operating income of the lines so acquired, leased, or consolidated, for the period beginning July 1, 1914, and ending on the date of such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, or on December 31, 1917, whichever is the earlier. The average annual railway operating income shall be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission and certified by it to the President. Its certificate shall, for the purpose of such agreement, be taken as conclusive of the amount of such average annual railway operating income.

"Every such agreement shall provide that any Federal taxes under the act of October 3, 1917, or acts in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, commonly called war taxes, assessed for the period of Federal control beginning January 1, 1918, or any part of such period, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation; that other taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period of Federal control or any part thereof, either on the property used under such Federal control or on the right to operate as a carrier, or on the revenues or any part thereof derived from operation (not including, however, assessments for public improvements or taxes assessed on property under construction, and chargeable under the classification of the Interstate Commerce Commission to investment in road and equipment), shall be paid out of revenues derived from railway operations while under Federal control; that all taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period prior to January 1, 1918, whenever levied or payable, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation.

"Every such agreement shall also contain adequate and appropriate provisions for the maintenance, repair, renewals, and depreciation of the property, for the creation of any reserves or reserve funds found necessary in connection therewith, and for such accounting and adjustments of charges and payments, both during and at the end of Federal control as may be requisite in order that the property of each carrier may be returned to it in substantially as good repair and in substantially as complete equipment as it was in at the beginning of Federal control, and also that the United States may, by deductions from the just compensations or by other proper means and charges, be reimbursed for the cost of any additions, repairs, renewals, and betterments to such property not justly chargeable to the United States; in making such accounting and adjustments, due consideration shall be given to the amounts expended or reserved by each carrier for maintenance, repairs, renewals, and depreciation during the three years ended June 30, 1917, to the condition of the property at the beginning and at the end of Federal control and to any other pertinent facts and circumstances.

"The President is further authorized in such agreement to make all other reasonable provisions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act or of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, that he may deem necessary or proper for such Federal control or for the determination of the mutual rights and obligations of the parties to the agreement arising from or out of such Federal control.

"If the President shall find that the condition of any carrier was during all or a substantial portion of the period of three years ended June 30, 1917, because of nonoperation, receivership, or where recent expenditures for additions or improvements or equipment were not fully reflected in the operating railway income of said three years or a substantial portion thereof, or because of any undeveloped or abnormal conditions, so exceptional as to make the basis of earnings hereinabove provided for plainly inequitable as a fair measure of just compensation, then the President may make with the carrier such agreement for such amount as just compensation as under the circumstances of the particular case he shall find just.

"That every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company, and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads of which the President has taken the possession, use, and control, or which connects with such railroads and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within 'Federal control,' as herein defined, and necessary for the prosecution of the war, and shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as including any street or interurban electric railway which has as its principal source of operating revenue, urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic, or sale of power, heat and light, or both.

"The agreement shall also provide that the carrier shall accept all the terms and conditions of this act and any regulation or order made by or through the President under authority of this act or of that portion of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, which authorizes the President in time of war to take possession, assume control, and utilize systems of transportation.

"SEC. 2. That if no such agreement is made, or pending the execution of an agreement, the President may nevertheless pay to any carrier while under Federal control an annual amount, payable in reasonable installments, not exceeding 90 per cent of the estimated annual amount of just compensation, remitting such carrier, in case where no agreement is made, to its legal rights for any balance claimed to the remedies provided in section 3 hereof. Any amount thereafter found due such carrier above the amount paid shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The acceptance of any benefits under this section shall constitute an acceptance by the carrier of all the provisions of this act and shall obligate the carrier to pay to the United States, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from a date or dates fixed in proceedings under section 3, the amount by which the sums received under this section exceed the sum found due in such proceedings.

"SEC. 3. That all claims for just compensation not adjusted (as provided in section 1) shall, on the application of the President or of any carrier, be submitted to boards, each consisting of three referees to be appointed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, members of which and the official force thereof being eligible for service on such boards without additional compensation. Such boards of referees are hereby authorized to summon witnesses, require the production of records, books, correspondence, documents, memoranda, and other papers, view properties, administer oaths, and may hold hearings in Washington and elsewhere, as their duties and the convenience of the parties may require. In case of disobedience to a subpœna the board may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and such court within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, corporation, partnership, or association, issue an order requiring appearance before the board, or the production of documentay evidence if so ordered, or the giving of evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Such cases may be heard separately or together or by classes, by such boards as the Interstate Commerce Commission in the first instance, or any board of referees to which any such cases shall be referred may determine. Said boards shall give full hearings to such carriers and to the United States; shall consider all the facts and circumstances, and shall report as soon as practicable in each case to the President the just compensation, calculated on an annual basis and otherwise in such form as to be convenient and available for the making of such agreement as is authorized in section 1. The President is authorized to enter into an agreement with such carrier for just compensation upon a basis not in excess of that reported by such board, and may include therein provisions similar to those authorized under section 1. Failing such agreement, either the United States or such carrier may file a petition in the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the amount of such just compensation, and in the proceedings in said court the report of said referees shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of just compensation and of the facts therein stated. Proceedings in the Court of Claims under this section shall be given precedence and expedited in every practicable way.

"SEC. 4. That the just compensation that may be determined as hereinbefore provided by agreement or that may be adjudicated by the Court of Claims, shall be increased by an amount reckoned at a reasonable rate per cent to be fixed by the President upon the cost of any additions and betterments, less retirements, and upon the cost of road extensions to the property of such carrier made by such carrier with the approval of or by order of the President while such property is under Federal control.

"SEC. 5. That no carrier while under Federal control shall, without the prior approval of the President, declare or pay any dividend in excess of its regular rate of dividends during the three years ended June 30, 1917: Provided, however, That such carriers as have paid no regular dividends or no dividends during said period may, with the prior approval of the President, pay dividends at such rate as the President may determine.

"SEC. 6. That the sum of $500,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which, together with any funds available from any operating income of said carriers, may be used by the President as a revolving fund for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Federal control, and so far as necessary the amount of just compensation, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment, such terminals, motive power, cars, and equipment to be used and accounted for as the President may direct and to be disposed of as Congress may hereafter by law provide.

"The President may also make or order any carrier to make any additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other equipment necessary or desirable for war purposes or in the public interest on or in connection with the property of any carrier. He may from said revolving fund advance to such carrier all or any part of the expense of such additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment so ordered and constructed by such carrier or by the President, such advances to be charged against such carrier and to bear interest at such rate and be payable on such terms as may be determined by the President, to the end that the United States may be fully reimbursed for any sums so advanced.

"Any loss claimed by any carrier by reason of any such additions, betterments, or road extensions so ordered and constructed may be determined by agreement between the President and such carrier; failing such agreement the amount of such loss shall be ascertained as provided in section 3 hereof.

"From said revolving fund the President may expend such an amount as he may deem necessary or desirable for the utilization and operation of canals, or for the purchase, construction, or utilization and operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways, and may in the operation and use of such facilities create or employ such agencies and enter into such contracts and agreements as he shall deem in the public interest.

"SEC. 7. That for the purpose of providing funds requisite for maturing obligations or for other legal and proper expenditures, or for reorganizing railroads in receivership, cariers may, during the period of Federal control, issue such bonds, notes, equipment trust certificates, stock, and other forms of securities, secured or unsecured by mortgage, as the President may first approve as consistent with the public interest. The President may, out of the revolving fund created by this act, purchase for the United States all or any part of such securities at prices not exceeding par, and may sell such securities whenever in his judgment it is desirable at prices not less than the cost thereof. Any securities so purchased shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, under the direction of the President, represent the United States in all matters in connection therewith in the same manner as a private holder thereof. The President shall each year as soon as practicable after January 1, cause a detailed report to be submitted to the Congress of all receipts and expenditures made under this section and section 6 during the preceding calendar year.

"SEC. 8. That the President may execute any of the powers herein and heretofore granted him with relation to Federal control through such agencies as he may determine, and may fix the reasonable compensation for the performance of services in connection therewith, and may avail himself of the advice, assistance, and cooperation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the members and employees thereof, and may also call upon any department, commission, or board of the Government for such services as he may deem expedient. But no such official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such services except as now permitted by law.

"SEC. 9. That the provisions of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, shall remain in force and effect except as expressly modified and restricted by this act; and the President, in addition to the powers conferred by this act, shall have and is hereby given such other and further powers necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred. The provisions of this act shall also apply to any carriers to which Federal control may be hereafter extended.

"SEC. 10. That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President. Actions at law or suits in equity may be brought by and against such carriers and judgments rendered as now provided by law; and in any action at law or suit in equity against the carrier, no defense shall be made thereto upon the ground that the carrier is an instrumentality or agency of the Federal Government. Nor shall any such carrier be entitled to have transferred to a Federal court any action heretofore or hereafter instituted by or against it, which action was not so transferable prior to the Federal control of such carrier; and any action which has heretofore been so transferred because of such Federal control or of any act of Congress or official order or proclamation relating thereto shall upon motion of either party be retransferred to the court in which it was originally instituted. But no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control.

"That during the period of Federal control, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires, the President may initiate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices by filing the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall not be suspended by the commission pending final determination.

"Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct, but the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President as establishes or changes any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier under Federal control, and may consider all the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the making of the same. In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices or changes therein, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall give due consideration to the fact that the transportation systems are being operated under a unified and coordinated national control and not in competition.

"After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act: Provided, however, That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers, operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues, the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

"SEC. 11. That every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by a carrier or shipper, or other person, who shall knowingly violate or fail to observe any of the provisions of this act, or shall knowingly interfere with or impede the possession, use, operation, or control of any railroad property, railroad, or transportation system hitherto or hereafter taken over by the President, or shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of any order or regulation made in pursuance of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or, if a person, by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both. Each independent transaction constituting a violation of, or a failure to observe, any of the provisions of this act, or any order entered in pursuance hereof, shall constitute a separate offense. For the taking or conversion to his own use or the embezzlement of money or property derived from or used in connection with the possession, use, or operation of said railroads or transportation systems, the criminal statutes of the United States, as well as the criminal statutes of the various States where applicable, shall apply to all officers, agents, and employees engaged in said railroad and transportation service, while the same is under Federal control, to the same extent as to persons employed in the regular service of the United States. Prosecutions for violations of this act or of any order entered hereunder shall be in the district courts of the United States, under the direction of the Attorney General, in accordance with the procedure for the collection and imposing of fines and penalties now existing in said courts.

"SEC. 12. That moneys and other property derived from the operation of the carriers during Federal control are hereby declared to be the property of the United States. Unless otherwise directed by the President, such moneys shall not be covered into the Treasury, but such moneys and property shall remain in the custody of the same officers, and the accounting thereof shall be in the same manner and form as before Federal control. Disbursements therefrom shall, without further appropriation, be made in the same manner as before Federal control and for such purposes as under the Interstate Commerce Commission classification of accounts in force on December 27, 1917, are chargeable to operating expenses or to railway tax accruals and for such other purposes in connection with Federal control as the President may direct, except that taxes under Titles 1 and 2 of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1917, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds. If Federal control begins or ends during the tax year for which any taxes so chargeable to railway tax accruals are assessed, the taxes for such year shall be apportioned to the date of the beginning or ending of such Federal control, and disbursements shall be made only for that portion of such taxes as is due for the part of such tax year which falls within the period of Federal control.

"At such periods as the President may direct, the books shall be closed and the balance of revenues over disbursements shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revolving fund created by this act. If such revenues are insufficient to meet such disbursements, the deficit shall be paid out of such revolving fund in such manner as the President may direct.

"SEC. 13. That all pending cases in the courts of the United States affecting railroads or other transportation systems brought under the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, including the commodities clause, so called, or under the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, approved July 2, 1890, and amendments thereto, shall proceed to final determination as soon as may be, as if the United States had not assumed control of transportation systems; but in any such case the court having jurisdiction may, upon the application of the United States, stay execution of final judgment or decree until such time as it shall deem proper.

"SEC. 14. That the Federal control of railroads and transportation systems herein and heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, which shall not exceed one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace: Provided, however, That the President may, prior to July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable; and the President may at any time during the period of Federal control agree with the owners thereof to relinquish all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation. The President may relinquish all railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control at any time he shall deem such action needful or desirable. No right to compensation shall accrue to such owners from and after the date of relinquishment for the property so relinquished.

"SEC. 15. That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

"SEC. 16. That this act is expressly declared to be emergency legislation enacted to meet conditions growing out of war; and nothing herein is to be construed as expressing or prejudicing the future policy of the Federal Government concerning the ownership, control, or regulation of carriers or the method or basis of the capitalization thereof."

And the House agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, before the final chapter in this legislation has been written, I desire to submit some remarks on the bill itself and briefly to review its course from its inception outside of Congress to this hour.

It will be remembered that in August, 1916, Congress passed a law conferring upon the President of the United States absolute and unqualified authority to take over and to manage the railroads of the United States. After 16 months, the President, on December 28, 1917, issued his proclamation taking the roads over. Shortly thereafter a bill was prepared, not by any committee of Congress or by any Member of Congress, but evidently by the Secretary of the Treasury or some one under his authority, which was sent to Congress, submitted to the two Houses, and referred to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House and to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

When the bill was presented, its one declared object was to facilitate a settlement between the Government and the railroads which were taken over. The Constitution provides a way for paying the railroads for the use of their property, but the Secretary of the Treasury stated to the committee that it would be very embarrassing to him in his efforts to raise $10,000,000,000 by July 30 if a settlement with the roads could not be quickly effected if the bonds and other securities of the railroads were left uncertain, as they would be in case of a series of suits. So this bill ostensibly was for the purpose of authorizing the President to enter into an agreement with the railroads which would satisfy the latter and thus relieve the money market.

But soon after the bill was presented by the representative of the Director General of Railroads—who, by the way, remained with the committee much of the time it was considering the bill—and he was instrumental in engrafting on to the bill matters which some of us believed were not at all necessary for the war operation of the railroads. In fact, that bill became quite similar to Jack's bean stalk, which you remember, that grew very rapidly. Over night the bill's expansion could be discovered, and something new was injected into the measure.

Some of these additions were very objectionable. For instance, section 10, about which we have been in discussion and which the conference committee were required to revise, contained several provisions which I thought were not only unnecessary as war measures but were absolutely subversive of the principles of good government, as they affect transportation. Both of the paragraphs of section 10 of the bill were the subject of controversy. The first paragraph is as follows:

> That carriers while under Federal control shall, in so far as is not inconsistent therewith, or with the provisions of this act, or any other act applicable to such Federal control, or with any order of the President be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under Federal or State statutes or at common law, and suits may be brought—

And so forth.

The words, "Or with any order of the President" were imputed into the bill and they had no object known to the committee. They were not necessary for the purposes of the paragraph. It is clear to anyone who will read the bill that the original provision was intended simply to fix the status of claimants against the railroads after they were taken over by the Federal Government. It was thought that perhaps a new situation would arise by such taking over, and that, therefore, the same laws and procedure which had obtained prior to Federal control relative to claims and suits should be specifically mentioned as applying to conditions afterwards. No lawyer would have difficulty in discovering what the paragraph meant.

But it was thought by the Director General, or by some one outside of the committee, that it was wise to insert the words, "or with any order of the President," meaning by that that State and Federal laws could be set aside by the President's order, and that not necessarily for war purposes.

There could be no possible reason for inserting this language so far as the effective control of the railroads is concerned. That specific power has not been granted the President up to the present time and yet the Director General has been operating the roads for three months and no complaint of lack of power has been mentioned. The author of this provision probably had in mind what purpose it might serve, but it will not be one necessary to the operation of the roads for war purposes.

Until the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] so forcefully and effectively discussed this provision in the Senate, I had not known that anyone believed that with it left out the President would be unable to operate the railroads successfully. I am confident the Senator is mistaken, for I repeat that they have been operated without difficulty for three months without this law, and if it were never enacted no embarrassment would result to Government control. I still insist that these objectionable words have no legitimate place in this paragraph. The House of Representatives left them out.

Mr. President, it is perhaps an old-fashioned notion, but I have always believed that when I was placed upon a conference committee it was my duty to maintain the contention of the Senate, whether in my opinion the provision was right or wrong. So I took that attitude on this conference committee. The members from the other House, however, readily yielded to the arguments of my colleagues and this alien sentence was restored to the bill.

The provision is given added importance by a subsequent provision of the bill which makes criminal and punishable with imprisonment any violation of an order made by the Director General acting for the President. In a matter so possibly serious would it not be wise on the part of Congress to know in advance just how the provision is to be employed and whether it is in reality a war necessity?

The Congress has stricken similar provisions making the violations of Executive orders criminal from other bills that have been before us, but it has left it in the railroad-control bill. I do not know exactly what the original proponents of the provision had in mind; but knowing, as I do know, what has come from legislation heretofore enacted by Congress—namely, the food and fuel control bill—I thought it was very unwise to incorporate arbitrary power in this measure unless there was some definite reason for doing so and some war emergency was to be served. This matter was debated on the floor of the Senate; but my contention was not agreed to by the Senate, and so I had to adhere to the action of the Senate in the conference committee; but all I had to do was to remain silent.

Section 10 contains another paragraph that has been the subject of no little discussion. I thought when it was before the committee, I thought when it was before the conference, and I think now that it is entirely wrong.

I have never been able to bring myself to believe that the question of rate making was a necessary war power. I knew that the railroads had been taken over on the 27th or 28th day of last December, and that they had been operated without let or hindrance from that time until this, under the law of 1916. I do not believe that any new law is necessary in order to give the President ample power to do everything that is necessary to be done with the railroads for facilitating the prosecution of the war or growing out of war emergencies. We provided in the committee of the Senate, under a compromise, that the President should have the right to initiate rates and put them into effect upon notice, but that they should be subject to challenge; that the Interstate Commerce Commission should hear complaints and determine the justness and reasonableness of the rates, and if they were found unjust or unreasonable it should set them aside. The House provided practically the same thing, except that when the Interstate Commerce Commission should find, if it should, that the rates were unjust and unreasonable, they should report to the President, and the President could observe the finding or not, as he saw fit; which practically meant that the President could make the rates, put them into effect, and from his decision there could be no appeal.

Mr. President, there were many things that came out in the course of this discussion. One of them was that some of the railroads and the Director General were confident that the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission theretofore in refusing to permit an increase in freight and passenger rates and fares was improper, and therefore they welcomed the idea of an agreement between the railroads and the Director General whereby rates would be raised. I do not care to discuss the merits of the question as to whether rates should be high or low or whether they should be increased or decreased; my statement of fact is that the power to increase rates is not essential to the conduct of the war, so far as the railroads are concerned. The question of raising rates is to be brought about after a general increase of the wages of railroad men throughout the United States has occurred, and that condition will be carried over into times of peace when the war is over.

It is this fact which pleases the railroad owners. We had great contention over this subject. Finally the department desired that we should incorporate in the bill a provision whereby the Interstate Commerce Commission could fix the rates, but they were obliged to fix those rates so high as to compensate for all of the expenses of Federal operation of the roads. I contended against that proposition, believing it to be absolutely wrong.

The railroads were taken over as a war necessity; there was no other excuse for taking them over. Those railroads were to be operated not in accordance with the principles of economy but in accordance with the principle of efficiency for the war. Provision was made for constructing tracks, if the President so desired, to munition factories or other institutions operated by the Government and to shipyards, and extensions could be built which would not contribute in the least either to the welfare or the convenience of the shippers of the country. To have Congress provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission must fix the rates of traffic so high as to meet all of these extraordinary expenses was to put in force a law which was unjust in the extreme. The farmer whose products are transported by rail to market, the merchant who brings his merchandise by railroad, the consumers of fuel and clothes and groceries should not be compelled to pay for the operation of railroads for war purposes.

I recognized the fact that if the rates of wages were raised, that very fact would be an element which should be considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing rates; there is no question about that. The shipper must pay a reasonable charge for the privilege of using the road, and rates possibly might have been raised; but the shippers of this country ought not to be compelled to pay for the operations of war, for the expenditure of money from which they can obtain no benefit whatever. I know the argument was made and the question was asked, "What difference does it make whether we take this money out of the shippers directly or whether we go into the Treasury and take out the balance?" It makes all the difference in the world. When we speak of shippers, we are reminded frequently that many of the shippers have made large sums of money, and that they can well afford to contribute out of their earnings and profits this extra rate; but that loses sight of the actual fact that the shipper does not pay the freight in all cases or, indeed, in a majority of cases; it is the producer and the consumer of this country who pay the freight.

The man who buys something to be shipped to another city takes into consideration the freight when he pays the price, and frequently that freight rate is taken out of the price paid the producer and added to the price paid by the consumer; and thus like many revenue taxes which are a source of revenue to the person taxed, so this freight rate is not necessarily detrimental to the shipper but is always a burden upon the producer and consumer. We finally eliminated at least the open and frank idea of making the rate large enough to cover all cost of Federal control; but we wrote into the bill a provision that, while the Interstate Commerce Commission should fix the rate, it must take into consideration the fact that the roads are operated under a unified control and that they must be sufficiently high to pay the compensation provided for the railroads, the taxes, repairs, and so forth, and it is also provided that the President's recommendations shall be practically conclusive of what the rates shall be. This, of course, means that the Director General will make the rates. Unnecessary restrictions, unnecessary and uncertain provisions were put into the bill. I wanted to leave the freight rate and passenger fare situation as it is under existing law.

There could be no question but that the Interstate Commerce Commission would respond to any legitimate argument presented by the President. If he thought it was necessary to raise rates, they could be increased, but we would preserve intact the Interstate Commerce Commission, a commission in which the people of this country have more confidence than in any other commission that has ever been created. I would have preferred to have left that situation as it was before Government control and not to change it by this arbitrary, revolutionary rule. I do not like the deceptive argument that the emergency of war requires this action, for it can not be true.

I said when this bill was before the Senate that one of the greatest objections I had to the measure and to other so-called war measures was that we have been writing into them provisions that apply not to war but to peace; that we have been putting them in because we have had an opportunity to do so. Under the excitement and hysteria that prevails now every measure is urged as a war necessity whether it is so in fact or not. Real war measures are necessary and always in order, but even they are detrimental to prosperity and the general material welfare divorced from war; but the life and safety of the Republic being of first importance, prosperity and happiness must give way. How unwise it is, however, to place in the war category measures which are not so in fact. We should disturb the sane and normal as little as possible. We should avoid with great care those things which irritate the people. Patriotism should be encouraged, not discouraged.

Mr. President, I supported, as I have said, this conference report because I felt in duty bound to do so, being sent by the Senate as one of its representatives to sustain what it had done; but the measure itself is indefensible in many respects. We do not need such a law in order to have efficient operation of the railroads by the Federal Government, and it has become the vehicle for carrying unwise—certainly doubtful—provisions. If the food and fuel laws furnished opportunity for unanticipated autocratic power, this measure swarms with such opportunities. I am confident that Congress is making a mistake in enacting this bill into law. I have the satisfaction of knowing that a good many of the amendments for which I contended on the floor of the Senate when the bill was under consideration here, and which Senators did not have time to consider, were incorporated in the House bill and have remained in the measure. It has been benefited to some extent, in my judgment, by those amendments; but it is still defective, especially so as applied to the rate-making provisions. I think we will regret the day when we gave one man this great power.

I repeat that all through the measure are indefinite provisions like, for instance, a provision in section 9, which I would like somebody to tell me the necessity for and why it should be in the bill. It reads:

That nothing herein contained—

And this was in the Senate bill—

shall be construed as modifying or restricting the powers heretofore conferred upon the President to take possession and assume control of any or all systems of transportation; and the President, in addition to the powers conferred by this act, shall have, and is hereby given, such other and further powers necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred. The provisions of this act shall also apply to any carriers to which Federal control may be hereafter extended.

It has seemed desirable to somebody that we should not only confer direct power to do the things that were in mind, but that we should convey blanket powers. I presume hereafter that some of the Senators who voted for that provision will complain because of the unusual things which will be done under the authority of this act. I shall not be surprised if this proposed law be used as the authority for doing many things by the Director General about which no Senator has yet thought. It conveys authority to rape the Constitution, set aside State laws, nullify State rights, and to send to prison offenders against the ipse dixit of the Director General.

I have endeavored to hold this bill to its original declared objects, but I have failed. It is a dangerous thing to confer arbitrary power at any time. Sometimes it is necessary, but it is never necessary for a Republic to confer general blanket powers upon any man, however wise. Congress should and does know what power it desires to vest in the Executive. It should invest no others.

We are legislating dangerously. I think sometimes we are cowards. A bill is presented, and some enthusiastic supporter of it runs up the flag of patriotism and cries, "This is a war measure, and you are not with the President unless you support it."

Well, Mr. President, I would rather be with my country than ride in the band wagon filled with insincere claquers. I have granted and I will continue to grant to the President any power when I am convinced that that power is necessary for the successful prosecution of the war. I have never hesitated to do this. I have a sworn duty to perform, and it seems to me that the time has arrived when Congress should legislate on its own information and belief. As for myself, sir, when I know that a measure is wrong and calculated, in my judgment, to retard the war, I shall not be stampeded into supporting it by the false and hypocritical charge that opposition to it means disloyalty to our cause.

I have felt, Mr. President, like saying this much before the final vote was taken on the bill. I have been interested in the measure. I have assiduously attended to the duties of the committee. I have not thought or worked from a partisan standpoint. My supreme desire is to win this war and as quickly as possible. To that end I will vote for any necessary measure of legislation. Whatever little ability and energy I possesss is devoted to my country, and I will not stultify it by remaining silent when I feel that legislation inimical to that country is being enacted either by mistake or deception.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to avail myself of this opportunity to make an expression concerning one or two features of this bill, largely that I might disabuse an impression that seems to prevail in certain parts of the country, charging with inconsistency Senators who belong to the school of thought that I have expressed in my own behalf; one of which charges is that while professing to be for the Government taking over the railroads as a public utility, we voted against that opportunity when it was tendered here upon the floor in the original consideration of this bill.

Mr. President, to have taken these railroads and appropriated them to the Government as a matter of Government ownership, under a measure that had for its sole object the carrying out of a contract between the railroads and the Government for the Government to obtain money as a loan upon the railroads as security, would have been an exhibition of bad faith. Had we passed a law taking the railroads, merely because we had the power to do it, under a measure that came before us with the single object of carrying out a contract between the railroads and the Government to lend the railroads money upon their property, we would have been guilty of an embezzlement of power; we would have been guilty of a national trick that would have been little less than dishonorable.

When we get ready to wholly take over these roads—as I hope we will in a short time—the roads will have a right to be heard concerning the value of their property, the stockholders to be heard concerning their rights, the representatives of the Government to be heard as to the value to be paid or the arrangements to be consummated through which the roads are to come to the United States. Until such preliminary has been entered upon and a hearing afforded all concerned, the Senate could not do such a guilty thing as to take advantage of the opportunity, when we held the roads in our possession, and they defenseless, to appropriate them under the guise of a measure to lend them money. Therefore, Mr. President, Senators, such as myself, who favor this Government at an early time taking possession of the public utilities for the welfare of the Government could not under that bill have taken advantage of that occasion without having been guilty of bad faith.

Second, sir, it is charged, and no doubt believed in the circles from whence the charge comes, that the limitation of time expressed in the bill is made by the Government for the purpose of holding the roads after the war for that length of time in which to prepare to take possession and continue that possession of the roads, because of having possession of them under this lease of security which we obtain through lending them money. I would that the public shall get such an idea out of their minds. Surely that was never in the mind of any Senator; and however competent have been these sociological writers upon the subject, and however sincere the editors of public papers, let this be understood: When the Government gets ready to take these roads it will go directly to the point. Such men as myself, who believe in it, will advocate it at once, without disguise. But surely no such provision is put in the bill with a view of holding the roads after the war so that we may hold them in our hands, and while in our hands, through that advantage, trade against the owners.

The reasons, sir, for this limitation in the bill of holding these roads a certain length of time after the war is in order that we may hold the property until we can collect from it the money that is due to the Government upon the loan which we have given it of the taxpayers' money. If the property passed at once out of our hands at the close of the war, and we had no longer any control of its revenues by which we could apply those revenues to the debt, we would probably, if the roads had passed into dishonorable hands—as we know many railroads have passed through dishonorable hands in the later years—be remitted to a court of law to sue the roads for the amount that was due; and we will not forget nor hesitate to remind the public that we were for 23 years in the courts to collect claims against certain railroads, Pacific railroads, Government railroads which had put us in just such a position that once the property was out of our control we were forced to go to the courts to collect what was due us; and every one knows that men who were interested in the controversy passed through their lives to the grave without ever seeing the result. It was to avoid a repetition of that that this extra time was put into the bill, that it might assure us opportunity to collect the money that may be due us at the end of the war, should the war come to a termination before sufficient time has expired for us to collect our debt.

Now, I come to the feature to which the eminent Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has alluded, and with reference to which I fancy the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who has given so much detailed attention to this subject, will close the debate with a better contribution than I can offer.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Illinois in that particular that I think this whole subject has been fully discussed; and, so far as I am concerned, I am anxious to secure a vote on the conference report. Therefore I do not expect to submit any further remarks unless something further develops which I think makes it necessary.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, Mr. President, I shall content myself with a few words which I hope may facilitate an early vote.

Mr. President, being on the committee, I am, of course, one of those who participated in many of the features of this measure, and I am to some degree responsible for certain votes which led to conclusions which the eminent Senator from Michigan is called upon by his conscientious sense of conviction to oppose. I now advert to the last feature to which I wish to make reference, that of rate making.

These roads have now passed into the hands of the Government for two objects. One is that the Government may exercise a form of control and influence through which these roads may serve the United States for war necessities; the other, that we may administer them in such a way as to get back the money that we are putting into them. Now, it must be perfectly clear to everyone that the rates the roads will charge will be the source from which we must obtain revenue, and that the rates the roads will charge must be those which the public must bear.

Mr. President, I have a regard for the Interstate Commerce Commission, but I want here to make this statement: If I had my way, I would repeal now the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission. I would promptly end the existence of that body. It has served a very excellent office in the past. It has, no doubt, done excellent work for the Government and for the people.

But, Mr. President, I am not able to see the justice of forcing an individual who has a grievance against a railroad, because of the unjust charges made against him in connection with his business or his shipments, to come thousands of miles to the city of Washington to present his grievance, and before he has it presented to have him bankrupted, or before it is ever decided to have him in his grave. It may be that the great duties put upon that commission have been to some degree responsible; but, Mr. President, what would be said in this hour if it were proposed that a man who lived in the State of Washington, the State of Illinois, the State of Michigan, or California, or New York, or one of the New England States, who had a lawsuit, had to bring his case to the court at Washington to be heard before he could get redress, and pay all his expenses before arriving here? What relief, in the final end, would ever be his?

Therefore, sir, I want some agency now created that shall take this body of relief to the people instead of bringing the people to them, that shall take it to the shipper at his door where he is wronged, or to the roads where they have rights, that they may be promptly heard and promptly disposed of, and that we may end the era which we have had here for years of a body located at Washington so circumstanced that those who are the most needy are the last to be heard, and the relief that should be first had is the last to be ever enjoyed.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to ask the Senator whether he is entirely satisfied with the extraordinary speed exhibited in the valuation of these roads as a basis of rates?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator brings to my mind an interesting thought. I admit I have been attracted to that subject. The Congress passed a law authorizing this agency to ascertain the physical value of the property, which in itself could be a basis for rates. All of the years have elapsed, all of the time has expired, and, as the Senator has intimated, where is the result? In the meantime, millions and millions of losses to the roads and to the shippers have transpired as a result of the condition, and I am not able to see any relief.

Therefore I hope the President will do this: If I were to have any influence with the President, it would be to ask him to recommend to this body—Congress—promptly to execute that provision which the eminent Senator from Michigan finds a grievance, putting the power in the President to make rates; that he shall create bodies representing this Government, divided among the geographical districts of this country as the circuit courts of appeal of the United States are now constituted, having the power in each of these geographical districts exactly equal to the power in the other districts, by which these bodies may be near the people, near the shipper, near the road, so that when a man has a complaint he may make it at once, it may be heard peremptorily and disposed of, and then that the appeal may come from that body directly to the court upon any particular subject that is the subject of appeal; and that a body such as we now have centered here in Washington, sending out an examiner here and there to drag an investigation through years, shall cease, and that we shall now put into effect some form of machinery that will meet the new conditions of the Government.

I for myself, speaking upon my own authority, will assume that under the provision to which the eminent Senator alludes there will be now undertaken a machinery that shall create an agency that will hear all disputes of rates, giving justice to the Government and justice to the shipper; that this agency will be put at the door of the people and the shipper; and that we will end this very long delay, this long, useless contention, and this final destruction of the welfare of shipper and roads which has transpired under the present constitution, organization, and administration of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I support the report.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, while I am nominally a member of the conference committee, I have been so situated that I have not been able to take any part in the consideration of the bill in conference. I am not, therefore, responsible for the conference report in any way or in any part.

I was opposed to the bill when it passed the Senate. I voted against it. There was no roll call, and I think it is quite fair that I should state now my general views with regard to the measure. I hope that upon the adoption or rejection of the conference report there may be a roll call, so that those of us who believe that this bill is radically wrong, and that it will do a great deal more toward losing the war than winning the war, may have an opportunity to record our convictions in some enduring form.

Mr. President, though I am opposed to the bill, it is not because the Government is in possession and operation of the railway properties. As I said when we were considering the bill originally, I am in entire sympathy with the policy which led the President of the United States to take possession of the transportation facilities of the United States. I think it was not only a wise step, but a necessary step, for there was no other way to command the efficiency required in the emergency which confronted us. This bill, however, does not give the President the power to take possession of and to operate the railways of this country. He had that power before; and I want it distinctly understood that in opposing the bill I am not interfering in any way whatsoever with the full and complete unification of the railway systems of this country through Government operation.

I am opposed to the bill for three chief reasons. It was a bad measure when it passed the Senate. It is very much worse now. The conference report has robbed the bill of the only virtue which, in my opinion, it had. I will point out presently the changes or modifications that have been made in the conference report.

My first objection to the bill, and therefore to the conference report, is that it authorizes an unjust, unfair, oppressive, and excessive compensation to certain railway systems which comprise the larger part of the transportation facilities of the United States. I pointed out the basis of my conviction in this regard when the bill was before the Senate.

If it were necessary, in order to continue Government operation, that we should agree to the monstrous and indefensible authority that is here given with regard to compensation, I might be able to yield my opposition to the standard proposed, in view of the larger and more imperative need of Government operation and general unification. But it is not necessary, in order to put the Government into possession of this property and to operate it for all the people and for the purposes of the successful prosecution of the war, that we should pay the railroads the sums of money that are here authorized. It is not necessary to rob the people of this country in order to give the Government authority to use these facilities for its own high needs and purposes. We are doing that without any necessity at all; and we are really doing it, as I believe—I assume that those who are in favor of doing it are honestly convinced that we are but offering fair compensation—because the railway companies have threatened that if we offer a less compensation they will not accept the offer and we will be compelled to resort to the courts in order to ascertain what is fair and just compensation for the use of the property. No one appreciates more fully than I do that it is desirable that agreements shall be made in order to avoid a resort to the courts; but that desirability ought not to coerce us into an offer of which, although this bill was under debate for days and days, I have yet to hear a single defense save the one that I have just suggested.

Under the circumstances I can not bring myself to vote for a bill which is intended simply to provide compensation, or largely so, which tenders to some of the railway companies a reward for the use of their property which shocks my moral sense and which, in my judgment, will shock the moral sense and arouse the indignation of all the people of the United States when they become familiar with the facts which underlie the problem which we are engaged in solving.

I believe that the injustice that is proposed in this bill will do more to sow the seeds of discontent among the people of the country than any measure which has been proposed in Congress since the war began; and if I understand the prosecution of the war aright it is bottomed, and it must be bottomed, upon a conviction on the part of the great body of the people that the Government intends to be just and fair with them. Once you firmly plant in their minds the belief that this Government has calmly and deliberately decided to pay excessive and unfair compensation to these railway companies in order that we may use them in the great emergency which confronts us, you will have dampened beyond repair the ardor and the enthusiam of the people in the prosecution of the great undertaking in which we are engaged. It is just as essential that we be just and fair and right and honest in our dealings with all these properties and with their relations to the people of the country as it is to gather armies together in order to fight our way to victory. If I know anything with regard to the temper of the men who must do the fighting and the men who must supply the sinews of war, the men upon whose shoulders must rest the vast fabric we are creating in order to win what we believe to be a righteous victory, they will resent the thing that is here proposed.

This is my first objection to the conference report and to the bill. I do not look with as much complacency as some people seem to do upon the proposal to pay what I regard as a compensation which, in the aggregate, if the war lasts five years, including the period after the war, will amount to a billion dollars more than would be awarded in any court; a billion dollars more than can be defended by any course of reasoning or any facts which the history of transportation in this country has developed.

There are a great many other objections. Those of us who heard the analysis of the bill made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] when it was under consideration originally can not have forgotten how awkward and inapt and unintelligible many of the provisions of the measure are.

But my second objection is that the conference committee has stricken out the saving provision of section 4. In our committee, as it will be remembered, some of us struggled very earnestly for a provision which would deny to the railway companies the right to a return upon property created out of a surplus after the payment of dividends, after capital had been fully rewarded, including, of course, the cost of maintenance and operation and depreciation, and including interest and every other fixed charge and then a reasonable dividend besides upon capital. We believe, and I think every student of the subject believes, that the surplus which remains and which the railway companies may devote to additions and extensions and enlargements of property should not be made the basis of thereafter taxing the people again for the use of that property. Already the people in rates have contributed the sum necessary to create the property after fully rewarding capital. I will not pause to discuss now the question whether railway companies should be permitted to accumulate surplus for enlargements. I am not contending that they should not be permitted when they are in private operation to accumulate a surplus, but if they do accumulate a surplus and if that surplus is used in the enlargement and betterment of property which is to be devoted to public use they are not entitled to make the people who paid the money originally to pay again by way of reward upon the values thus created.

In the bill as it passed the Senate there was a partial recognition of that just principle, and I may be allowed to read it. Section 4 of the bill as it passed the Senate provided:

> That the just compensation that may be determined as hereinbefore provided by agreement, or that may be adjudicated by the Court of Claims, shall be increased by an amount reckoned at a reasonable rate per centum to be fixed by the President upon the cost of any additions and betterments, less retirements, and upon the cost of rate extensions to the property of such carrier made by such carrier with the approval of or by the President while such property is under Federal control.

We added in the committee and the Senate preserved the provision upon its passage here:

> Provided, That there shall be no increase of compensation for any additions, improvements, or betterments constructed out of or purchased by the earnings for investment or surplus earned during the period of Federal control.

That was a partial acknowledgment of the principle for which we contended. I thought it ought to have gone indefinitely into the future, and that the property created out of surplus so earned ought never to be made the basis of fixing rates; in other words, that that was a value which was so charged with a public use and had been so created out of funds of the people that it ought not be reckoned in determining the value of the property upon which the carrier was entitled to a fair return.

But the committee and the Senate saw fit to limit the application of the principle to the period of control; and while they did not grant the full claim, as I thought it ought to be granted, nevertheless it was a step in the right direction and was a fair appreciation of an honest and an upright adjustment between carriers and the public.

I find, however, that the conference committee has permitted that provision to be eliminated, and now all surplus, no matter how great it may be, no matter how fully or how lavishly capital may have been rewarded or how large the dividend may have been, under the bill as it is, if the carriers or the Government use any part of this surplus, the result of rates paid by those to whom service is rendered in the betterment or the extension or in additions to the property which is used, compensation for use is immediately increased by a rate per cent to be fixed by the President.

It is utterly impossible to give assent to a proposal so shockingly unjust and which is so at war with every conception which I hold of the relation between public carriers and the people.

My third objection relates to section 10, which provides for rate making. I do not regard the defense which is made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] as adequate. I fear that he is using an unquestioned defect in the interstate commerce law to quiet the qualms of his conscience.

I think he realizes as well as any Senator can how utterly unfair it is to speak of the rate-making power as a power to be exercised by the President personally, because we all know that the President can not in view of his duties make railway rates or initiate railway rates. Let me tell you who will make the railway rates, and I am not speaking fancifully. Who is determining the policy of the railway companies in this particular? First, there is a very eminent railway man of the highest capacity, of approved competency, a man who has brought his own property to the highest state of perfection, a Mr. Smith, who is president of the New York Central system. I say not a word with regard to his honor, his desire to be fair, but it should be remembered that he for Mr. McAdoo is managing the eastern district I refer again to Mr. Aishton. Mr. Aishton is a man of integrity; he is the president or general manager—I have forgotten which—of the Chicago & North Western Railway Co., a man who has spent his whole life in the management and the operation of that great property. I think one of the best railways and the most legitimately operated and managed system in the whole country. He directs the management of the Government in the western territory.

I think that a Mr. Markham, vice president of the Illinois Central Railway Co., or one of them, another distinguished man who has rendered most excellent service to his company, is one of the managers of the Government operation in the southern country.

I do not disparage any one of these men. I have the highest admiration for all of them as railway men; but, Mr. President, each one of them has been insisting for years that railway rates are too low. Each one of them has been exerting to my knowledge all the influence that he could command to secure an increase of rates at the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There are other men of the same general type, but do you think that these men can escape the environment in which they have been bred? Do you think they can escape the convictions to which they have been led through their allegiance to their several railway companies and view the rate question from an unprejudiced, impartial standpoint? It is absurd to even suggest that they can.

Yet these men and others of the same general training are the men who will determine whether the railway rates of this country are sufficient to meet the demands of the Government and of the railway companies? Can you have any doubt how they will determine it? If you have any doubt about it I can only ask you to await the development of events and mark my prediction that within six months the railway rates of the United States will be substantially increased in accordance with the view the men who are now managing these properties have entertained for years and years.

Remembering that situation, then mark section 10. I was opposed to section 10 as it was reported by the committee and as it passed the Senate. I believe that the President ought to have the power to initiate rates precisely as carriers now do, because the carriers initiate rates. Nobody else initiates a rate. I thought the President, who is to operate these properties, ought to have power, and I think he would have had the power, even if no word had been said about it in the bill; but I believed then and I believe now that the Interstate Commerce Commission should have the same full, complete, supreme authority over rates for the movement of general commerce that it has exercised in the past.

I recognize the defect in the interstate commerce law. I have known of the difficulties, the delays, the heart-breaking postponements that have occurred in the administration of the interstate commerce law. We all realize this, and I have for years insisted that there ought to be regional commissions that, as the Senator from Illinois said, could sit at the very doors of the people who had complaints to make, and we were gradually forging our way in that direction when this emergency overtook us.

That, however, is no answer to the proposal that we are here giving to the very power which initiates rates the power to finally decide whether they ought to have been initiated or not. We are preserving to the Interstate Commerce Commission only the shadow, the semblance of power. We are saying that upon the challenge of an interested person the Interstate Commerce Commission may take up the question and determine whether the rate so established is reasonable or not.

But, mark you, the President is given the power to initiate the rates. That is, the Director General initiates the rate, Mr. Smith initiates it, Mr. Aishton initiates it, Mr. Markham initiates it, or whoever may be in actual operation of the property, and the rates are to be put into effect at once immediately whenever the Government acting through whatever agency it selects declares the rate in effect, and then under the bill as it passed the Senate the power conferred was given to an aggrieved shipper to file a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the long and wearisome process so graphically described by the Senator from Illinois would go forward with the rate so established and so challenged in full force and effect.

That was bad enough, and I said to the Senate and I repeat now, that it was keeping the promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope, because I did not believe that even that provision would be of great value to the shippers of the country.

Now, mark you, I am not talking about rates for the transportation of troops. I am not talking about rates for the transportation of war materials or Government property, for I agree that the President ought to have complete power over the movement of any Government property and of Government troops.

But I have sought to convince the Senate that as to the great volume of commerce, the business of the people, which has been carried on upon an adjustment of rates, sometimes imperfect, sometimes unjust, but which nevertheless had knit itself together so that it was a fairly harmonized whole—to turn over to the President the power to disarrange that system, to dislocate it, without any hearing, without the least opportunity to those whose whole fortune may be involved in the relation which the rates which have been established by the Interstate Commerce Commission held toward each other—I do not see how you can defend a proposal of that kind, however imperfect the Interstate Commerce Commission may have been in the past.

But let us see now what has been added to that by the conference committee. The conference committee provide—this was in the bill originally—

> After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act: Provided, however—

Now, mark this—

> That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers; operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues, the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

I do not know why we indulge in any farce of that kind. Do you imagine that the Interstate Commerce Commission will fail to accept the proviso which I have just read as a direction to follow the certificate made by the President or by one who is operating the railroads under his authority? If you do, you are more credulous than I can conceive a human being could be. It is perfect folly. It is the intent, it is the plain, manifest purpose of this bill, as it is now framed, to give the President of the United States the conclusive authority—practically conclusive authority—to make the rates which shall be charged for the transportation of persons and property.

So far as I am concerned—and I say it without the least hesitation—I had vastly rather the railway companies themselves should make the rates, without any appeal whatever. That is not to question the honesty or the patriotism of those who are selected to manage these properties; no; but the railway companies would have some care about the future; they would have some regard for the rights which have grown up in particular communities for businesses which have been established under the rates of the past. I assume that they think that at some time these properties will be returned to them, and they would not desire them returned under a maladjustment of rates, however much they might desire them to be returned upon an enhanced adjustment of rates. But no such motive will prevail in the Government operation of these properties in times of war. The needs of the war, the need of revenue, will be the consideration which must move the President. I do not object to that; I do not object to such disposition of the matter as will promote the welfare of the country. If we are to use these railway companies as a single system, if we are to use them for the benefit of the people generally, if we are to use them as instrumentalities of war and not primarily as instrumentalities of commerce, it is a hideous injustice to devolve the burden upon those who may in the meantime pay the freight in the transportation of persons and property in commerce generally.

Can you defend any such course as that? Will any Senator here be heard to say that if this war requires the railroads to be used in a particular way—in an abnormal, unusual, extraordinary way—in order to carry on the war, the men and the women who are dependent upon transportation in carrying forward the ordinary affairs of life shall bear the burden? You know as well as I that a burden of that kind ought to be borne through general taxation and not through railway rates; and yet you propose to say to the Interstate Commerce Committee that in the exercise of what little authority is given to it in determining the justness and the reasonableness of rates, which may be increased by the President, they must take into account the President's certificate that the needs of war require the increase in these rates in the way set forth in the certificate.

I hope, Mr. President, that my earnestness in this matter will not be misunderstood. There is no Senator here who is so anxious to give the President all the authority that he can employ to carry on this war with the utmost vigor and to the completest victory as am I. I have at this moment, as I never had before, a feeling of revenge almost sweeping through my heart against the most vicious military system in the world. I have suffered a loss within a few days from this brutal despotism for which there can be no atonement, and you can always count on me to clothe the President with every power that he can use to make the United States strong and victorious; but I must be the judge and you must be the judge of whether any given power which is asked is necessary or wise to make him strong in the conduct of the war.

It is not necessary that the business of the country shall be destroyed, so far as rates are concerned, to carry on the war successfully. The railroads are in the President's hands—completely in his hands. He can use them as he pleases.

He can direct traffic wheresoever he thinks it ought to move; he can direct the business of this country that touches the war to the exclusion of all other traffic, if he so desires; but why do you want to give him the power to make railroad rates in general?

I presume it is somewhat irrelevant, but I can not help referring to the fact that we have before the Judiciary Committee a bill which proposes to give to the President of the United States the power to transfer the functions of any commission or body to any other commission or body. I am not suggesting what I may do with regard to that bill; but let me ask you what do you think the country will say when you pass this bill, meager as it is in giving the Interstate Commerce Commission authority, if the next day the President shall transfer all the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Secretary of the Treasury? We would then have the anomaly, the almost unthinkable situation, in which the Secretary of the Treasury would make a rate and a shipper would appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury for its revision and modification! I do not know, I have no reason to think, that the President would do that, but it is all tending in the same direction. It all means just what the Senator from Michigan said a few moments ago; it means a reaching for more power, it means a greed for authority that takes advantage of the disinclination of every citizen to question anything that the Commander in Chief desires. The time has come, however, when we must emancipate ourselves from that slavery; the time has come when the Senate of the United States in part must determine what is necessary in order to conduct the war successfully. It will no longer be possible, in my opinion, to set up the standard suggested by the Senator from Michigan and rally around it all those who desire that the war shall be carried forward successfully and to a victorious end. The time has come when the Congress of the United States will clothe the President with every authority that is necessary, in its judgment, to exert every ounce of strength in the conduct of the war, but will deny to him or to any other officer of the Government unusual, extraordinary, and indefensible powers that are not necessary in the conduct of the war.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes, may I interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I have listened, as I always do, with pleasure and profit to the Senator's discussion of questions of this kind. It may be said, and I do say, that, in my opinion, when he discusses them he has a pretty clear idea of what he is talking about and it does sometimes happen, and it may be happening at this instant, that Senators and others discuss questions when they really are not very sure that they know exactly what they are talking about.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have known of instances of that kind.

Mr. STONE. Such things have happened in the experience of all of us.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. STONE. In listening to the Senator I gathered, among other things, that he concludes that there are three instrumentalities that might fix rates—and on the subject of rates I interpolate here that it does seem to me that in this time of war rates on war freight and rates on what the Senator designates as general commercial business are so related one to the other as to make it necessarily often difficult to separate them.

Now, there are three sources of power, as the Senator has indicated, for fixing rates, namely, the President, or, what is the same thing, the Director General in control of the railroads; secondly, the railroad officials themselves; and, thirdly, the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senator has said that while he preferred the Interstate Commerce Commission, as a second preference he would rather that the railroads themselves would fix rates than to have the President do it or the Director General do it, and he thought that the railroad officials themselves would do it to better purpose, because they would contemplate the future; they would recognize existing obligations between the carrying companies and communities, and all that.

Now, between the President or the Director General upon the one hand as an extreme and the Interstate Commerce Commission upon the other as the extreme come the railroads themselves, through their officials, fixing the rates. Mr. Smith, of the New York Central; Mr. Aishton, of the Chicago & North Western; and the other eminent railroad officials named by the Senator are in this very work in conjunction with Secretary McAdoo, as Director General, cooperating with him. The Senator, if he will recall, said that these men had been educated for years along the line of thought of increased rates, and that it would be difficult for them to separate themselves from that environment, and yet he thought he would rather leave it to them than to the Director General. Since they are allied and associated together in this work, I submit to the Senator—I am not joining issue with the Senator; I am submitting this to his thought—that you have these experienced railroad officials, who would be your second choice in fixing the rates, associated with the Government official in control, working in concert to fix rates. You have the two.

I am about through. I wish to say this: I submit that it is important that decisions, in the circumstances of the times, must ordinarily be made quickly. They can not be delayed with long hearings. They make them. It is a temporary arrangement for the period of the war. Now, is not that really better than to have all these things go to the Interstate Commerce Commission to be thrashed out? Although the conclusion in the end might be better, yet for the purposes of the present, the war emergency, is it not better that it should be left to the joint action of the railroad officials and the Director General than to have complaints lodged with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and long hearings that will probably occupy not only weeks but months before a decision is reached?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Missouri fully comprehended the statement that I made; and on account of that failure to fully apprehend my meaning, I think he has given a very fair illustration of the thought with which he began his remarks.

The railroad companies have no right now to fix rates.

Mr. STONE. No; I know that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Or to initiate rates.

Mr. STONE. I know that.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is only the operator of a property that can initiate rates, or at least that ought to initiate rates; and the railroad companies are not particularly interested in rates until the properties are returned to them. What I said, or what I meant to say, but I may not have clearly expressed myself, was that I would rather, when the railroad companies have the right to initiate rates, trust to them without the intervention of the Interstate Commerce Commission, than to trust to the Government in a time like this without the intervention of the Interstate Commerce Commission, because the plan, the object to be obtained on the part of the Government, can not in the very nature of things result in fair and reasonable rates, at least viewed from the standpoint that we have heretofore occupied.

Of course, if these railroads are to be made the instrumentality for raising revenue instead of taxation in the ordinary sense, then we are doing indirectly what the Senator from Missouri would not venture to do directly, namely, trying to give to the President the power of taxation. I suppose that there is nothing in the Constitution nowadays that would prevent Congress, if it were asked to do it, from delegating to the President the absolute power of taxation, if it were suggested that it was necessary in order to carry on the war successfully, and yet I hope that there are still some Members of Congress who have enough regard for that ancient, if obsolete, instrument to insist that Congress must still levy the taxes through which we are to carry on the war.

No, Mr. President; there is no necessity for a change in the rates that govern and control general commerce. The railroad companies themselves now file hundreds of thousands of tariffs every year. They go into effect at the end of 30 days or 60 days. They are not disturbed at all unless the commission itself desires to suspend them, or unless some one challenges them by way of a petition; and my desire was to leave this matter in just that way for the future.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator whether he considers the Interstate Commerce Commission an executive department, or is it not rather a legislative agency, quasi judicial?

Mr. CUMMINS. Plainly the latter.

Mr. OVERMAN. Quasi judicial. The Senator then says it is not, in his judgment, an executive agency?

Mr. CUMMINS. I say it is entirely legislative, although it performs functions which are judicial in their character.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then I understand the Senator to say that it is a legislative agency, judicial in its character. That is my understanding of it, and I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The line is not easily drawn.

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Interstate Commerce Commission is a part of the legislative branch of the Government. It is a commission to which Congress has delegated one of its legislative powers. Now, we could do the same thing; we could do just what the Interstate Commerce Commission has been doing. We could hold hearings, and we could fix rates; and in doing that, although our duties would be somewhat judicial in their character—some phases of the matter, anyhow, would be judicial in character—we would be performing a legislative function; and I think the Interstate Commerce Commission performs a legislative function.

Mr. OVERMAN. I fully agree with the Senator. I do not consider it an executive agency.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not, either.

Mr. OVERMAN. Probably, then, when the Senator construes the bill as he has done on the floor of the Senate to-day, he will support the bill now before the Judiciary Committee, because he will find, I think, that it only provides for the redistribution of executive functions.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ought to have modified what I said. I heard the bill discussed a moment this morning and what I asserted as to its meaning seemed to be the prevalent opinion of some Senators who were in the meeting of the committee. If I am in error with regard to that, and if upon examining the bill more fully I find that the power does not extend to such cases as I have instanced, I shall be very glad to correct my statement.

Mr. President, I beg the pardon of the Senate for consuming any such length of time as this, and especially I hope that I may continue in the good will of the chairman of the committee, who, I know, is very anxious to dispose of the report; but I could not feel that my duty was fully performed until I had stated why I could not support this measure. I only hope that I may be given an opportunity to vote against it in such a way that there may be no doubt about my convictions in the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of repeating or reiterating the objections which I have heretofore made to this particular bill, but that I may in some fashion go upon record as against the bill and as against the conference report.

There was no yea-and-nay vote upon the bill. I hope there will be one upon the conference report; but for fear that there might not be a yea-and-nay vote upon the conference report I wanted to record my objection and opposition, both to the bill and to the conference report.

I shall not attempt to state at all my objections. Suffice it to say that, in my opinion, the bill is so unfair and unjust to the people and so outrageously generous to the railroad companies that its enactment into law is shameful and iniquitous. For the reasons which have been so very well given by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] this afternoon, which I wholly indorse, for the reasons that have been voiced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and those that I endeavored to state when the bill was before the Senate, I wish to go upon record against the bill and against the conference report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the conference report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Martin	Shields
Baird	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Hollis	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smoot
Curtis	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Stone
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Sutherland
Fletcher	Kellogg	Pittman	Swanson
Frelinghuysen	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Gallinger	Knox	Robinson	Townsend
Gore	Lewis	Shafroth
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. GERRY, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. STERLING, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. KIRBY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, just a word.

I voted against this bill when it was before the Senate because I knew it was not necessary for full Federal control of the railroads and it had been changed from its original object. Instead of a bill to facilitate Federal operation for war purposes, it became a measure calculated to facilitate politics; at least it was full of such possibilities. I was willing to pass a bill which would expedite the settlement with the railroads, but very much opposed to the foreign matter put in the bill. I was placed upon the conference committee by the Senate and felt it my duty to sustain the contention of the Senate, and I did that to the best of my ability. I signed the conference report to the Congress, and then I felt at liberty to vote my convictions. I believe the bill to be against the best interest of the people, and shall therefore vote against it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate at any length. I had intended to submit my views with reference to the merits of this measure. I am simply going to content myself by saying that I agree with the criticisms which have been made upon the measure. I think it is unfair and unjust to the people of the country, but that the country may have whatever benefit may come from as nearly a unanimous vote, and as this is a measure which seems necessary in the conduct of the war I am going to vote for the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is much in this bill that I do not approve, but it is the best I see any chance for us to get out of the situation. I shall therefore vote for it while not agreeing to a great deal that is in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who is detained from the Senate by illness. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is necessarily absent, due to serious illness in his family.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent from the Senate and is paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMPSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], occasioned by illness; and of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], owing to illness, and would say that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] authorized me to state that he would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. KELLOGG. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 8, as follows:

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 14, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 13, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God our Heavenly Father, creator, upholder, sustainer of all, bring us by Thy holy influence into a closer communion with Thee, that we may be guided in all the transactions of this day by Thy Spirit; and follow the dictates of our conscience in all that we undertake, that we may be satisfied with our conduct and receive the approbation of Thy will; and thus be faithful servants of the Master, who taught us the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent that——

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. RAKER. Then I move——

The SPEAKER. Move what?

Mr. RAKER. I move, under the direction of the Committee on Woman Suffrage——

The SPEAKER. You can not do it on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. RAKER. What? Not move to transfer a bill?

The SPEAKER. No, sir.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-day. I believe gentlemen of the House understand the importance of getting the legislative bill through, so that the railroad conference report, the war finance bill, and other legislation can be enacted. I will say to the House that it will be very important for us to pass by April 23 or 24 a new bond bill.

Mr. MADDEN. And the Post Office salary bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that is coming up, too. I hope no Member will object.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what is coming up?

The SPEAKER. The war finance bill and the Madden postal increase bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is, if we do away to-day with Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. If you do away with Calendar Wednesday, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee goes on with the legislative appropriation bill. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COPIES OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF ACT.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 39 (H. Rept. No. 378).

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 250,000 copies of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, of which 75,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 175,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the same to be distributed through the folding rooms.

Mr. BARNHART. Question!

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The question is on the adoption of the House concurrent resolution.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to.

OFFICIAL GRAIN STANDARDS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana offers another privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 256.

Resolved, That there be printed as a House document 1,600 copies of hearings before the Director of the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, relating to official grain standards of the United States, on December 27, 1917, at Washington, D. C., for the use of the document room of the House of Representatives.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "1,600 copies of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know why it is necessary for the House to authorize the printing of these regulations. The Department of Agriculture has an allowance for printing, and it seems to me, unless there is some special reason why it should otherwise be, the House should not be asked out of its appropriations to print these regulations with reference to grain.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that I would say that the intention of the resolution is to print the hearings held recently at Minneapolis before a grain association there, at which a Government representative and an Agricultural Department representative and a United States food-control representative were present. The resolution is by Mr. STEENERSON and affects very largely his locality in the Northwest.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the resolution subject to amendment?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to offer an amendment to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not offer it now.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman yielded the time.

Mr. FOSTER. These hearings, as I understand, were taken by the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Agricultural Department print these hearings at all, or does it depend upon Congress to do the printing?

Mr. BARNHART. I understand these hearings are not available for distribution.

Mr. FOSTER. And they have no fund with which to print these hearings?

Mr. BARNHART. That is my understanding.

Mr. MONDELL. How large a volume would it make?

Mr. BARNHART. I can not tell. It is still in manuscript form. I know what the cost is. The cost is $205.66.

Mr. MONDELL. For how many copies?

Mr. BARNHART. Sixteen hundred copies.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is a very important thing for the farmers of the country. I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the amendment reported by the Clerk, it was to strike out the words "sixteen hundred." I wish to inquire how many copies will be printed under the resolution with the amendment as reported by the Clerk?

Mr. BARNHART. The striking out of the words "sixteen hundred" merely makes it a House document. That means 1,326 copies.

Mr. FOSTER. These will not go through the folding room?

Mr. BARNHART. No; through the document room.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, there are a great many Members who, I judge, would probably have no use for them.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. None in the world.

Mr. FOSTER. And it would be a waste to distribute these to them; and those Members who are especially interested in these documents ought to have them.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask to withdraw the resolution for the time being.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws the resolution.

CONDEMNATION OF LANDS FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that S. 3994, now on the Speaker's table, be laid before the House. An exactly similar bill was reported prior to the time that this bill came to the Speaker's desk, and I am instructed by formal action of the Military Affairs Committee, which reported the bill, to call this up.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, we could not understand the number of t' bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. S. 3994.

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, let the bill be reported.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (S. 3994) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That page 1, line 8, of an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding, after the word "camps," the following: "and for the construction and operation of plants for the production of nitrates and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operation of such plants," so that the same when amended will read as follows:

"That hereafter the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States, in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings, for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, temporary use thereof or other interest therein, or right pertaining thereto, needed for the site, location, construction, or prosecution of works for fortifications, coast defenses, military training camps, and for the construction and operation of plants for the production of nitrate and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operations of such plants; such proceedings to be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the States wherein the proceedings may be instituted: Provided, That when the owner of such land, interest, or rights pertaining thereto shall fix a price for the same which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, shall be reasonable, he may purchase or enter into a contract for the use of the same at such price without further delay: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States donations of land and the interest and rights pertaining thereto required for the above-mentioned purposes: And provided further, That when such property is acquired in time of war, or the imminence thereof, upon the filing of the petition for the condemnation of any land, temporary use thereof or other interest therein or right pertaining thereto to be acquired for any of the purposes aforesaid, immediate possession thereof may be taken to the extent of the interest to be acquired and the lands may be occupied and used for military purposes, and the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, providing that no public money shall be expended upon such land until the written opinion of the Attorney General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the legislature of the State in which the land is located has been given, shall be, and the same are hereby, suspended during the period of the existing emergency."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the bill. The matter is not privileged.

Mr. BORLAND. I will ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw his request at this time, because there seems to be very little prospect of getting immediate consideration of it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that this bill was on the House Calendar. It is simply a bill authorizing condemnation proceedings. It seems to me it ought to have been on the House Calendar, but I have just been informed that it is on the Union Calendar, and of course I would not have any right to call it up if it is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it ought to be on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. DENT. I would like to make a brief statement, and then I will withdraw my request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will take time to explain the bill fully.

Mr. DENT. This is the fourth occasion on which I have tried to get this bill passed. Whatever may have been the differences of opinion on the subject, the President of the United States has located two plants at Muscle Shoals, Ala. There are only two or three people with whom the Government has been unable to make an agreement as to the price of their lands. One of these is a foreigner. The Government expects to manufacture nitrates from the air, and to have that process in actual practical operation by next August. The delay of this bill is holding back the Government in one of the most important of its functions.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. Is it not true that the nitrate-supply committee, composed of Gen. Crozier, Admiral Earl, Dr. Parsons, and several others, have brought in a report to the effect that nitrates can not be procured by hydroelectric power at any time within the present war, and that they can not be procured as cheaply as they can from the by-products of coke ovens?

Mr. DENT. I am not familiar with that report——

Mr. BORLAND. Will not the gentleman consult that report?

Mr. DENT. But I have been informed by the War Department that they expect to manufacture nitrates from the air as early as August next, and we know that as a matter of fact nitrates are being manufactured by that process at Niagara Falls now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Do I understand that this bill, in addition to the nitrate feature of it, is a general condemnation bill?

Mr. DENT. No; it is not. It applies only to nitrates and explosives.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But it seeks to amend the general condemnation bill.

Mr. DENT. The condemnation bill which was passed by this Congress at the last session provides for the condemnation of land for camps, for cantonment purposes, for fortification, and for coast-defense purposes. This bill simply adds a provision for the condemnation of land for plants for the production of nitrates and the manufacture of explosives.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The reason I ask the question is this: An attempt is being made to take by condemnation 5,000 acres of land belonging to a tribe of Indians and add that 5,000 acres to 75,000 acres presented to the Government by one county in the State of Washington. These Indians do not want to lose that 5,000 acres.

Mr. DENT. This would not affect that. If the gentleman will examine House bill 8409, he will find on page 2, after line 16, in italics, the exact amendment:

> And for the construction and operation of plants for the production of, nitrate and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operations of such plants.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thank the gentleman. I have no desire at all to delay his bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he has been informed that nitrogen will be made by the arc process within a few months?

Mr. DENT. By the cyanamid process.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But does the gentleman claim that it is the Muscle Shoals project?

Mr. DENT. The plant has been located at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. ALMON. The only effect of this bill, as stated by Mr. DENT, is to amend the condemnation act of July 2, 1917, so as to authorize the Government to acquire by condemnation proceedings lands needed for the construction and operation of plants for the production of nitrates and other compounds and the manufacture of explosives and other munitions of war and for the development and transmission of power for the operation of such plants. It is purely a war measure, and it is exceedingly important that it be passed without further delay, for the reason that the nitrate plants provided by the act of Congress approved June 3, 1916, have been located by the President and are in process of construction—one of them, plant No. 1, at Sheffield, Ala., and the other, plant No. 2, near by at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River.

The Government has not been able as yet to purchase some of the lands necessary for the building and operation of these plants, and it will be necessary to institute condemnation proceedings. The bill provides that such condemnation proceedings shall be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the States wherein the proceedings may be instituted. So the owners of such lands will be paid in accordance with the awards in the condemnation proceedings.

The title to some of the lands needed by the Government at these plants is in minors, and condemnation proceedings will be necessary in order for the Government to acquire title.

In answer to the questions propounded by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], would say that whatever may have been the report of the Nitrate Supply Committee, the President of the United States has located the nitrate plants in accordance with the act of Congress—one at Sheffield, Ala., and one a few miles away at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River—and I am advised by the representative of the War Department who has charge of the construction of these nitrate plants that it is expected that they will be put into operation not later than the 1st of August, 1918, and that full production is expected to be reached by the 31st of December, 1918, or soon thereafter, when it is expected that 132,000 tons, or 264,000,000 pounds, of ammonium nitrate will be produced per year. It is expected that 15,000 to 20,000 tons, or 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 pounds, of ammonium nitrate will be produced at these plants during this year. While it is true that it will require some time to complete the dam and develop the water power at Muscle Shoals, still arrangements have been made by the Government by which the cyanamide plant at Muscle Shoals will be operated by power brought from another plant over a transmission line while the dam is being constructed.

I am unable to understand why any Member of this House would object to immediate consideration of this bill, its purpose being to aid the Government in its adopted plan of making explosives for the prosecution of the war, the location of the plants and the processes to be used having been agreed upon and determined after almost two years of investigation by the War Department.

Our Government has wisely decided to no longer depend exclusively upon Chile saltpeter or sodium nitrate for the manufacture of explosives for the following among other reasons:

First. That the production of the plants in Chile are limited and are divided between several nations by an international board.

Second. Organized labor trouble there might interfere with the production.

Third. It is shipped along the Pacific coast and through the Panama Canal, and if for any reason the enemy should be able to prevent such shipments our supply would be cut off and we would not have explosives sufficient to conduct the war for a month.

Fourth. On account of the high cost and freight charges.

Fifth. The ships now being used to transport it to the United States are needed in the transportation of troops and supplies to Europe. It is said that 3,000 tons of ammonium nitrate that we produce at home will save a round-trip voyage for a large cargo vessel between the United States and Chile, requiring as much time as it would for this vessel to make two round trips to Europe.

In answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] I would say that this is not a Muscle Shoals project. It is a Government project, primarily, for supplying our Government with explosives for the prosecution of the war, and, secondly, for the manufacture of commercial fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers when not needed for making munitions of war as provided by act of Congress. It is true that the principal plant has been located at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River near the other plant at Sheffield, Ala., and it is presumed that it was so located on account of the advantages of that location. It is the best from a national-defense standpoint, being far distant from the Atlantic coast and the Gulf of Mexico, with all of the raw materials for the manufacture of nitrate in close proximity and in inexhaustible quantities, such as coal, limestone, coke, and phosphate rock. With good transportation facilities both by rail and water, with good climatic conditions, and is the most central point from an agricultural standpoint for the manufacture of commercial fertilizer.

The synthetic process of the General Chemical Co. is to be used in the Sheffield plant and the cyanamide process at the Muscle Shoals plant. German air nitrate plants now have an output of four times the amount contemplated by ours. France is making about twice what our program contemplates. England's air nitrate plants, it is said, will be about what we are planning for.

Whatever may have been the difference of opinion about processes and locations has been settled by the President, and I feel that every Member of this House should want to do everything in his power to put these plants into operation as soon as possible in order to aid in bringing the war to a speedy and successful conclusion.

With this explanation and information, I do not believe that there is a single Member who will oppose the passage of this bill when it properly comes before the House for consideration, which, I hope, can be done at a very early date.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to stop the discussion, but, inasmuch as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is going to withdraw the bill, I think it ought to be done now.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the bill.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 117, amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 117, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina, Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, and Mr. LEHLBACH.

AMENDING SECTION OF THE CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3470 be taken from the Committee on Military Affairs and referred to the Judiciary Committee. It was improperly referred. That is satisfactory to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, and I make this request with his consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the bill S. 3470 and the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RENT PROFITEERING.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this morning Gen. Chamberlain called me up by telephone and told me that Gen. Black, who is at the head of the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States, is now in France; that he left behind him here when he went away his wife—God bless her—quite ill with pneumonia. His wife is still ill but convalescent. Gen. Chamberlain further states that Gen. Black for two years has been renting premises 1730 I Street NW., in this city, for which he is paying $100 per month. He says, further, that through the real estate agency of William Corcoran Hill a man named McGee, who is the owner of that property, has served notice that next month the rent will be increased to $250 a month, and that thereafter the premises will only be leased by the month.

In this connection I wish to state that the United States Government owns the premises upon which the Washington Market is located on Pennsylvania Avenue. For these premises the Washington Market is paying the United States $7,500 a year That company has grown patriotic to the extent that some floor space for which it has no particular use is now being leased to the United States for $8,000 a year—$500 more than they pay for all of it. [Laughter.]

Further, the United States is lending money to Great Britain, our most important ally. The Munsey Trust Co. is charging Great Britain $3 per square foot for office space in its building on Pennsylvania Avenue. In my remarks day before yesterday I stated that the Munsey Trust Co. had notified the United States that on the 1st of July the space for which the United States is now paying $10,000 would be charged for at the rate of $31,500 a year.

Yet these three unholy profiteers seem to have their supporters and apologists here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for half a minute in that connection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am informed that that same space before the war rented for $1 a square foot.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The United States is now paying for the space to which the gentleman refers, in the Munsey Building, $10,000 a year for 10,500 square feet, which is less than $1 a foot. The contemplated increased rate is $3 a square foot.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. House Document No. 848 seems to have been improperly referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Without objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Flood Control. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And pending that motion I wish to state to the House that it is the hope and desire of the committee to conclude this bill to-day, and that we can easily do that if the Members of the House will give it their cooperation and stay here until the bill is finished.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the House will be interested also in the further statement that there is now being printed an amendment, which ought to be back here in a very few minutes, dealing with the question of increased pay for employees, and which it is hoped unanimous consent may be obtained for offering. That would leave the matter open for amendments that were germane. Failing that, there will be a request for a rule to make it in order, and it is hoped that the bill now before the committee with this amendment may be considered and acted upon before adjournment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For securing information for census reports, provided for by law, semimonthly reports of cotton production, periodical reports of stocks of baled cotton in the United States and of the domestic and foreign consumption of cotton; quarterly reports of tobacco; per diem compensation of special agents and expenses of same and of detailed employees, whether employed in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere; not to exceed $10,000 for the temporary employment of clerks, stenographers, and machine operators in the District of Columbia, to be selected from the registers of the Civil Service Commission, and to be paid at the rate of not to exceed $100 per month, the same person to be employed for not more than six consecutive months; the cost of transcribing State, municipal, and other records; temporary rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia; for supervising special agents and employment by them of such temporary service as may be necessary in collecting the statistics required by law, including $15,000 for collecting tobacco statistics authorized by law in addition to any other fund available therefor: Provided, That the compensation of not to exceed seven special agents provided for in this paragraph may be fixed at a rate not to exceed $8 per day, $450,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the measure what is the idea of permitting certain employees in connection with the Census Bureau to be employed at a rate not to exceed $8 per day when other work in the same item of apparently similar character is limited to $100 per month?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Those are special agents, in the nature of supervising agents. They have been carried for many years. They are special agents who are specially selected and whose work is in the nature of supervising the work done in the collection of the information by this bureau.

Mr. WALSH. Why are they carried under a per diem compensation? Why are they not on the rolls as the other employees of the Census Bureau?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is for the reason that they do not want annual employees. It is a flexible roll. They may be employed for a portion of the year and their services may not be needed for the remainder.

Mr. WALSH. But they will be needed for the whole of the year pretty soon, when they begin to take the Fourteenth Census, will they not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is quite true, but the gentleman knows that when we once put an employee upon the statutory roll it is a very difficult matter to eliminate him, even though his services may be no longer necessary, and that after this census is taken we would be confronted with the fact that these special agents had been placed on the statutory roll and there might be some trouble in dispensing with their services.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman did not encounter very much difficulty yesterday, although there was some delay, in providing for a reduction of those on the roll in the Pension Bureau, but the answer of the gentleman is sufficient and I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, not having an opportunity to speak when the abolition of the Subtreasuries was under consideration, I want to take this opportunity of doing so. I want to congratulate the members of the Committee on Appropriations for the adroit way in which they handled this fight that finally resulted in the retention of the committee provision in the bill, which abolishes all of the Subtreasuries six months after the treaty of peace shall have been declared. I want to congratulate my serious and nonpartisan friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] for the way in which he handled his side of it. In his adroit way he made an argument to his colleagues on that side of the aisle, a characteristic argument which always appeals to his colleagues, namely, the cracking of the party whip over their heads, and in order to make that argument more profound he by innuendo warned them that if they failed to vote for the retention of this provision they might hit the rocks in the November election.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Not now; I have not the time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The party whip was not heard throughout the Hall, I want to say.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I shall come to that in a minute. The converse of his argument was that if they voted practically as a whole to retain this amendment they might be able in November to get a sight of the promised land and a vision of political pie. In order to reintrench himself and force his position more strongly upon his colleagues, he did not cite Hinds' Precedents, but he cited Mann's precedents, and, of course, when that argument was presented practically all of his colleagues rallied to the standard and retained this provision, except a few among whom my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is one, who has a constituent Subtreasury in his district. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the chairman of this subcommittee. In his unique, characteristic, idiosyncratic, but clerical way he not only appealed to the Members on this side of the House, but he exhorted the entire membership to vote to retain this provision. I voted with him. I am glad that it was retained, but after the motion to strike out was defeated the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] offered an amendment which I had already prepared and would have presented, except for the fact that he first procured the floor, to make this provision to do away with these Subtreasuries operative on or before January 1, 1919, and not to wait until the treaty of peace shall have been declared. What does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] say the functions of these Subtreasuries are? I want to quote a part of his speech that he made on Saturday last, in which he said:

> So I say there is not a single function now performed by these Subtreasuries which is not being performed by other agents of this country to-day.

When the Dyer amendment was offered not a member of this subcommittee raised his voice in behalf of it, and it did not receive a corporal's guard. Why should not that amendment pass? The gentleman from Tennessee says:

> The Subtreasuries could be immediately abolished without the least injury or loss.

The reason he gives why his committee did not provide for the immediate abolition of them is this:

> But to meet the objection of the Assistant Secretary and also to deprive the opposition of the cry that nothing of the kind should be underaken while the war is in progress, the committee has recommended that they be continued until six months after the war.

In order to appease the opinion of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and to mitigate the opposition of those already against the bill, they let it stay in, and let the Dyer amendment be defeated, when the gentleman from Tennessee says it costs the taxpayers of this Government $450,000 a year to maintain these useless things, and the gentleman from Iowa says it costs $600,000 to maintain them, when the two members of the committee admit that they are performing no functions for this Government. Yet the gentleman from Iowa appeals to his colleagues to maintain this section, if for no other reason because of the fact that they are members of that decadent, hungry, nonfunctioning, and impotent political party, the Grand Old Party; in the face of the fact that he says that the people of the country will be taxed to the extent of $600,000 a year to maintain them, and that the Federal reserve bank and the branch Federal reserve banks are performing the service which they claim to perform.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. If I can get more time; yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am in thorough accord with what the gentleman has said about the abolition——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I want to serve notice that there will not be anybody else, while this bill is on, who will speak for over five minutes, and I say that for the benefit of the gentleman from Wyoming, who hardly ever speaks.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman spoke in a parliamentary manner when he does speak possibly he can get an extension.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I was more parliamentary than the gentleman was yesterday.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. KINCHELOE. Much more parliamentary than the gentleman was yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen are out of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Kentucky, who has just spoken, asked unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes, like other Members of the House I had no desire to object, because I believed he was making that request in good faith. There was no suggestion in his request that he intended to make a partisan or political speech. The gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, indicated this morning that he desired to make haste and made the request of all Members, of Members on this side of the House as well as the Members on the other side, that he would like to finish this bill to-day. The gentleman from Tennessee made that request in good faith, and it was so accepted on this side. But the gentleman from Tennessee sat quietly by while the gentleman from Kentucky made his request and made no objection even when the gentleman from Kentucky launched into a political diatribe. Now, I do not know what objection the gentleman from Kentucky has against the Subtreasuries of the United States. If he thinks he can make political capital by a 10-minute speech followed by threats, that nobody else can answer or that no other speeches shall be made without his consent, of course he has the right to make the most of it. I fear, however, that the gentleman from Kentucky can not make political capital out of an attack upon the Subtreasuries of the United States. The Subtreasuries were the direct result of the agitation and of the action of one of the greatest Democrats who ever lived, Andrew Jackson, whose memory seems to have been forgotten by the gentleman from Kentucky. It was Andrew Jackson who desired that a great central bank should not be established in the United States for the control of the money of the United States. He did not want a Wall Street to be a Government agency, but desired that the funds of the Government should be distributed, and distributed through Subtreasuries, the very Subtreasuries the abolition of which is now demanded. What quarrel, therefore, has the gentleman from Kentucky with the Republican Party, which he calls decadent, because some of its members differ upon the question of continuing the Subtreasuries——

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield in five minutes, although I would like to do so. I call to the attention of the gentleman of Kentucky the letter written by the present Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. William G. McAdoo, and which I placed in the RECORD a day or two ago, indorsing the Sub-treasury proposition and insisting that they should not be abolished. The Secretary contended that to destroy the Subtreasuries of the United States would mean to add to rather than retrench the expenses of the Government. I would also call to the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky what evidently he and some others who have been opposing Subtreasuries do not know, that the Federal reserve act which was passed, largely through the influence of the gentlemen on that side of the House, continues the use of the Subtreasuries and provides for their use. They are actually in use to-day, due to this so-called Democratic legislation. Now, it makes no difference to me whether the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to prevent gentlemen from discussing matters of state. He has his rights under the unanimous-consent rule, but we upon this side at least have the right of 5 minutes—though he gets 10 by our sufferance—to say at least this much in response to the attack he has made. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commercial attachés: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, after examination to be held under his direction to determine their competency, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; and for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each and for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, books of reference and periodicals, travel to and from the United States, exchange on official checks, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $125,000: Provided, That not more than $25,000 of the foregoing sum may be used by the Secretary of Commerce, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to officers and employees of the commercial attaché service, in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This commercial-attaché item is carried in this bill, I think, for the fifth time. I had hoped that the Committee on Appropriations would have deemed it wise to eliminate the item from this bill this year with the view of having it carried in another bill, so that the officials themselves might be subject to the Department of State and be officers of the Department of State, where it seems to me they very clearly belong. I do not propose at this time and in this emergency to make any contest upon the retention of these commercial attachés. I have previously in this House voiced my opinion of the subject, and other Members of the House have voiced the same opinion. It does seem to me, however, that we ought to be making up our minds that commercial attachés, however valuable they are potentially as officers of the United States, can not do the kind of service that they ought to do under the Department of Commerce. They ought to be under the Department of State. I have never heard any man whom I considered a competent judge, either in the United States or in other countries which make use of the commercial-attaché service, who did not agree that the Department of State was the one department where these officers could render the most effective service to their country. I have in my hand a very brief extract from an article which recently appeared in the American press and which illustrates the policy of Great Britain in this regard. Great Britain has had these commercial attachés for some years, and the attachés have been under the secretary of state for foreign affairs of Great Britain. The system has worked extremely well, and the commercial attaché in that capacity has proven very valuable, proved so valuable that Great Britain has extended and amplified his work. This brief article illustrates in some detail just what has been done by Great Britain very recently. I should like to have unanimous consent, without taking up the time of the committee to read it, to insert it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the article referred to:

With respect to foreign countries there are three distinct services, namely, the Diplomatic, the commercial attaché, and the Consular Services.

In the past the Consular Service has been overwhelmed with routine, added to which the staffs have generally been insufficient, with the result that the consul has not been able to devote sufficient time to the more important commercial work. In future the posts will be supplied with larger staffs, and in consequence the consuls will have more time at their disposal for dealing with the many important commercial questions.

Again, the consuls who will do the spade work, so important to keep the commercial attachés thoroughly informed will be better paid and will be able to look forward to promotion to the commercial attaché service as a normal reward for the accomplishment of good commercial work; thus they will be given an incentive which has certainly been lacking in the past.

The commercial attaché service, in its proposed form, will be something really new. In the past there have been commercial attachés, but they have had no regular status, nor has there been a regular service of them. Under the new scheme there will be a number of attachés in every country; in some as many as three or four. It will constitute a regular service with grades, and what is more the attachés will carry high diplomatic rank. They will be well paid and granted large local allowances; they will also be given a good staff, and so be free to travel with their attention untrammeled by unnecessary detail. They will return home frequently in order to confer with the sections dealing with their department and with all the business world. In this way the attachés will keep in touch with the Government at home, and in its turn the Government will be kept completely and accurately informed as to the condition of affairs in the countries in which the attachés are stationed.

The commercial attaché in each foreign country will also be virtually the head of the Consular Service in that country, subject to the general control of the ambassador, so that consuls will send in all reports of importance through him. In this way these attachés will know all of importance that is taking place in the country concerned, and consequently will be in a good position to compile the annual report which they will have to send to the Government. In addition to this, they will be responsible for the inspection of the consulates, and the consuls, it should be stated, will have the opportunity of coming home with comparative frequency.

With regard to the appointment of commercial attachés, it is probable that they will eventually be recruited largely from the Consular Service, but at first a considerable number must be appointed from outside.

It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the new department, but, at the same time, the point must not be overlooked that the foreign office will always be in close touch with it. The new department will constitute what may best be described as a training ground in commercial work for the foreign office, Consular Service, commercial attaché and Diplomatic Service, and eventually it will have complete control, subject always to the Secretary of State, of the consular and commercial attaché service.

Mr. WALSH. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that the secretary of state for foreign affairs of Great Britain not only represents the State Department in dealing with foreign nations, but he also performs duties in relation to commercial activities with foreign nations that are now under the supervision of our Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. ROGERS. That may be true in part. There are two cabinet officers of Great Britain in ordinary times, and there may be more in these emergency times, who handle questions of domestic commerce. One is the secretary of state for home affairs and the other is the president of the board of trade.

Mr. WALSH. But is the president of the board of trade a member of the British cabinet?

Mr. ROGERS. He is a member of the British ministry. He may or may not be a member of the cabinet.

Mr. WALSH. But the secretary of state for home affairs does handle commercial matters?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. So that in Great Britain, at least, the duties which are performed by commercial representatives are under the judisdiction of the secretary of state for home affairs or the secretary of state for foreign affairs?

Mr. ROGERS. The secretary of state for foreign affairs, who is a different officer from the secretary of state for home affairs, of course.

Mr. WALSH. They are both members of the state portfolio?

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, no. The secretary of state for home affairs has nothing whatever to do with what we would call State Department matters. He is purely a domestic functionary, although he happens to have historically the name of "secretary of state."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do not all of the cabinet officers of Great Britain have the title of "secretary of state"?

Mr. ROGERS. I think only the secretary of state for home affairs, the secretary of state for war, the secretary of state for foreign affairs, the secretary of state for the colonies, and the secretary of state for India. Our great commercial rivals in the world, either of the past or of the future, have adopted this policy of placing commercial attachés under the state department—Germany, France, Japan, and Great Britain.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I recall the hearings at the time these officers were created. I recall that there was a demand for real commercial agents abroad, whose actions were not governed by those little niceties recognized by the State Department. An establishment or a country that wants to sell its product must make positive statements with regard to it. The product offered must be superior to the product with which it comes in competition or it must be offered at a lower price or it will not find a sale. And the difficulty with the State Department in handling our commercial interests abroad seems to have been that it handled the subject only diplomatically and was unwilling to make positive statements. Their statements have been diplomatic, even to the expense of the American manufacture.

I am reminded in this connection of the story of Rameses, when he was about to abdicate the throne, calling to his side for counsel the man who was to succeed him on the throne, told him to surround himself with real diplomats; that a ruler who would succeed must have around him great diplomats. He said, "You know the difference between a diplomat and a lady. If the diplomat says 'yes' he means 'perhaps,' if he says 'perhaps' he means 'no,' and if he says 'no' he is no diplomat. Whereas if a lady says 'no' she means 'perhaps,' if she says 'perhaps' she means 'yes,' and if she says 'yes' she is no lady." [Applause.]

What we want in the trade extension of our foreign diplomatic service, if we are going to extend our foreign trade, are real representatives who can say yes when they mean yes and no when they mean no, and who can say it with some positiveness and without violating these nice rules of diplomacy.

Mr. WALSH. I wanted to inquire if this is the cigarette man Rameses that the gentleman is talking about? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Rameses is dead, is he not? [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. As an Egyptologist, can the gentleman inform us whether it was Rameses I or Rameses III?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to concur in the views expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] as to commercial attachés and ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Standards: Director, $6,000; physicists—chief $4,800, 1 qualified in optics $3,600, 2 at $3,600 each, 1 $3,300, 3 at $3,000 each; assistant to the Director, $3,600; associate physicists—5 at $2,700 each, 5 at $2,500 each, 4 at $2,200 each, 7 at $2,000 each; assistant physicists—12 at $1,800 each, 13 at $1,600 each, 18 at $1,400 each; chemists—chief $4,800, 1 $3,500, 1 $3,000; associate chemists—3 at $2,700 each, 2 at $2,500 each, 1 $2,200, 4 at $2,000 each; assistant chemists—4 at $1,800 each, 4 at $1,600 each, 6 at $1,400 each; physical chemist, $1,800; laboratory assistants—23 at $1,200 each, 18 at $1,000 each; laboratory helpers—2 at $840 each, 4 at $720 each, 3 at $600 each; aids—14 at $900 each, 16 at $720 each; 20 laboratory apprentices at $540 each; secretary, $2,200; storekeeper, $1,000; librarian, $1,600; chief clerk, $2,200; clerks—1 of class 4, 3 of class 3, 3 of class 2, 8 of class 1, 7 at $1,000 each, 5 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; 2 telephone operators, at $720 each; office apprentices—4 at $540 each, 2 at $480 each, 2 at $420 each; 5 elevator boys at $480 each; mechanicians—chief $1,800, 1 $1,600, 1 $1,500, 2 at $1,400 each, 5 at $1,200 each, 6 at $1,000 each, 1 $900; machinist, $1,200; shop apprentices—2 at $600 each, 2 at $540 each, 3 at $480 each; 8 watchmen; skilled woodworkers—foreman of woodworking shops $1,500, 1 $1,200, 2 at $1,000 each; skilled laborers—2 at $840 each, 5 at $720 each; draftsman, $1,200; photographers—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200; packer, $840; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; superintendent of mechanical plant, $2,500; assistant engineers—1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 2 at $1,200 each, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; 2 pipe fitters at $1,000 each; 5 firemen; glassblowers—1 $1,600, 1 $1,200; glassworker, $1,600; electricians—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 1 $900; foreman of janitors and laborers, $900; 14 laborers; janitors—3 at $660 each, 1 $600; 2 female laborers at $360 each; in all, $432,360.

Mr. DALLINGER and Mr. ROBBINS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS] is recognized.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Here is an increase in this item from $348,000 to $432,360, and in the number of employees from 278 to 342. I want to ask the chairman of the committee—and I make a motion to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking him—to make some explanation of that wonderful increase in the amount expended and of the employees of the Bureau of Standards. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, too.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that this paragraph provides for an increase of 72 new employees, and the aggregate salaries will amount to $87,200. Those employees range from men of high technical skill down to laborers and messengers. The gentleman is, of course, aware of the work that is being done by the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to state that I am not aware of it. That is what I want to find out. I can see the number of employees and the difference in the appropriation, but that gives me no information as to what is the necessity for it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that in a report submitted by the Director of the Bureau of Standards for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1917, he will find a very full statement, covering 158 pages, showing the various investigations made by this bureau and the work performed by it during the fiscal year. It is one of the most important bureaus in the Government.

Now, in addition to that, I will say that since the war began there has been an extraordinary increase of work on the part correctly, that at the present time 90 per cent of the work being done by the bureau was being done in connection with the War and Navy Departments and the war activities. That is, of course, done in connection with the research laboratories for these two departments, investigating and testing the various supplies furnished the Government, establishing standards, and furnishing very valuable and necessary information to those departments with reference to the supplies furnished.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The work has largely increased, has it not, since the war began?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was just saying that the Director of the Bureau of Standards states that 90 per cent of the work of this bureau is now being done on account of the war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The fact is that the liberty motor was finally completed there, was it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. The liberty motor was tested at the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. ROBBINS. I know that it was tested there. I was there at the time. I observed not the actual tests, but they were resetting the motor when I was there. Do these tests of war materials made of the samples submitted for the various contracts for supplies take place before the property is accepted?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; they do, and in addition to that they test all construction material, concrete and steel, and all the materials that go into the various buildings erected by the Government, when called upon.

Mr. ROBBINS. Do they test the steel there for armor plate and guns and gun carriages and cloth for uniforms?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They test the cloth that goes into the uniforms.

Mr. ROBBINS. I understand, and it is commonly asserted, that the cloth is 50 per cent shoddy and 50 per cent wool. Is it as a result of their tests that such cloth is accepted by the Government?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What they do is to test the cloth submitted to them, and it goes into the uniforms; and they give to the department in charge information as to just what it is, as to its durability, and so forth.

Mr. ROBBINS. The acceptance of the cloth, then, rests with the purchasing departments of the Government, and not with the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. The Bureau of Standards has nothing to do with that.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the explanation made, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is in the hands of the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 135, line 24, after the figures "$900," strike out the words "two pipe fitters, at $1,000 each," and insert "two pipe fitters, one at $1,400 and one at $1,000."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this is not a salary fixed by statute, but it is simply raising a salary under $1,800, and therefore, in accordance with the practice of the House, the amendment which I have offered is in order. I trust that the gentleman from Tennessee will not press his point of order, and that he will accept this amendment.

I understand that Dr. Stratton, the Director of the Bureau of Standards, recommended this increase and also recommended that one of the woodworkers be raised to $1,500 and one of the electricians be raised to $1,400, both of which recommendations were acted upon favorably by the committee.

I have a letter in my hand from this head pipe fitter, which I desire to read in part, because it seems to me that to refuse his request is to indulge in a parsimonious economy which the Congress of the United States ought not to be guilty of. It is a very well written letter, showing that he is a man of education. He says:

In the report on the legislative bill the position of pipe fitters, Bureau of Standards, at $1,400, was stricken out. I feel that the committee were not fully acquainted with the conditions under which this item was asked for, so beg leave to submit the following for consideration. At present I am drawing a salary of $1,000 per annum and have full responsibility for all work in connection with installation, inspection of and repair of plumbing, heating, and apparatus work, including the power plant. We are paying $5 per day to temporary plumbers and $5.25 for steam fitters, and owing to the vast amount of work have been carrying them for over two years. Helpers are drawing $2.80 and plumbers' laborers $4 per day.

Now, I know that in the other cities of the country the ordinary journeyman plumber receives twice as much as you are paying this man for the supervising work. It seems to me that to pay at this time, with the cost of living what it is, the man who is supervising the plumbing and heating and the power-plant repairs in this Bureau of Standards $1,000 and refuse his request for $1,400 is something that the Committee on Appropriations ought not to do, particularly in view of the favorable recommendation of the Director of the Bureau.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. For a week past the Committee on Appropriations has been abused because it saw fit, in its judgment, to suggest to the House, subject to the approval of the House, certain increases of salary. We were told that the Committee on Appropriations was an appropriating committee and not a legislative committee. Now, I suggest to the gentleman that his quarrel rests with a great many committees that do not work as many hours through the month and year as the Committee on Appropriations—committees that have jurisdiction to deal with this matter without being subject to being held up at the instance of any single member of the committee. It seems to be the policy of the House that the Committee on Appropriations shall not increase any salaries whenever it suits anybody to object.

If that rule is to be enforced, it must be enforced all along the line, and the Committee on Appropriations will not be increasing anybody's salary.

Mr. DALLINGER. I want to say that I do not know what other Members of the House are guilty of, but the gentleman from Kentucky can not point to an instance where I have ever objected to a raise in the pay of a Government employee. I do not know of a single case where I have objected to the raising of the pay of a Government employee who is doing his work creditably.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not quarreling with the gentleman's statement at all. The Committee on Appropriations tries as best it can to perform its duties, and it has seen fit in a limited number of cases, where there were special reasons urged, to bring in items increasing salaries. We have been met with severe criticism and points of order made on all those.

Now I submit that if this committee, after investigation, is not to be allowed to recommend any increases, certainly the individual Member, without that consideration, ought not to recommend an increase.

Mr. DALLINGER. I am simply calling attention to the fact of the discrimination made against this man. The other two men were recommended for increases by the Director of the Bureau of Standards were given the desired raise by your committee, and no objection was made to it. It seems to me that this man is entitled to the same treatment. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The bureau heretofore has had one pipe fitter at $1,000. The Director of the Bureau of Standards did request that an additional position of pipe fitter at $1,400 be allowed. The committee felt that if it allowed that position he should be paid the same salary that is now being paid to the pipe fitter who is employed at the present time; and for that reason in granting his request for two pipe fitters, the committee fixed the salary of both at $1,000, thinking it proper to fix the same salary for each, because they are to do the same character of work. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] to the fact that it is certain that before this bill is concluded there will be an amendment proposed which will allow a general increase for Government employees, which will take care of the situation of which the gentleman complains, at least to a certain extent.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he thinks it is right that a man who has been here in the Government service for years, who has charge of the plumbing and heating work and apparatus, including the power plant in those buildings up there, should continue to receive the pittance of $1,000 a year, which is very much less than what is paid to the men that he picks up in the street to help on the work?

That is just the situation exactly. He is paying very much more to these journeymen whom he calls in to work under his supervision than he is getting himself. In my home city in Massachusetts there are plumbers who are to-day getting regularly twice what this man is getting from the United States Government for supervising the work in these buildings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. These particular individuals do not have charge of the electrical work in connection with the bureau, because the Bureau of Standards has an electrician. In addition to that, it has a number of mechanicians, one drawing $1,800, one $1,600, one $1,500, two at $1,400, five at $1,200, six at $1,000, and one at $900. Now, as I stated a moment ago, this pipe fitter only looks after the pipes. The committee felt that it would be making an unwarranted discrimination to allow two pipe fitters at different salaries; so it granted the request of the Director of the Bureau of Standards and gave him an additional pipe fitter, but placed him at the same salary as the one now employed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order that was reserved?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DALLINGER) there were—ayes 13, noes 24.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To investigate the dangers to life and property due to the transmission of electric currents at high potentials, and the precautions to be taken and the best methods of construction, installation, and operation to be followed in the distribution and return of such currents, in order to reduce to a minimum such dangers; also to investigate the best means of protecting life and property from lightning, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As to the paragraph—

To investigate the best means of protecting life and property from lightning, including personal services—

And so forth, what knowledge has the gentleman as to the progress that this bureau is making along these lines?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This investigation is not confined exclusively to the danger to life and property from lightning.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It applies to all electrical currents.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that, but I am wondering what progress they are making. The Agricultural Department issues bulletins on this subject, and I wonder what progress they are making in reference to this matter in the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As the gentleman will observe, this appropriation has been carried for about five years.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I know that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. During that time investigations have been made by the Bureau of Standards, and I can best answer the gentleman, I think, by reading to him what the Director of the Bureau of Standards, Dr. Stratton, had to say on the subject. He said this:

The increase there is due very largely, almost entirely, to the demands made upon the bureau for information regarding the proper way to install high-potential work. A great deal of this is coming in from the military departments now, but its greatest importance is in connection with the public-utilities commissions and the public-service commissions all over the country. It has to do with the installation of the high-tension wires and protection from lightning—general work of that kind. It has proven one of the most useful lines of work that the electrical department of the bureau has taken up. The question of the distribution of high-potential power circuits in the cities is growing every day, and the cities are looking to us for a statement of what is good practice—what should be allowed under those conditions.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember that this item went into the bill a few years ago, with the idea of investigating the danger from fires and so on from electrical currents; but as to this provision concerning lightning, I wondered what they had done with that. From the reading, I take it that they have done nothing except in connection with these utility plants.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; in connection with utility plants, and also, as the director states, he is having many requests which come to him from the Military Department.

Mr. FOSTER. While I am on the floor let me ask as to the next item, that has not been read, for the continuation of the investigation of structural material. Does that apply only to stone, clay, and cement, in so far as building operations are concerned?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Any material that is used in putting up structures.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not apply to the use of clays in porcelain ware or anything of that kind?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; it does not. It is confined altogether to building or structural materials. I may say that the director of the bureau states that the bureau has done more testing and examination for the War Department in the past month or two along this line than it did in the whole previous year.

Mr. FOSTER. I just wanted to inquire about the other. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HAMLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has recommitted to the committee of conference the report of the committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FLOOD). The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To study methods of measurement and technical processes used in the manufacture of pottery, brick, tile, terra cotta, and other clay products, and the study of the properties of the materials used in that industry, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph, beginning with line 5, on page 139. As I understand from the reading of it, this is to make investigations of technical processes in the manufacture of brick, tile, terra cotta, and other clay products. Now, there are established throughout the country certain stations which make investigations of materials of different kinds, among them clay. There is now established at Columbus, Ohio, an experiment station in reference to clays and the whole subject relating thereto, and I wondered why it was necessary to permit the Bureau of Standards to go ahead with that kind of work, too. It has been especially provided by law that the Bureau of Mines shall make these investigations, and yet we carry in this bill a provision for doing that same kind of work here in the city of Washington or wherever they may desire to use it.

We have a station established in connection with the State University of Ohio, where a great amount of clays are located within the State, where they are manufacturing a great deal of pottery. Here we appropriate $20,000 for another establishment to go ahead with the same work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. This item is similar in phraseology to that carried in previous years. I recall the testimony of Dr. Stratton given last year or the year before in justification of this work that the bureau is doing. For myself, I was unaware that any other Government activity was pursuing work of a similar character. Will the gentleman inform the committee, for its information and for the subcommittee, as to the special work being performed by the branch at the University of Ohio under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not remember, but two or three years ago there was a bill passed providing for the establishment of mine rescue stations and mine experiment stations and providing for the establishment of these stations for investigating the clays. Under that authority the Secretary of the Interior has established mining experiment stations throughout the West and also established one at Columbus, Ohio, because the State university was glad to cooperate with the Government, furnish the buildings, and so on.

Mr. MADDEN. I am glad that the gentleman has given the reason for the establishment of that experiment station at Columbus, for I was wondering why it was put there.

Mr. FOSTER. For the reason that I have stated, and because it is adjacent to the fields in Ohio where they have a great deal of clay for the manufacture of pottery.

Mr. STAFFORD. What special work is performed in that laboratory?

Mr. FOSTER. Every kind of work that can be connected with the manufacture of articles from clay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are they making research work as to the available clays for pottery purposes, trying to discover new clays in this country that can be utilized in the manufacture of pottery which have heretofore not been utilized?

Mr. FOSTER. That is exactly what they are doing, and making experiments as to checking, which has been a great problem in this country in regard to clay and porcelain ware. They have been doing that kind of work not only in the experiment stations so established, but they were doing it before. Now this bill goes on and gives the same class of work to another Federal bureau, requires it to do the same work that is being done in Ohio. I do not think the Bureau of Standards is authorized to do this kind of work, and I do not think it ought to be done. I do not think we ought to have two bureaus overlapping and doing the same kind of work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there is this that may be said: The Director of the Bureau of Standards states that he is working in close cooperation with the Director of the Bureau of Mines in this particular work. The Bureau of Mines, as the gentleman has stated, is engaged in the location of clay products for the purpose of determining their suitability for manufacture. That is something in which the Bureau of Standards is not concerned. The Bureau of Standards investigates the technical processes of manufacture and tests their value for various purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is the statement they make.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This fund is also used for a different purpose. It is used in connection with the investigation and tests made by the Bureau of Standards in the making of optical glass for lenses, which is a matter of the greatest importance.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be. The Bureau of Standards is not concerned with the manufacture. The Bureau of Standards is concerned with the standardization of these materials and of the finished products. They are not concerned in the manufacture and ought not to be concerned with that in this particular instance, when we already have a station which is doing that kind of work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Bureau of Standards is concerned, if the gentleman will permit, in testing the kind of clays that will suit various porcelain industries.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not their business to do that, and they are encroaching on the Bureau of Mines. I have the highest regard for the Bureau of Standards. I think they are doing a wonderful work, but I insist that we ought not to be doing work here in two bureaus and taking away from one bureau that which specially belongs to that bureau and which has been given to it by law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think the work being performed by the Bureau of Standards is work they are specially fitted for and is akin to work in other fields. I do not wish to question the authority of the Bureau of Mines under the law that was cited by the gentleman to perform some other work, but I do say that the work that is being performed by the Bureau of Standards is similar to that being performed in many activities in the industrial line. I am not certain whether the Bureau of Standards is not performing work that is being performed by a branch of the University of Ohio at Columbus. This year Dr. Stratton presented to us a refractory consisting of a crucible that had been manufactured from special clays, that, as I recall, had not been manufactured before, and was able to withstand the intense heat that is necessary in the manufacture of optical glass. He brought it before the committee and showed us the crucible composed of clay that had not been before used, and which was able to stand the intense heat that was used in melting the glass. I question whether that work is being performed by the Bureau of Mines. Dr. Stratton, in his testimony, stated that if he had a larger appropriation he could use it for the purpose of finding optical glass necessary for the manufacture of lenses so very much needed at the present time for our war purposes and in navigation.

Mr. FOSTER. That may be. I am not informed about that. But I do know that here is a bureau of the Government that is doing this special work and by law the station was established for doing that special work. Now, to go ahead and let another bureau creep in by getting appropriations, and possibly increasing them from time to time, is not right. There is a close cooperation between the two bureaus; they are on the best of terms. I have not consulted them, but I believe that whatever money is appropriated for this purpose should be given to only one bureau of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree with the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that there should not be duplication of effort, but I am more concerned in ascertaining whether the Bureau of Standards is not doing some work different from the work being performed by the laboratory at Columbus, Ohio, and, if it is, the Bureau of Standards should not be interfered with at the present time, because this optical glass is pressingly needed for war activities.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that work of this kind, especially during these times, is very important. Men all over the country are sending their samples of clay for analysis and test.

Mr. FOSTER. They are sending them to the wrong place.

Mr. GOOD. It is coming here.

Mr. FOSTER. They have no business to take it. It is their business to refer it to the Bureau of Mines, where it belongs.

Mr. GOOD. I think the statement made by the gentleman will be news to most of the Members of this House—that the Bureau of Mines is doing this kind of work. Not a member of the committee reporting this bill, I think, knew of that fact. Dr. Stratton told the committee that the work done by the Bureau of Standards with regard to clay products, the work done on clay products, in their standardization, and so forth, and in preparing industries to take up the work after this war is over, to take it up even now, is worth more than the expense of the entire bureau combined. If that is the case I hope the gentleman will not oppose this provision. I do not believe in duplication of work, but if it is that important the small amount that we are appropriating here will not do very much damage, and it might do a lot of good.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. I am sure that there is not a Member of Congress who is more thoroughly in sympathy with the gentleman from Illinois in not wanting duplication of work than I, but I think the gentleman will find that the Bureau of Mines has absolutely no objection on earth to this particular class of investigation being made here. This is a peculiar commercial test that is made for gentlemen who want to send different clays to the department for the purpose of testing them; for example, for the purpose of making crucibles. At the beginning of the war we were not able to get crucibles at all, but by the testing out, through Dr. Stratton's department, of the clays of the country they have developed a crucible which is now serving the purpose of the War Department in the production of various acids and in the manufacture, for example, of glass with which to make lenses, which has already been referred to. The experiments have been absolutely satisfactory, and we are now having numbers of glass factories throughout the country adopting the formula and using the particular mixture of sands, and so forth, and making glass for lenses for the Army and the Navy. The absolute and universal use of glass in every home, from the cottage to the palace, on every man's table, means, in its commercial development, untold revenues to the people of the United States. In the development of this work the Bureau of Standards has had especially in mind the discovery of a clay that can be used commercially. The Bureau of Mines would investigate its value in the mine and in the crude state.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. That is a part of it, but that is not all.

Mr. SISSON. Then there is this other controversy—and into that I do not care to go—of whether the clay itself should be investigated, or the clay beds and mines. I say, without hesitation, I do not care which department does it. I am more than willing that the department that the gentleman has said ought to have it should do the work. I am only anxious that such an arrangement may be made that we may be sure to have the work done. I would just as soon one department would do it as the other. This department, however, is doing the work now and has facilities for doing it, and I would hate to see the work at this particular time stopped. I have no sort of desire that it should be done in this particular department, nor do I believe that this committee has any favored place for the work to be done. We are carrying the appropriation on account of its vast importance, especially at this time, to the entire country, for the purpose of continuing the work which has meant so much to so many departments of the Government and to the country generally.

Mr. FOSTER. I know this, that the Bureau of Standards has gone into this work, and I have no doubt they are doing some good work. I am not criticizing them for the work that they are doing.

Mr. SISSON. There is not an item in the bill connected with the Bureau of Standards in which I am as much interested—without being financially interested in any clay on earth—as I am in this wonderful development.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember my conversation a year ago with the gentleman on this item.

Mr. SISSON. In other words, I believe that by the proper development of our clay we will discover an activity in which our people can be engaged throughout the whole country, which will be very profitable, as nothing can mean so much to us as to discover a proper treatment of clay to be used in the manufacture of the wares that go on all of the tables throughout the country, from the cottage of the poor to the mansion of the rich. It is a work in which numbers of departments of the Government might engage; and if we could discover, as they have in the past in Germany and in China, that leads the world in clay products of a certain character, a clay that we could so utilize, it would mean vast millions to the people throughout the United States. This amount is so small that I feel this work ought not to be impeded because of any difference as to where it should be done, and I am sure the gentleman is in entire sympathy with the work. It is only a question of where it should be done.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I think it ought to be done where the Government has provided it should be done, and while I am a friend of the Bureau of Standards I do not think the Bureau of Standards has any business to engage in this kind of work, but it ought to go where Congress has provided it should go, and we ought not to appropriate this money at this time.

Mr. SISSON. What I am afraid of is that if we impede the progress of the work being done there some injury might be done.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statements made by the members of the Committee on Appropriations who have investigated this subject more thoroughly than I have and of the statements they have made that this especially refers to war work, I shall not make objection this year, but I want to give notice that if I live another year and this work goes on, then this shall go out of the bill if I can get it out.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does not the gentleman do it now?

Mr. FOSTER. They have made the statement that there is certain work they were doing along the line of war work.

Mr. MADDEN. Everything is war work.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend yield to me?

Mr. FOSTER. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. CANNON. The Bureau of Mines is of comparatively recent origin. The greatest man to hunt work is dead——

Mr. FOSTER. Dr. Holmes—a great and useful man in his line.

Mr. CANNON. Dr. Holmes; and he just went out from there over the world very much in experimentation. I recollect in the report of the Secretary of the Interior when you come to this stuff that they get out in Colorado——

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman means camouflage?

Mr. CANNON. No; I do not mean camouflage.

Mr. FOSTER. Radium?

Mr. CANNON. Radium. Bless my soul, in the Bureau of Mines the production of radium is an item, yet I take notice that when you come to find out its value and the purity of radium it is done at the Bureau of Standards, and all radium that changes hands passes through the Bureau of Standards. I do not know that the Bureau of Standards has developed radium out in Colorado, but the Bureau of Standards existed before the Bureau of Mines thought of having an existence.

Mr. MADDEN. And it has a good man at the head of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. CANNON. I am glad the gentleman withdraws the objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to my colleague that it is true that the Bureau of Standards should be the bureau that should standardize radium. That is their work, and very properly their work, and when the Bureau of Mines have some radium they send it to the place where they could properly do that work, the Bureau of Standards being that kind of a bureau, instead of trying to do it themselves.

Mr. CANNON. It is known all over the country that it is doing this work. Now, how many people in the United States know that the State University at Columbus, Ohio, is the proper place to apply to?

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague just a minute ago mentioned the fact that one of the former heads of the Bureau of Mines was very active in his work. Now, I hope he is not complaining because this one is not.

Mr. CANNON. He has got it scattered all over this country; it is of the most marvelous growth.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it is doing a most marvelous work, I will say to my colleague.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know. I think if there is any poaching, it is by the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I think not; I think my colleague is mistaken. The Bureau of Standards, I would not say a word against the work they are doing because it is wonderful work, and the man at the head of it is a wonderful man.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very glad my colleague takes the position he does in respect to the value of the Bureau of Mines, because he is the father of the bill, and he does not want to desert his child.

Mr. FOSTER. But I was speaking then, when my colleague interrupted, of the Bureau of Standards. Due to the statements made by gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations, I shall not this year make the point of order against this appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

To determine experimentally important physical constants of materials essential to the industries or in laboratory investigations, as authorized by law, such as the determination of the value of gravity, thermal conductivities of materials, mechanical equivalent of heat, metallurgical constants such as specific and latent heats of metals and alloys, the electrochemical equivalent of metals, the velocity of light; including data important in the efficient planning of industrial processes, and in the effective utilization of the properties of materials, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $5,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This paragraph contemplates an improvement in industrial service and to that I would like to address myself for a moment or two. A bill is now pending before the House which has to do with this matter of industrial processes. It is known as the daylight-saving bill. It has passed the Senate and has been brought up here on several occasions, with the request for its consideration by unanimous consent, but that has not been agreed to. I wish the Bureau of Standards had been consulted with regard to this matter, so that the House might have had a report therefrom upon the availability of daylight saving as applied to war industries, but since the question has not come up in that form I desire to say that the matter of daylight saving is not new. The idea evidently germinated in the mind of no less statesman and philosopher than Benjamin Franklin. The American Philosophical Society has prepared a memorandum on that subject which is intensely interesting at this time, and which I hope will be considered in connection with the daylight-saving bill when it comes up for consideration. For the present I put in the RECORD this much of the proceedings of the society:

Mr. Arthur H. Lea, in moving the adoption of the above resolution, said:

"In his autobiography Benjamin Franklin wrote: 'In walking through the Strand and Fleet Street one morning at 7 o'clock I observed there was not one shop open, though it had been daylight and the sun up about three hours, the inhabitants of London chusing voluntarily to live by candlelight and sleep by sunlight, and yet often complain, a little absurdly, of the duty on candles and the high price of tallow.'"

For more than 150 years this question has attracted the notice of philosophers, at least such of them as believed in beginning work earlier in the morning in order that eye strain at night might be relieved, or that man might be fresher for the duties of the day, or that there might be more time for real business or recreation and less time for waste.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is there anything in the law now that prohibits a man from starting work at 6 o'clock in the morning or at 5 o'clock?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Nothing whatever. The farmer does that. He does that because of climatic and agricultural conditions, and very properly so.

Mr. NORTON. Do you think legislation, then, would give him any more rights than he has now, as to going to work?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It might be well for industrial reasons to standardize the time of the country, which is now conflicting.

I want to read further from the memorandum of this interesting old American society. Here are some startling conclusions:

The advantages of daylight saving are manifold and great. Daylight is free, artificial light costly. According to the United States census, issued in 1915, there were eighty-three and one-half million incandescent lamps of 50-watt equivalent in the United States in 1912. The growth in the five-year period since 1907 had been at the rate of 84 per cent. Allowing for only a growth of 50 per cent in the five-year period from 1912 to 1917 there are conservatively 130,000,000 such lamps in the United States to-day. To illuminate this number of lamps one hour requires 6,126 tons of coal, according to the best station practice in large units. To illuminate them for one hour per day from the end of April to the end of September requires 937,000 tons of coal. This, then, would be the economy in coal alone by the daylight-saving plan. To this should be added the cost of transporting and delivering this million tons of coal, carting away ashes, etc. It has been impossible to ascertain how many of these lamps are illuminated with hydroelectric current, but it would be conservative to offset them against the oil and gas lamps in the country, and to conclude that the net economy in coal, oil, and gas to be effected by daylight saving would be equivalent to about 1,000,000 tons of coal a year.

Considering our recent coal shortage, it seems to me this important statement ought to have the early consideration of the House. I trust there may be no further delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is, I think, very interesting, and it shows the reason why the business organizations of this country are now almost a unit in favor of the daylight-saving bill. They have been asking this Congress to pass such a bill now for nearly a year, and a great many Members of Congress have been making strenuous efforts in that direction. I hope that we can have an early consideration of that bill, because not only are the business men in favor of it——

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is not talking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. KING. He is not talking to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is talking to the amendment, because the paragraph relates to industrial processes that might be improved.

Mr. KING. I ask for a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] was speaking, on his own side of the House, he did not raise the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit that the gentleman is in order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] has the right to object if he wishes to do so, as long as the people of his district wish to keep him on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moved to strike out the last word, and the gentleman from Missouri is speaking in opposition to striking it out.

Mr. KING. I simply desire to put in the RECORD that I resent the last words stated by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman not yield to me? Does he not object to the consideration of the daylight-saving bill?

Mr. KING. Yes; I do; and I will object again. It does not justify you in making personal remarks on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide by cooperation of the Bureau of Standards, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Council of National Defense, for the standardization and testing of the standard gauges, screw threads, and standards required in manufacturing throughout the United States, and to calibrate and test such standard gauges, screw threads, and standards, including necessary equipment, rental in Washington, and elsewhere, erection of temporary structures, office expenses, books of reference and periodicals, personal services in the District of Columbia, and in the field, and all other necessary items not included in the foregoing, $150,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman having this bill in charge if the committee gave any consideration to the matter of including in the bureaus or departments which cooperate with the Bureau of Standards, the Shipping Board, which is engaged in a vast building program and which, according to press reports, is going to standardize ships which are built? And I would like to ask him whether he would object to an amendment including the Shipping Board in the departments which may cooperate with the bureau in standardization and testing of gauges, tool threads, and matters required in the manufacturing trade of the United States?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This relates more particularly to the manufacture of munitions.

I will state to the gentleman that the Bureau of Standards is now in a position to render such service to the Shipping Board and do just what the gentleman would like to have it do; but I do not think it ought to be included in this paragraph which, as I have stated, provides for the standardization of gauges in the manufacture of munitions. This is purely a war matter, as the gentleman will notice, and for a war purpose. The Bureau of Standards would have nothing to do with the standardization of ships, although it might test material of which the ships are made.

Mr. WALSH. The Shipping Board are engaged in a war activity, are they not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true; but as I just stated to the gentleman, there is nothing to prevent the Shipping Board from now asking the Bureau of Standards to make any test they may desire of material used by it.

Mr. WALSH. Is there anything to prevent the War Department from doing that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; there is nothing; but this provides a special fund to enable the Bureau of Standards to perform this particular work.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman has answered my question, but it seems to me this is a very important work that frequently has to be undertaken in connection with the departments having jurisdiction over certain war activities, and I thought it might be well to permit the Shipping Board to have the privilege to cooperate if they desire to get the benefit.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have that now, I will say to the gentleman, but this fund is particularly provided for the purposes I have indicated in cooperation with the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. WALSH. Well, in view of the statements of the gentleman from Tennessee, and in view of the importance of the work that the Bureau of Standards is doing, and because of the fact that there is here indicated a desire and disposition to cooperate on the part of these important branches of the Government, and also, further, because of the fact that the Council of National Defense have at last found a bureau outside the War and Navy Departments with which they seem content to be permitted to cooperate, I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Department of Commerce: For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the offices and bureaus of the department, for which appropriations for contingent and miscellaneous expenses are not specifically made, including purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, blank books, pamphlets, maps, newspapers (not exceeding $2,500); stationery; furniture and repairs to same; carpets, matting, oilcloth, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges; fuel, lighting and heating; not exceeding $4,000 for the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle for official use of the Secretary of Commerce; purchase and exchange of motor trucks and bicycles; maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle and of motor trucks and bicycles, to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges; postage to foreign countries; telegraph and telephone service; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; repairs to building occupied by offices of the Secretary of Commerce; first-aid outfits for use in the buildings occupied by employees of this department; storage of documents belonging to the Bureau of Lighthouses, not to exceed $1,500; street car tickets, not exceeding $300; and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, $70,000, and in addition thereto sums amounting to $50,750 shall be deducted from other appropriations made for the fiscal year 1919 and added to the appropriation "Contingent expenses, Department of Commerce," in order to facilitate the purchase through the central purchasing office as provided in the act of June 17, 1910 (Stats. L., v. 36, p. 531), of certain supplies for bureaus and offices for which contingent and miscellaneous appropriations are specifically made as follows: Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—promoting commerce $6,000, promoting commerce (South and Central America) $3,000, commercial attachés $6,000, promoting commerce in the Far East $2,000; general expenses, Lighthouse Service, $10,000; contingent expenses, Steamboat-Inspection Service, $5,000; contingent expenses, shipping service, $500; instruments for measuring vessels, $500; instruments for counting passengers, $250; enforcement of wireless communication laws, $1,000; Bureau of Standards—equipment $1,500, general expenses, $2,000; general expenses, Coast and Geodetic Survey, $4,500; miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Fisheries, $8,500; and the said total sum of $120,750 shall be and constitute the appropriation for contingent expenses, Department of Commerce, to be expended through the central purchasing office (Division of Supplies), Department of Commerce, and shall also be available for objects and purposes of the several appropriations mentioned under the title "Contingent expenses, Department of Commerce," in this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman in charge of the measure explain the purpose of deducting from appropriations made for 1919 the sum of $50,750 and adding it to the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Department of Commerce, and how that is going to facilitate the purchase of supplies for the bureaus?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is simply in the interest of good administration, I will say to the gentleman. It is to prevent the heads of a number of bureaus making all these different purchases of stationery and other contingent supplies independently. The funds are transferred from the funds appropriated for these bureaus and placed here under one head, so that these supplies may be purchased by one central head.

Mr. WALSH. Is that the General Supply Committee?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They are purchased by the department, but from the schedules furnished by the General Supply Committee.

Mr. WALSH. But these are only bureaus in the Department of Commerce? This applies only to the bureaus in the Department of Commerce?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ROBBINS. I want to get the attention of the chairman if I can. If the chairman will turn to line 22, on page 142, he will see there an item of $5,000 for Steamboat-Inspection Service. We made an appropriation of $33,000, on page 131, for 11 inspectors. Why is it that we can not have these inspectors all under one head and placed in one department, without having them sandwiched in between different appropriations, where it is difficult to tell what they are?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that the item to which he refers is simply transferred from the contingent fund of the service for the purpose of enabling the stationary and other contingent expenses of that particular service to be purchased through one general head of the department. It is not an extra appropriation, I will say to the gentleman, but simply a transfer of that amount from the other fund in order that these necessary supplies may be purchased through one central head. It is in the interest of good administration and economy.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is that $5,000 covered by the $33,000 appropriated on page 131?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no. This is a transfer from the item on page 132, where $130,000 is appropriated for contingent expenses.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is included in the $130,000 on page 132, line 10?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Very well. With that explanation, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For periodicals and newspapers for the purpose of procuring strike data and court decisions for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, $300.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to add a new paragraph at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves an amendment, which he sends to the desk, and which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What is it?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Page 146, line 7, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"To investigate the subject of insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age, and the use of public works as a means of reducing unemployment."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the subject of unemployment——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins, will he state whether this amendment embodies the idea he conveyed to the House in a bill some time ago?

Mr. LONDON. Well, this is a modification of it. After the social insurance resolution had been disposed of by the House I introduced another resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Labor. The Committee on Labor asked the Secretary of Labor to report on the advisability of adopting the resolution. The Secretary of Labor, in a communication to the committee, recommends its adoption in a modified form. I expect to submit the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor during the course of my argument.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In short, it is the old-age proposition?

Mr. LONDON. No; it is a modified form of it. It brings up again the question of studying the problems of insurance against unemployment, and provides for an investigation of this subject, except that instead of asking for the appointment of a commission the Secretary of Labor is now called upon to make the investigation and submit his findings to Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman conclude in 10 minutes?

Mr. LONDON. I think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are going to present some very important legislation here at the conclusion of the reading of this bill, and we wish to have it concluded as soon as possible.

Mr. LONDON. I know. I have been faithful in my attendance on the floor of the House, and I ask for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PLATT. Can a gentleman sitting in his seat object without standing up and have his objection recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] was coming down the aisle, walking in the direction of the desk, when he made his objection, and the Chair acted accordingly.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of Labor recommends that an appropriation be made to enable him to investigate the subject of insurance against unemployment, invalidity and old age, and the use of public works as a means of reducing unemployment. In the resolution which I introduced I asked for an appropriation of $50,000. The Secretary of Labor says in regard to the appropriation—

> Even if the investigation is confined to insurance against unemployment, invalidity and old age, and the use of public works as a means of reducing unemployment, I think such a study can not be adequately carried out on an appropriation of only $50,000.

The Secretary emphasizes the importance of making the study now. It is evident to every sound-thinking man that there will be a dislocation of industry with the demobilization of the men and women employed now in war industries with the demobilization of the men in the camps. The time to prepare for that contingency is now. The time to make the investigation is now and not when unemployment is upon us. We can not leave the solution of the question to the old method of the soup kitchen and of charitable institutions. It is a big national problem. It lies fairly within the functions of the Secretary of Labor. It is what his department has been created for. In the organic law creating the Department of Labor we find the following:

> The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

I have not the time to attempt to analyze the entire subject. I attempted it on previous occasions. The last time when the resolution came up two objections were put forward. One was that in this abnormal war time we can not study the subject with any degree of success. The previous resolution provided for a commission, and the other objection was that commissions were useless, that they were calculated merely to delay things, and that Members of Congress themselves should take up these subjects for study. Now, in the resolution before the House, which I will incorporate in my remarks, the Secretary of Labor is asked to assemble all the data, all the available facts relating to the subject. That is in line with his duty. On previous occasions studies of parts of the subject were made by the Department of Labor, and as you go through the literature of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and of the Department of Labor you will find partial studies of branches of the subject. This amendment would enable the Department of Labor to assemble all the facts in relation to the subject.

I may as well take up now the question of the point of order.

I contend that the Department of Labor was created specifically for the purpose of taking up this very subject. If the Secretary of Labor is not to study unemployment, if he is not to prepare against unemployment, if he is not to provide against the contingency of unemployment, if he is to shut his eyes to the fact that with the demobilization of the Army and with the upsetting of industry after the termination of the war—there is bound to be a dislocation of industry, a maladjustment, a looking for jobs, a vain looking for jobs unless some wise measures are adopted now—then he will have failed of his function. It is the supreme duty of the Congress to supply the Department of Labor with funds to make the necessary investigation. That will probably be the most important work in which the department has ever been engaged.

Mr. Chairman, I contend that the point of order does not lie. In the few minutes I have I can not undertake again to analyze this subject in all its fullness.

I submit the resolution, House joint resolution 226, which I introduced on January 23, 1918, and a copy of the letter of the Secretary of Labor in relation thereto. The Secretary of Labor would confine himself to an investigation of the subject, so as to enable Congress to determine for itself the advisability of adopting a system of national insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age:

> House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 226) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Labor to make an investigation and report regarding insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age.
> Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Labor be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate and report to Congress on or before the first Monday of December, 1918, upon the following: The advisability of adopting a system of national insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age, and also upon the advisability of establishing a comprehensive system of public works conjointly with unemployment insurance or as a separate measure, to minimize unemployment.
> SEC. 2. That for the purposes of enabling the Secretary of Labor to make the necessary investigations and reports the sum of $50,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
March 5, 1918.

Hon. JAMES P. MAHER,
Chairman Committee on Labor, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am in receipt of your letter of January 29, inclosing copy of House joint resolution 226, directing the Secretary of Labor to make an investigation and report regarding insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age.

It is highly desirable that we learn as much as possible about the workings of the national unemployment insurance act passed in Great Britain in 1911. It is also of the highest importance that we find out much more than we now know about the extent, causes, and consequences of unemployment in this country. After the war is over unemployment is bound to increase alarmingly unless we make intelligent and adequate provision for the reabsorption into the normal peacetime industries of men in military service and in war industries. Invalidity and old-age insurance are also matters about which we need much more exact information. With the available information on these subjects collected and digested by the department for the use of Congress, it would then be in a position to determine for itself the advisability of adopting a system of national insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age.

I therefore suggest that the resolution be amended by striking out all after the word "investigate," on page 1, line 4, down to and including the word "unemployment," in line 11, and insert the following: "The subjects of insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age, and the use of public works as a means of reducing unemployment."

Even if the investigation is confined to insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and old age, and the use of public works as a means of reducing unemployment, I think such a study can not be adequately carried out on an appropriation of only $50,000. If it is the desire of the committee, I shall be pleased to make an estimate of the cost of making the study contemplated by the bill.

Respectfully, yours, W. B. WILSON, Secretary.

The Committee on Labor has since asked that the estimate be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the limit of time does not apply to the discussion of a point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I believe the gentleman stated that the Secretary of Labor said that $50,000 would not be a large enough amount to enable him to make the investigation. Does he indicate the amount of money that will be necessary?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman from Michigan get my time extended?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We are talking on the point of order now, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the Chair will hear any gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Can the gentleman from New York answer my question?

Mr. LONDON. That is not a question directed to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman's inquiry relate in any way to the point of order?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, then. Of course, it can not be utilized to extend the gentleman's time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is the gentleman able to answer my question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not answer a question that does not relate to the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I did not ask him to answer it. I just asked him if he could answer it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, as I said previously, the organic law creating the Department of Labor provides in clear and unmistakable words the functions of this department. I will read the language:

> The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

I contend that the study of the subject of unemployment comes within the provision of the law just cited and is directly within the object for which the department was created.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to be heard upon it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Nothing, except to say that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and that even if it was in order on an appropriation bill, this is not the proper bill to carry it; in other words, it should be carried in the sundry civil bill. It provides for insurance not only for unemployed but for old age. Clearly, without admitting for a moment the logic of the gentleman's position with reference to the unemployed, there is no authority in law for an amendment that would take care of insurance in old age.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the amendment is in order.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I will offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LONDON: Page 146, line 70, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"To investigate the subject of insurance against unemployment, the sum of $50,000."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. How does the gentleman from New York claim that this is in order in respect to legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, is this new legislation? We are appropriating for the needs of the various departments. We give them the money necessary to carry out their functions; and one function of the Department of Labor is the study of unemployment, a function so important that it was made a part of the organic law. It is essential that we provide against the contingency, not when we are in distress, not when we are in the midst of a crisis, but before the evil of unemployment is upon us. It is one of the most vital duties of the Department of Labor. To make appropriations for chairs, clerks, and furniture, typewriters, and automobiles without making provision for the study and investigation of the most important object for which that department was created is to assassinate all the laws of logic and repudiate all the laws of reason. The most important function of the Department of Labor is to advance opportunities for profitable employment, to investigate and assemble all the facts relating to unemployment. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not been cited to any fundamental law clearly authorizing or justifying this amendment. There is no limit to the investigations for which appropriations might be made if this amendment is in order. There are many investigations which conceivably the Department of Labor might conduct, with a view to improving the working conditions of labor and advancing the opportunities for profitable employment but it does not follow therefrom that the Committee on Appropriations is empowered to direct specific investigations to that end. The amendment as I understand it, is to investigate the subject of insurance against unemployment.

Mr. LONDON. And to increase opportunity for employment. To study unemployment is not to keep out of employment. I hope the Chairman does not think that that is what is sought by my amendment. To study the causes of unemployment is the converse of advancing the opportunities for profitable employment. The department is to foster employment by eliminating the causes of unemployment, and you can not eliminate unemployment without studying it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not satisfied that this amendment is out of order and is disposed to submit it to the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. But if the Chair will permit, I suggest if the organic law creating the Bureau of Labor would make it within the function of that bureau to carry on such investigation, the legislative bill is not the medium to carry such a provision. The legislative bill is to provide for the salaries of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and has never been properly made the medium for carrying provisions looking to investigation. Such provisions are carried in connection with the appropriations in the sundry civil bill. I submit that this is not germane to anything in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from New York say to that proposition?

Mr. LONDON. This bill, Mr. Chairman, contains a number of items that are not for salaries. It provides the necessary expenses for running the departments. My argument is that the subject of unemployment is one of the most vital things, one of the most vital functions, of the Department of Labor. Congress should not fail to provide for carrying out the objects for which that department has been created.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon reflection the Chair is disposed to think that the organic act might be fairly construed by the Bureau of Labor to empower it to investigate the subject proposed in the amendment, if a lump-sum appropriation was made. But this would be a conclusion that the bureau would draw from the general terms used in the act. This amendment appropriating the sum indicated and directing that it shall be used for the investigation mentioned is an interpretation of the organic act. An amendment construing or interpreting an act is legislation. Legislation on an appropriation bill is forbidden. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Child Labor Division: To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry into effect the provisions of the act of September 1, 1916, entitled "An act to prevent interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes," in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including traveling expenses, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, contingent and miscellaneous expenses, and personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $125,000: Provided, That no salary shall be paid hereunder at a rate exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman state how the maximum salaries are fixed in these bureaus or divisions in the Department of Labor? Here is a provision in the Children's Bureau that not exceeding so many persons shall be employed at a rate not exceeding $2,000, and in the Child Labor Division it is provided that no salary shall be paid at a rate exceeding $3,000 per annum. It would seem to me that in the administration of the important law regulating interstate commerce in the products of child labor the salary permitted to any person employed to carry out the provisions of the act is not very large, if limited to $3,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that $3,000 is the salary now paid to the chief of this division. This, as the gentleman understands, is a division of the Children's Bureau, and the salary was fixed by those in authority for the chief of that division, the lady who has been in charge of it ever since it has been established.

Mr. WALSH. That is Miss Lathrop?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; Miss Lathrop is the chief of the bureau, and she gets $5,000. Miss Abbott is the chief of the division.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the salary of $3,000 referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] was not fixed by those who are in charge of the Labor Department or the Children's Bureau. It is a limitation placed in the appropriation bill by the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress, in the face of the protests of those in charge of the Children's Bureau, and I think I am safe in saying that those who have charge of the work of enforcing the child-labor law think that the salary is inadequate; that Miss Abbott, in accepting the position as chief of that particular division, did so at a sacrifice. I think myself that the provision should be eliminated, and that in these days of the high cost of living it should be possible to pay more than that sum to the person who has charge of the enforcement of child-labor laws all over the United States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the provisions of the bill which first carried this appropriation did place a limitation of $3,000 on the salary, and $3,000 is now the sum which is paid to the chief of this division. In addition to that, there is an assistant chief at $2,700, a law officer at $2,500, an inspector in charge of State cooperation at $2,220, a supervising inspector at $2,000, 4 supervising inspectors at $2,000, a supervisor of certificate issuing at $1,800, 30 inspectors at $1,500, and 20 at $1,700, and other employees who draw smaller salaries.

Mr. WALSH. But all these employees could be wiped out over night; they are not carried in any bill specifically provided for in any legislation, and they could be eliminated by the chief of the bureau if it was thought desirable. My point is that to limit the salary that can be paid to any person under whom comes the administration of this most important legislation touching the prevention of interstate commerce in the products of child labor, to $3,000, is not conducive to getting the most efficient administration.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that I do not know of chiefs of division in many of the departments of the Government who are getting exceeding $3,000. The gentleman must not confuse this position with the chief of the bureau, whose salary is fixed by statute and who gets a much larger sum.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Am I right in believing that under this paragraph, as far as the $125,000, the lump sum, will go, each one employed, regardless of the work performed, might be paid $3,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Should there not be a further limitation upon that? Should not assistants be named? It is done in every other item.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is a very striking difference between the attitude of the gentleman from Michigan and that of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The committee is being criticized on one hand for having a limitation and the gentleman from Michigan is insisting on a more stringent limitation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I was impressed with what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] said, that the chief of this division is a person of such ability and capacity as to merit a larger salary, and I should hope to see a larger salary for the head of the division; but to have the law left in such a way that anyone in the employ there might receive as much as the chief of the division I think is wrong.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Confirming what I said a moment ago with reference to these salaries, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the estimates submitted asked for a salary of $3,000 for the chief of this division. There is no request from the Director of the Children's Bureau for any larger sum.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But does the committee never exercise its own judgment in these matters?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Certainly it does; and the committee, I am frank to say to the gentleman, feel that the salary of $3,000 for the chief of a division within a bureau is a good salary, as compared with what is paid to chiefs of divisions in practically all of the other departments of the Government. This is not an independent bureau; it is a division within a bureau. When the chief of that bureau, Miss Lathrop, a most excellent and most intelligent lady, comes before the committee with her estimates and says that $3,000 is all that she asks for the chief of that division, the committee does not feel like increasing the salary upon its own motion.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, when the bill prepared by the committee of which I am a member comes before the House usually there is present a member of the Committee on Appropriations who is paying particular attention to it to see that appropriations are not too high, and that the lump sums are few and far between, requiring the committee to specify as nearly as possible the number of clerks and employees of one kind and another and the particular salary attached to each position.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Here is a bill reported by a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations itself filled with lump-sum appropriations and leaving the widest latitude in the matter of paying salaries, and it seems to me that is not right.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan that we brought in a limitation the other day upon an appropriation made for the Bureau of Efficiency so as to provide that under no circumstances should they pay to the chief of the bureau exceeding $5,000 or exceeding $4,000 to any other employee, and yet after we brought that limitation in here on the floor of the House the committee was severely criticized, and a point of order was made against the limitation, and the limitation was stricken from the bill, so that any amount of salary may be paid to the Chief of the Bureau of Efficiency or to any employee. The Committee on Appropriations, I will say to the gentleman, and I appeal to the RECORD to confirm what I say, has always been extremely careful to place limitations upon lump sums; and I want to call the attention of the gentleman, my distinguished friend from Michigan, to the fact that the Agricultural appropriation bill, of which committee he is a very able and distinguished member, is filled with lump-sum appropriations, and I will not say half the salaries are paid out of lump-sum appropriations, but we all know—I am not criticizing the committee for that—that the appropriation bill brought in by the gentleman's committee contains numerous lump-sum appropriations, frequently without limitation. Now, the Committee on Appropriations proposed this as a lump sum, the head of this division having stated that it was just being organized; that she was not in a position to submit a list of the employees necessary. In other words, she said her organization had not been definitely fixed, and she asked us to give her a lump sum, and we gave her the lump sum with this limitation, so that no salaries shall be paid in excess of the amount that ought to be paid, and in fixing such amount we followed the estimate.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I appreciate the gentleman's statement fully, and if the gentleman, representing the Committee on Appropriations, says that this is the best that the Committee on Appropriations can do, I will take his word for it and make no objection; but I recall, as other members of the committee, that these lump-sum appropriations in the Agricultural bill have been very severely attacked here by the members of the Committee on Appropriations, and as a result of that they have been eliminated in some instances or such restrictions thrown around them as they were able to frame.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Massachusetts will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, who stands by his rights and the privileges of recognition.

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not there this difference between the lump-sum appropriations carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill and the lump-sum appropriations in this instance, that those carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill are for work of long standing, whereas here is a division that has just recently been established, where the head of the division stated that she is not in a position to fix the salaries of the force for the next year, and accordingly we did not think that it was right to place them on the statutory roll when the work of the division is in the course of formation?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have said that if the committee will say that it is the best they can do, I will accept that explanation. Their apology is satisfactory to me.

Mr. STAFFORD. The fact is, the criticism that was leveled heretofore against the Agricultural bill stands notwithstanding, because there we have lump-sum appropriations for bureaus of long standing, from which salaries have been paid out for years and years, much higher than those paid in other departments.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman on the committee will not think that I was attempting to criticize his committee in making the query that I did. I was not criticizing his committee, but was asking for the impelling reason which led to the inclusion of the limitation in the paragraph, and I want to direct his attention to the fact that in this same department there are two divisions that pay its chief more than is paid to the Child Labor Division. The chief of the Division of Information gets $3,500, and also in the Department of Commerce there is a bureau there where the assistant chief gets $3,500 and the chief gets $6,000. That is the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a bureau, and I was talking of a division. I was referring to salaries paid in a division. There are one or two exceptions.

Mr. WALSH. But it would seem to me that we ought to permit the chief of an important bureau like this to be able to get the best service that is available. Why, for some of the special employees in some offices we permit them to pay more than that on a per diem basis for simply temporary employment. I assure the gentleman I was not attempting in any way to criticize the action of the committee, but was endeavoring to get the reason for this limitation. If my five minutes have not yet expired, I yield back the balance of it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not question the motives of the gentleman in the least. He has been very alert and active in the consideration of this bill, but always pleasant and courteous. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the railroad control bill (S. 3752) was sent back to conference by a point of order in the Senate under their new rule, that fact having been messaged over here, and I wish to ask leave to withdraw the conference report that has been filed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks leave to withdraw the conference report that has been filed. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Does this bill automatically go back to conference with the permission to withdraw the report?

Mr. SIMS. That was the action of the Senate under their rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does. The conference is still in existence.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] have to make a request for the withdrawal of it?

The SPEAKER. He has already made it, and it has been granted.

Mr. CANNON. Do not the conferees have to be reappointed?

The SPEAKER. Why?

Mr. SIMS. There is no report.

The SPEAKER. There is no report, but there is a conference.

Mr. SIMS. We want to get the papers back from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think there have to be conferees appointed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is not anything before the House now, but the situation that was before the House was this, that the House conferees reported the conference report in here, and when the Senate got hold of it, it recommitted it to the conferees on some point of order they raised over there. Now, the conference report was in possession of the House, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asked leave to get it back to conference——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER (continuing). And it was granted.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asked for a conference?

Mr. SIMS. No; I just asked to withdraw the report.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Originally the request for a conference came from the House, did it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is important in one sense, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SIMS. I asked unanimous consent that the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a conference.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Tennessee having made the request on behalf of the House for a conference, that gave the papers to the Senate conferees, and the Senate conferees have voted on the conference report, if it was voted on.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the status now? What has happened?

The SPEAKER. The status is this, that the conferees reported this conference report, and after they had reported it to the House and it had been reported to the Senate, the Senate recommitted it on a point of order to the conferees and sent the papers back to the House with the notification. The only way the chairman could get his conference report back again was to ask the House to let him do it, which he has done.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman from Tennessee the papers?

The SPEAKER. The House has the papers.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is what I wanted to get at. They were sent back by the Senate. They voted first over there and they should be here.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what happened. The gentleman was trying to get the papers that were in the possession of the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Tennessee will now be obliged to present a new report. Is that it?

The SPEAKER. Of course he will. If not, the bill is as dead as a man who lived before the flood.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rent: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Department of Labor, $24,000.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], with reference to the rent items. I notice in this bill various items in the various departments for rent. There is no limitation upon any of them as to how much the departments can pay for rent. Has it not been the practice in the past to fix the amount the Government can pay for rent of buildings?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It has; and I will say to the gentleman that in this case the Department of Labor has a term lease on the building now occupied for which they pay $24,000 a year.

Mr. DYER. Is that so with reference to other departments?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is so with reference to all the departments where there is a lease for a term of years.

Mr. DYER. There are items for rent here for other departments besides the Department of Labor?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DYER. And those are all for renewing leases?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Either renewing leases or carrying out leases already in effect.

Mr. DYER. And the amount to be paid is fixed?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is fixed by agreement, of course, between the lessor and lessee.

Mr. DYER. And is no more than has been authorized heretofore by limitation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

District courts: Ninety-seven district judges, at $6,000 each, $582,000.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question with reference to the item for the courts. Has the gentleman's committee considered the advisability of increasing the pay of Federal judges? Apparently they are very much underpaid now, according to the standard of salaries paid to other officials of the Government and conditions generally. Take, for instance, the item there with reference to the judges of the district courts of the United States, $6,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. I will say to the gentleman that no consideration whatever was given with reference to increased pay for judges, for the simple reason that their salaries are fixed by law. That is a matter, of course, for the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DYER. That is a matter that should come from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Appeals, District of Columbia: Chief justice, $7,500; two associate justices, at $7,000 each; clerk, $3,250, and $250 additional as custodian of the Court of Appeals Building; assistant or deputy clerk, $2,250; reporter, $1,500: Provided, That the reports issued by him shall not be sold for more than $5 per volume; crier, who shall also act as stenographer and typewriter in the clerk's office when not engaged in court room, $1,200; three messengers, at $720 each; three stenographers, one for the chief justice and one for each associate justice, at $1,200 each; necessary expenditures in the conduct of the clerk's office, $1,000; in all, $36,710, one-half of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to ask the committee a question as to the basis on which salaries of stenographers for the various judges are fixed. In this Court of Appeals, which, I take it, is a court having a great deal of business, the stenographers—one being provided for each justice—receive $1,200. In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in the next paragraph, a court which we have recently been assured has more business for the justices than any other court in the country, which is so terribly overcrowded and overworked with business, the stenographers to those judges, being of a higher grade than the Court of Appeals, get only $1,100. Over a little further, in the Court of Customs Appeals, a comparatively new court, those stenographers get $1,600. Is that a mark of the comparative conservatism of the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is an inferior court to the Court of Appeals. That is what we call down in my State a "circuit court." The stenographers for the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia are now getting $900. The committee has given them an increase in this bill of $200, making their salaries $1,100.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the committee feel that when any good stenographer, without a day's experience in the particular work, can go into the departments down here at $1,200, the stenographers who have been with the justices of the Supreme Court for a considerable time should be put down at $1,100 if that court is as much overworked as we have been told it is?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say that in some instances these judges have law students for their secretaries and stenographers. I will not say that is so in all instances, but I know that is true in some instances. They are not necessarily expert stenographers. They are in the nature of secretaries to the judges. I take it that their correspondence, as a matter of fact, is not extraordinarily heavy.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then either one of two things is true. Either they are getting help that is not as efficient as it should be, and are obliged by the low salary provided to take advantage, perhaps, of the necessities of the students; or, if these students are equal to the needs of the justices, that court is not such a busy place as some gentlemen have inferred. Perhaps they really do not need a stenographer much of the time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no doubt that the judges of the courts of the District of Columbia would be glad to have a $1,200 salary fixed for their stenographers. In fact, one of the judges appeared before our committee and made that statement; but inasmuch as these stenographers are now getting $900, the committee thought that $200 added as an increase at one time was a pretty fair raise in salary. It is all that is given in the departments. A man is promoted from class 1 to class 2, and from class 2 to class 3, or $200 at a time.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman think that the members of the Court of Customs Appeals have a larger correspondence than the members of the Circuit Court, and that one stenographer should get $1,600 while the other gets $1,100?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I call the gentleman's attention to the language there. They are not stenographers. They are stenographic clerks. They are more than mere stenographers.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand from the chairman that these stenographers to the Supreme Court of the District have not so much work as stenographers as they have as clerks.

Mr. GOOD. These are high-grade clerks.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman think that if the Supreme Court of the District is so terribly overwhelmed with work—the hardest-worked court in the country—they ought to be obliged to put up with half-rate clerks?

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman will realize that between a court like the Court of Customs Appeals and the supreme court there is a distinction. In one instance the stenographer need have no knowledge aside from that of stenography and typewriting and a general education.

Mr. CRAMTON No; I differ with the gentleman. I think that in any court that is really working each justice ought to have at his disposal a stenographer who is a capable stenographer and secretary as well.

Mr. GOOD. These stenographers of the court of appeals are men of a higher character than that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] a question. How many cases of appeals were heard before the Court of Customs Appeals last year?

Mr. GOOD. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. GOOD. Certainly——

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a bill pending on the House Calendar, and has been for several months, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, providing for the creation of two additional judges for the Supreme Court of the District. In that report the gentleman will find the information which he is now seeking.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This is the Court of Customs Appeals.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I thought you were referring to the District court. I will say to the gentleman that the legislative subcommittee has made no inquiry, either this year or in prior years, as to the amount of work of this court. There has been no change in the estimates, either in the clerical force or the subclerical force, and accordingly we allowed the estimates that they asked.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would seem to me that some time it might be advisable, while we are making appropriations of hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars, to find out precisely what we are appropriating money for and how much business the people do who get the money. I would like to know how many cases were appealed for the Court of Customs Appeals.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will notice, if he will study the item under consideration, to which he is directing the inquiry, that we appropriate only $54,840.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] asks unanimous consent that the time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Just a moment, in order to give the gentleman from Wisconsin the information he desires.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I only asked for the time in order to give the gentleman from Tennessee an opportunity to make the statement he desires to make.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. During the year 28 appeals were disposed of by the Court of Customs Appeals by consent and 106 were decided by the court after argument. The appeals disposed of by consent were for the most part disposed of in accordance with decisions by the United States Court of Customs Appeals on other similar issues which were argued as test cases.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the aggregate number of cases disposed of during the year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That would make an aggregate of 134 cases.

Mr. COX. How many members of that court are there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Five; the presiding judge and four associate judges.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee determines to rise.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BORLAND. The committee has finished the reading of the printed bill. The motion just made is that the committee rise, without any direction to report. I assume that an amendment to this section of the bill, or in the way of an additional section, is still in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It would have been, but the committee has risen.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that could have been the understanding of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not pass on a matter of understanding. As a matter of fact, that is what the committee did.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to protest——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman had offered an amendment, it would have been presented as a preferential proposition to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BORLAND. When the committee sits again it will be in order to offer an amendment in the way of a new paragraph to the bill, will it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to present that when the committee sits again. The Chair can not anticipate.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not propose to lose any rights on that point at all. Of course the committee did not so intend.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has determined to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 10358, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider as an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 10358, the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That all civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia who receive a total of compensation at the rate of $2,000 per annum or less, except as otherwise provided in this section, shall receive, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, additional compensation at the rate of $120 per annum: Provided, That such employees as receive a total of annual compensation at a rate more than $2,000 and less than $2,120 shall receive additional compensation at such a rate per annum as may be necessary to make their salaries, plus their additional compensation, at the rate of $2,120 per annum, and no employee shall receive additional compensation under this section at a rate which is more than 30 per cent of the rate of the total annual compensation received by such employee: Provided further, That the increased compensation at the rates of 5 and 10 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section: Provided further, That where an employee in the service on June 30, 1917, has received during the fiscal year 1918, or shall receive during the fiscal year 1919 an increase of salary at a rate in excess of $200 per annum, or where an employee has entered the service since June 30, 1917, whether such employee has received an increase in salary or not, such employees shall be granted the increased compensation provided herein only when and upon certification of the head of the department or establishment employing such persons of the reasons personal to such employees as would justify such increased compensation: Provided further, That the increased compensation provided in this section to employees whose pay is adjusted from time to time through wage boards or similar authority shall be taken into consideration by such wage boards or similar authority in adjusting the pay of such employees.

The provisions of this section shall not apply to the following: Employees paid from the postal revenues and sums which may be advanced from the Treasury to meet deficiencies in the postal revenues; employees of the Panama Canal on the Canal Zone; employees of the Alaskan Engineering Commission in Alaska; employees whose duties require only a portion of their time, except charwomen, who shall be included; employees whose services are utilized for brief periods at intervals; employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangements with the Governments of the United States or the District of Columbia; employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation; and employees who may be provided with special allowances because of their service in foreign countries. The provisions of this section shall not apply to employees of the railroads taken over by the United States, and nothing contained herein shall be deemed a recognition of the employees of such railroads as employees of the United States.

Section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 10, 1916, as amended by the naval appropriation act approved August 29, 1916, shall not operate to prevent anyone from receiving the additional compensation provided in this section who otherwise is entitled to receive the same.

Such employees as are engaged on piecework, by the hour, or at per diem rates, if otherwise entitled to receive the additional compensation shall receive the same at the rate provided in this section when their fixed rate of pay for the regular working hours and on the basis of 313 days in the said fiscal year would amount to $2,000 or less: Provided, That this method of computation shall not apply to any per diem employee regularly paid a per diem for every day in the year.

So much as may be necessary to pay the additional compensation provided in this section to employees of the Government of the United States is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

So much as may be necessary to pay the increased compensation provided in this section to employees of the government of the District of Columbia is appropriated, one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, except to employees of the Washington Aqueduct and the water department, which shall be paid entirely from the revenues of the water department.

So much as may be necessary to pay the increased compensation provided in this section to persons employed under trust funds who may be construed to be employees of the Governments of the United States or the District of Columbia is authorized to be paid, respectively, from such trust funds.

Reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next regular session showing for the first four months of the fiscal year the average number of employees in each department, bureau, office, or establishment receiving the increased compensation at the rate of $120 per annum and the average number by grades receiving the same at each other rate.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, if unanimous consent is given, will this be subject to amendment by paragraphs, as is the case with appropriation bills?

Mr. SHERLEY. I see no reason why it should not be subject to amendment by paragraphs as to any amendments germane to the section.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is, it will take the usual course of appropriation bills?

Mr. SHERLEY. That would be my desire.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, this amendment seems to apply by its limitations exclusively to the seven-hour clerks in Washington. I am not willing to vote for an increase of pay to the seven-hour clerks in Washington, and therefore I shall object.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, it does not apply exclusively to the clerks of Washington.

Mr. BORLAND. Almost.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; not almost or anywhere near almost. It applies to clerks all over the country, and to all employees of the Government other than those especially excluded by the terms of the amendment itself. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that includes practically all of the eight-hour employees of the Government.

Mr. BORLAND. I differ with the gentleman as to the fact.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that he objected. The Chair understood that he said he was going to object. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report and resolution from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 274 (H. Rept. No. 377).

Resolved, That in the consideration of H. R. 10358, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, it shall be in order, the general rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, to consider the following amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, that which the Clerk is about to read is the language of the amendment which has just been read, and I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with for the reason stated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to 20 minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to consume any time in the discussion of this resolution. The report of the Committee on Rules simply makes the amendment in order. As explained by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], it is open to amendment, and, as far as I am concerned, I will not take up any further time. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this rule simply makes in order a few more paragraphs of the appropriation bill which when made in order will be subject to germane amendments. I think the rule should be agreed to as early as possible.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, but I do think that it was only consonant with fairness to yield to me, because I am opposed to the rule. Somebody ought to be entitled to be heard on the subject.

I am opposed to bringing in a rule making in order this amendment from the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee has no legislative powers and can only bring in salary increase by virtue of unanimous consent or of a special rule. It does not seem to me that the matter is of such tremendous importance that it deserves a special rule at this session of Congress. There are great matters of urgent necessity upon which special rules have been asked, and longer ago than the rule was asked for on this proposition. For instance, the daylight-saving bill, which has been before Congress for many a month, which has received the indorsement of practically all the business organizations of the country, and the organization of labor and other agencies. We have not been able to consider that, although we asked for a special rule 10 days or 2 weeks ago.

Now here is a matter that concerns only a few Federal employees who, the evidence will show, are fully as well paid now as are private employees, and yet immediately when objection was made to unanimous consent to consider this amendment a rule was ready for the consideration of this proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman had privately informed me that he was going to object.

Mr. BORLAND. If I did not make objection there were 435 men who might have made it. What I want to call to the attention of the committee is that this particular matter of a rule could be had in a few days, because the resolution was not before the Committee on Appropriations until this morning, and since that time it has been decided to get a special rule and make it in order. It seems strange that with matters of great importance to the business of the country, to the business organizations of the country who are asking for a special rule which would take no more time in debate than this, that this rule for a salary increase should have this remarkable right of way.

I propose to vote against the special rule for the consideration of this amendment. I am opposed to the rule, but, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to trespass upon the time of the House or the courtesy of the committee in discussing the merits now. I will take that up when we reach it.

I do want to emphasize my position, that every time there is a special interest in Washington pressing Congress for some demand on the Federal Treasury a right of way is given to that particular demand. Why, it is our business to legislate for 100,000,000 people and not for a few here in the District of Columbia. Those that are here in the District of Columbia are servants of the Nation. They are brought here for the sole purpose of performing the business of the Nation and they should wait until the business of the American people is considered. If there is any right of way it should be given to other matters outside of Federal employees. I do earnestly hope that we will consider the matter thoroughly and vote down the rule for the consideration of this amendment.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules reported this rule in order that the bill might be completed. I think I am safe in saying that, so far as the daylight-saving bill is concerned, at an early date, unless unanimous consent is given, the House will have an opportunity to vote on it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the rule.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 305, nays 9, answered "present" 1, not voting 113, as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the railroad-control bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the report.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule, and the gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the urgent deficiency bill, H. R. 9867, to disagree to all the Senate amendments and to ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether the bill has been printed with the amendments as they passed the Senate and the amendments numbered.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know whether there is a print available now but there will be a print, but I will say to the gentleman it is not expected to go to conference before to-morrow or later though it is desirable to get this bill passed very shortly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recognize the desire and the need of having this bill enacted into law. As I recall, some very important amendments have been added to the bill in the Senate, and I think it is well that the House should know what those amendments are before they agree to send the bill to conference.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman objects——

Mr. STAFFORD. I object temporarily.

Mr. SHERLEY. I withdraw the request.

Mr. STAFFORD. And would suggest the gentleman ask unanimous consent to have the bill printed.

The SPEAKER The Clerk states that the manuscript has already gone to the Printing Office to do the very thing the gentleman wants done.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to have an opportunity to examine those amendments——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman stated he would object if the motion was pressed now, so I desire to withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws it.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill H. R. 9352, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War,' approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes."

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I offer an amendment, to form a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, at what point will it be proper to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is subject to amendment just as the bill would be.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. To each paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. To each paragraph. As each paragraph is reached it will be subject to amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. This is being offered as an amendment. Now, will it be first read through and entirely completed, and then read again by paragraph, or will it just be read by paragraph at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds it to be in the status of a part of a bill, but of course if it is insisted upon it will be read as an amendment. The Chair was going to have it read as a part of the bill, and then to hold each paragraph open to amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Read by paragraphs and open to amendment as each paragraph is read?

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done unless formal insistence is made that it be read as an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. 6. That all civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia who receive a total of compensation at the rate of $2,000 per annum or less, except as otherwise provided in this section, shall receive, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, additional compensation at the rate of $120 per annum: Provided, That such employees as receive a total of annual compensation at a rate more than $2,000 and less than $2,120 shall receive additional compensation at such a rate per annum as may be necessary to make their salaries, plus their additional compensation, at the rate of $2,120 per annum, and no employee shall receive additional compensation under this section at a rate which is more than 30 per cent of the rate of the total annual compensation received by such employee: Provided further, That the increased compensation at the rates of 5 and 10 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section: Provided further, That where an employee in the service on June 30, 1917, has received during the fiscal year 1918, or shall receive during the fiscal year 1919 an increase of salary at a rate in excess of $200 per annum, or where an employee has entered the service since June 30, 1917, whether such employee has received an increase in salary or not such employees shall be granted the increased compensation provided herein only when and upon certification of the head of the department or establishment employing such persons of the reasons personal to such employees as would justify such increased compensation: Provided further, That the increased compensation provided in this section to employees whose pay is adjusted from time to time through wage boards or similar authority shall be taken into consideration by such wage boards or similar authority in adjusting the pay of such employees."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, in line 2, after the word "employee," insert "whether previously in the service or not."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment on the amendment. Before considering the amendment, which is simply an amendment in form, I think it would be well if we could get some sort of an understanding touching this entire proposal now before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. There is a certain amount of debate that naturally people will desire to make on the broad general proposition without regard to the refinements that come up in the consideration of the details of the section by paragraphs. Now, the first provision of the bill presents the basic proposition as to the amount of increase, and I want to know whether we could get some sort of agreement to limit debate on this first paragraph of the bill, say, 30 minutes to a side, which would enable us to present the basic proposition, and then we could take up the details later on.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the chairman of the committee that I propose to offer at the end of this first paragraph an amendment providing that the increases shall not apply in any department which does not maintain an eight-hour day, subject to the provisions of the existing law. And on that amendment there has been within the last 10 minutes half a dozen gentlemen at least who have spoken to me and said that they wanted to discuss that from the standpoint of the eight-hour proposition. I would like, of course, to limit the debate if we can, but I would also like to have some fair allowance of time for that amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that his amendment would be just as much in order, and perhaps in better shape, at the conclusion of the entire section than to the first paragraph, and I will be very glad to have a reasonable debate touching his amendment at that time.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, what suggestion have you to make?

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest 30 minutes on a side as to that matter, to come up at the conclusion of the section.

Mr. BORLAND. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am in sympathy with the idea that the gentleman from Kentucky expresses, but I have an amendment to this paragraph that I wanted to offer, and I would like a little time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably. Now, what I had in mind was, if it is agreeable to the committee, that we have 30 minutes debate on a side touching the entire proposition, and then at the end of the first paragraph amendments can be offered and debated five minutes pro and con, five minutes by the proponents and five minutes by some one opposed to such amendments. Then at the conclusion of the reading of the section the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] can offer his amendment touching eight-hour work, and on that there shall be 30 minutes debate on a side.

Mr. BORLAND. I take it that time will be controlled by myself and the chairman of the subcommittee?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not care anything about the details of that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield? And let every Member who has an amendment to offer to the first paragraph have it read and pending?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think you will really get more confusion that way than in the other way, because after the debate is had for a little while this whole question is going to simmer down to a few acute propositions representing differences of opinion. And I believe 30 minutes on a side in the beginning would clarify the whole situation.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman expect to conclude to-night and get a vote on the proposition before we adjourn?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I should be glad to do so, but I question whether it is practicable.

Mr. MONDELL. There are a number of gentlemen on this side whose understanding is that there will not be a vote to-night, and they would like to be here when a vote is had.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the whole membership of the House should be here on a matter that will involve $25,000,000 or more.

Mr. MONDELL. There are a number of gentlemen who have not been expecting a vote this evening.

Mr. SHERLEY. If we can get an agreement, I will be willing to do this, that there shall be 30 minutes on a side on general debate, without regard to amendments being offered, that to-morrow immediately on the House going into Committee of the Whole amendments shall be considered under the strict enforcement of the 5-minute rule, 5 minutes pro and con, as they may be offered and as the proposition is read, with 30 minutes on a side at the end for the consideration of the basic proposition that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] offered.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is that at the end of the one hour of general debate the committee will rise.

Mr. HAMLIN. Do I understand that the general debate that is proposed now is without reference to any particular amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. This is my idea: There has been no explanation made of this proposition in any detail. I take it the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], and perhaps myself in addition, will endeavor to give to the House something in regard to the proposal as it is viewed by the proponents of it. Then gentlemen, like the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] and others, who may want to amend it in some material form, will present their viewpoint. Then we can take up the five-minute consideration of the proposal.

Mr. MADDEN. And confine the five-minute debate to five minutes on each side?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Who will control the time under general debate?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will be perfectly willing to have the gentleman from Tennessee control 30 minutes, and if there is anybody who is opposed to the amendment, they can control the other 30 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is always the rule in general debate that the time shall be equally divided by party sides.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is all right.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no objection to gentlemen on the minority side controlling the time in opposition, if not in favor of the amendment. Under the customary rule the time would be yielded to those on that side who are opposed to the amendment, and yielded to those on this side who are opposed to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The rule would be that time would be given those desiring recognition on this side, regardless of whether they are for or against the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that there be 30 minutes on a side for general debate, to be controlled, respectively, by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and that thereafter the section shall be read by paragraphs for amendment, with debate limited to any germane amendment, 5 for and 5 minutes against, until the conclusion of the consideration of the section; that at the conclusion the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] be recognized to offer an amendment touching the eight-hour work of employees; that on that there shall be 30 minutes' debate on a side, 30 minutes to be controlled by himself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee will be in order, the Chair will submit the gentleman's somewhat lengthy request. The gentleman from Kentucky submits the following unanimous-consent request: That there shall be 1 hour of general debate on this amendment, 30 minutes of that to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and 30 minutes of it to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]; that after this general debate shall have been concluded, the amendment shall thereafter be read under the 5-minute rule; that at the conclusion of the consideration of the amendment under the 5-minute rule, the gentleman from Kansas City [Mr. BORLAND] shall be recognized to submit an amendment in relation to the eight-hour law, and that for the debate on that amendment there shall be 1 hour, one half hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas City and the other half hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Chair will indulge me just a moment, I think this ought to be stated, because it was in my mind and I intended to state it, that in the consideration of amendments under the five-minute rule five minutes for and five minutes against should be strictly observed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I mean by that to exclude pro forma amendments to strike out one word, and two words, and three words, and have a clean-cut five minutes' debate pro and con on legitimate amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not a part of the original unanimous consent requested.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, can we have some understanding that the gentlemen in control of this time will dispose of it equally on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. That can be arranged with the gentlemen in control of the time.

Mr. NOLAN. I would like to see an equal division of time, and if that can be arranged I shall have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, I stated in reply to a question that I would parcel out the time on this side to those in favor and those in opposition.

Mr. NOLAN. It is not a question of parceling it out. It is a question of equal division of the time on both sides of the question.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will make a simple statement to the gentleman from California. I will endeavor to divide the time as nearly as I can. I do not know how many there are on this side who are opposed to it.

Mr. HELM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise?

Mr. HELM. I am opposed to the amendment, and I want to have at least five minutes. I want to know from whom I will get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to take that up with the gentlemen to whom the time is submitted.

Mr. KEATING. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to know something about the division of the time on the so-called Borland amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been stated. It will be 30 minutes on a side.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will have 30 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] 30 minutes. Now, is it understood that the time allotted to the gentleman from Wisconsin will be given to those opposed to the Borland amendment, and that the time allotted to the gentleman from Missouri to those in favor of it, and that those who are opposed to the amendment should have the same time as those who are in favor of it?

Mr. DYER. I think that should be done.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that instead of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] should have control of that time, and that it be divided equally for and against the proposal, just as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] would do.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Tennessee would not want to do that any more than the gentleman from Colorado would.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Colorado has no desire to control the time, but I would like to see the time fairly divided. So far as I am personally concerned, I am perfectly willing to leave that with the chairman of the committee, trusting to a fair division of the time.

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I did not clearly understand the chairman's statement and the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] as to the matter of the reading of the bill.

I think the chairman stated that at the close of the hour of general debate this amendment would be read and then open to amendment in the usual way under the five-minute rule. The understanding is that the amendment will be read by paragraphs?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, unquestionably.

Mr. MONDELL. And amendments offered at the end of each paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the way that all appropriation bills are read. It will be read as a part of the bill and as under the five-minute rule. Of course that carries with it the idea that it shall be read by paragraphs.

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I understand it is the intention of the gentleman from Tennessee to move to rise at the close of the one hour of debate?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is my idea that we can not possibly get on now, and I think if we are going to have 30 minutes' debate on a side, with everybody leaving the Chamber, we shall be wasting an hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that there will be no misunderstanding, so far as the House is concerned, as to the half hour's time to be controlled by me under the proposal, on the Borland amendment, if the gentleman from Missouri is going to control the half hour on that amendment by yielding to those in favor of it, I would then necessarily feel obliged to dispense my half hour to those who are in opposition to it.

Mr. BORLAND. I am going to yield time to those who are opposed to it as well as to those who are in favor of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Missouri says he is going to yield his time to those who are opposed to his amendment as well as those who are in favor of it.

Mr. DYER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection? The Chair will state, as an additional part of the request, that the amendments to be considered in connection with this new matter are to be real, substantial, germane amendments, and not the usual pro forma amendments, such as strike out the last word or the last two words or the last three words. Now, with that modification of the original request, is there objection?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, if I understand it is proposed to confine the general debate upon this proposition—which is absolutely new to the bill, which was not a part of it while we had the bill under general discussion in this House, and about which no Member of this House knows one thing except the members of the subcommittee who prepared it—to 30 minutes on a side. No Member of this House knows what charge this makes upon the Treasury.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, if the Committee on Appropriations can not intelligently present all of that phase of it in 10 minutes, it is not worthy the confidence of this House or any other body. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Still further reserving the right to object, the proposition here is to enter upon this general debate, which involves the merits of this raid on the Treasury of the United States, at this hour when every man here is preparing to go home——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri demands the regular order; that is, is there objection?

Mr. RAINEY. I may object. I say at this hour——

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Missouri withdraws his demand for the regular order——

Mr. DYER. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. RAINEY. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. SHERLEY. I call for the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent, that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in this bill, in order to conform to the text of the bill and the amendments adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals in the bill, so that they will conform to the amendments which have been adopted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment may be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 2, line 2, after the word "employed," insert "(whether previously in the service or not)."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state that the amendment is offered simply to make plain what is intended by the text in the original amendment. The original amendment reads as follows:

Where an employee has entered the service since June 30, 1917, whether such employee has received an increase in salary or not, such employee shall be granted the increased compensation provided herein only when and upon certification of the head of the department or establishment employing such persons of the reasons personal to such employees as would justify such increased compensation.

Now, the question has been raised as to whether or not that would apply to employees who had left the service and who have been out for a period of time and then returned since June 30, 1917. The only purpose of the amendment is to make it clear that it will apply to persons previously in the service and who had separated and then came back after June 30, 1917.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to inquire as to the status of a case like this: For some years employees have gone into the Bureau of Engraving and Printing under the civil service. Many have been transferred to the Treasury Department, where they are paid under a lump-sum appropriation. Would they receive the benefits of this amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They would, because they are in the service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are paid under a lump sum.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This applies to lump sums as well as those on the statutory roll.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there was objection made to the unanimous-consent request covering general debate. Does not the gentleman think that it is advisable to have some agreement as to general debate?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think so if we can get this amendment adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, following the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I ask unanimous consent that there be one hour of general debate upon this amendment, 30 minutes to be controlled by myself and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. Then that there be an hour upon the amendment which is to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. That the debate on amendments shall be under the five-minute rule and limited to bona fide germane amendments to the respective paragraphs.

I will say that if this agreement can be reached at this time, I will move that the committee rise and take up the discussion and consideration of the amendment to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that there shall be one hour general debate on the amendment, one-half to be controlled by him and one-half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]; that thereafter this amendment shall be considered paragraph by paragraph under the five-minute rule and that the amendments offered thereto shall be germane and not pro forma amendments; that at the expiration of the consideration of those amendments under the five-minute rule the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] will be recognized to offer his amendment relating to the eight-hour law, and upon that amendment there shall be one hour of debate, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. Is there objection?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this matter is to be taken up to-morrow, as the gentleman has stated, and I have no objection, provided the general debate can be divided equally between those opposed to the proposition and those who favor it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say that in so far as the limited time at my disposal is concerned I propose to divide it equally between those in favor of the amendment and those who are opposed to it.

Mr. RAINEY. If that same assurance can be given on the other side, I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say, and this is the second time that I have given the assurance——

Mr. RAINEY. Then the gentleman need not give it again.

Mr. STAFFORD. The time will be equally divided between those in favor and those opposed.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the same understanding be given regarding the Borland amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has the assurance on this side of the House that it will be divided equally.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 9053.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 9053. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the bill?

Mr. RAKER. It is the military highway bill.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I assume that it includes only the gentleman's own remarks.

Mr. RAKER. Well, I have to use some intelligent data and facts so as to make it readable and so it will be of some use to the House.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, inasmuch as the gentleman includes no other material that would not be of use to the House, I shall not object.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman says that in extending his remarks properly he must include facts that he gets outside. What is he going to use of his own?

Mr. RAKER. I am going to use such as with my own remarks and other data will make the statement readable and be of benefit to the House and the country.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, the gentleman has had that up four or five times.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, Ensign Walker Weed, of the United States Navy, recently lost his life at the Cape May Aviation Naval Training Ground under circumstances showing exceptional heroism and self-sacrifice. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a brief account of the occurrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. On what does the gentleman desire to extend his remarks?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I desire to print a brief account of the death of an ensign in the Navy, hailing from New Jersey, who was burned to death attempting to rescue a comrade.

Mr. RAKER. I would not object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman to withhold that until to-morrow.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Very well.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in order to comment on an order affecting my State, recently issued by the Fuel Administration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD about an order he does not like, issued by the Fuel Administrator.

Mr. KEATING. Oh, no—that he does like.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING BILL.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, following the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, if there be any portion of the day left, it shall be in order to consider the daylight-saving bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 14, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 14, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee expressing the deepest need of our Nation. Thou hast thrust upon us tremendous responsibilities in our day, opportunities to bless or curse, to uplift or tear down, and we dare not face these obligations unless we are right toward Thee. Give to us the inspiration of Thy truth that we may stand for the very highest in life, that the message of America may be the message of an evangel of God, and that we may write our laws and adopt our policies according to the Divine plan and will. To this end do Thou bless us this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have just received a letter from the secretary of the Michigan State Grange, Miss Jennie Buell, of Ann Arbor, transmitting to me a series of resolutions adopted by the Michigan State Grange protesting against certain proposed changes in the rural mail carrier system. I should like to have the resolutions and the communication printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions and communication were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MICHIGAN STATE GRANGE,
Ann Arbor, Mich., March 8, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: By unanimous vote of Michigan State Grange at its annual session the inclosed resolution was instructed to be sent to you.

Respectfully,

JENNIE BUELL, Secretary.

Whereas it is reported by Washington press correspondents that Postmaster General Burleson contemplates curtailment and a final abandonment of the rural mail carrier system through getting permit from Congress to substitute State contract carriers at his option; and

Whereas, securing the adoption of the rural carrier system for the purpose of giving the country residents mail facilities and privileges equal to that already provided through the carrier system to cities, was one of the great achievements of the grange organization, and to curtail and abandon it now would be an unjust discrimination against rural people: Therefore be it

Resolved by Michigan State Grange, a body fairly representative of the desires of all residents of the State, That it is strongly and determinedly opposed to abandonment in whole or in part of the said rural mail system, and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to all Congressmen and Senators to inform them of the action of this body.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of one medical expert, Office of Solicitor, Department of the Interior, from $2,000 to $2,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 250,000 copies of the soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' CIVIL RELIEF.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 39) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 250,000 copies of the soldiers and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, of which 75,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 175,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the same to be distributed through the folding rooms.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, by his request, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, House bill 9054.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma was agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is pending.

Mr. SMOOT. It is pending now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending to it, proposing to add what will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], at the end of the substitute for the paragraph from line 21 on page 92 to line 9 on page 93, the following language:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, upon request of the President, to use all or any part of this appropriation for the establishment of such plant or plants at any place in the United States for the purpose of supplying food for the Army and Navy.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Neither the Senator from Oklahoma nor the Senator from Nebraska is here, and as these two amendments are their special amendments, I think perhaps it would be well to pass them over. They are engaged in a hearing being conducted by the Agricultural Committee. I have telephoned to them that at their request I have called up the bill and asked them to come at once from the committee hearing, which no doubt they will do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the last amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I have another amendment that I wish to present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the last committee amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendment I will offer is in the nature of a committee amendment. I ask unanimous consent to pass over the pending amendment for a few minutes. I am sure both Senators will soon be in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, at the foot of page 68 I offer an amendment which I will send to the desk, but which I will explain before it is read. It is local in its nature, having reference to the experiment station in Georgia.

Immediately after the adoption of the Morrill Act the fund was put under the University of the State of Georgia, and the College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts was a part of the university. After the adoption of the Hatch Act the State of Georgia accepted its provisions and created a separate experiment station for the State of Georgia with a board of directors, a part of whom were selected from different portions of the State, and a part of whom were trustees and officers of the university of the State and were ex officio trustees of the experiment station. When the Adams Act was passed it was accepted, and the same provision applicable to the organization of the experiment station was continued.

In 1906 the legislature created the State College of Agriculture for Georgia as a branch of the university of the State, with a separate board of trustees. It provided that a portion of the trustees of the State College of Agriculture should be trustees of the experiment station and a portion of the trustees of the experiment station trustees of the agricultural college, and in that way joining the two together.

Ever since the adoption of the Hatch Act and the Adams Act the Experiment Station of the State of Georgia has been recognized as complying with the Federal statute and has received the Federal appropriation. For the first time this year the Secretary of Agriculture raised the point that it should be more completely, as I understand, under the control of the College of Agriculture and refused to draw a check for the appropriation. It has been organized for more than 20 years. It has received the appropriation for more than 20 years.

In the House a resolution was introduced recognizing the present organization of the experiment station in Georgia and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to continue to pay the appropriation to it. The Committee on Agriculture examined that resolution and reported unanimously in its favor, and it is pending in the House.

I presented it to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate after the Agricultural appropriation bill had been reported, and they unanimously approved it and authorized me to present it and the chairman of the committee to accept it, and I now ask for action on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the foot of page 68, after the word "act," and before the semicolon, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and all future appropriations, to the Georgia Experiment Station, as authorized by the act of March 2, 1887 (24 Stat., p. 440), commonly referred to as the Hatch Act, and the act of March 16, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 63), known as the Adams Act, and all amendments to said acts, in accordance with the act of the General Assembly of Georgia approved December 29, 1888, establishing the Georgia Experiment Station, and the act of August 18, 1906, accepting the benefits of the Adams Act (Georgia Laws, 1906, p. 1161).

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I desire to add a word only to what my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] has said. This is entirely a local matter—local to the State of Georgia. I do not think there is the slightest dissent on the proposition embraced in my colleague's amendment, either in this or in the other House of Congress.

The truth is, Mr. President, that under the very words of the law itself there never was the slightest excuse for the contention made by the Secretary of Agriculture. As a matter of law it has no foundation, and no court of any standing would entertain it for one moment. For years this money has been paid without question by one administration after another and by one party after another, until some wiseacre in one of these departments, who thought he knew more than anybody else, held it up. I think it is about time that we stopped that sort of business, and I earnestly hope that the amendment of my colleague will be adopted without the slightest objection.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator one question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Secretary of Agriculture refuse to pay the money to the agricultural college direct?

Mr. HARDWICK. Here is what happened, if the Senator please: This was a separate institution which had been established by the Legislature of Georgia to get this particular fund. It was not, as has been generally the case—although there are a half dozen exceptions—even a branch of the agricultural college.

Mr. SMOOT. In nearly all of the other States the agricultural colleges, as the Senator knows, have experimental stations in connection with them.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And I wondered whether the Secretary of Agriculture had gone so far as that he would not pay Georgia any money whatever, either to the agricultural college or to the experiment station.

Mr. HARDWICK. It amounts to that. They denied this appropriation for the State entirely, because they said it was our business to have the agricultural college a part of the University of Georgia, although there are several other States in the Union where that has not been done in many years. There is no doubt about the merit of this proposition, and any Senator who will investigate it will not have the slightest question that my colleague's amendment is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if I am in order, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

For applying such methods of eradication or control of the sweet-potato weevil as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, including the payment of such expenses and employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, in cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations, or individuals, as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes, $25,000, which shall be immediately available, and in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purposes: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of sweet potatoes, sweet-potato plants, or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, at what point in the bill does the Senator from Mississippi suggest his amendment?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is immaterial where the amendment is inserted. It may come in at the conclusion of the bill. It has no relation to any other item in the bill; and I suggest that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi to explain his proposed amendment. It was so long that it was impossible for me to grasp it while it was being read, with one or two interruptions.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, together with a number of other letters which I have received from my State, set out the fact that this little insect is working great ravages upon the sweet-potato industry in the States of Mississippi, Texas, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, and other States where that plant is cultivated. This crop amounts in value to something like $90,000,000 a year. It is a very essential and necessary article of food, and in certain sections of the South this weevil is doing a great deal of harm. The Secretary of Agriculture suggested that the sum of $50,000 might be appropriated, but I have reduced that to $25,000. It is rather difficult to kill this insect because of the fact that its ravages are entirely confined to the tuber, to the potato under the ground. The boll weevil stays on the surface, and the cotton-boll worm, the grasshopper, and other insects of that kind, can be poisoned by the use of——

Mr. SMOOT. Arsenic.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; Paris green or some other insecticide. There are a great many poisons which are used to exterminate these pests, but this little bug stays in the ground, safely removed from poisons that are distributed on the plant. He does not fly, he does not roost on the leaves or bore into the stalk, but down in the earth he plys his vocation by boring into the tuber. The able Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] the other day, in describing some of the pests which pester the agriculturist, dropped into poetry, and if I may be permitted to follow his lead, I think the best description of the potato weevil is in the following lines:

The June bug has the golden wing,
The firefly has the flame,
The potato weevil has no wings at all,
But he gets there all the same.

[Laughter.]

And he is getting there to the great disadvantage and the annoyance of the potato growers of the entire southern country. His field of operation is being widened, and unless something is done to check his ravages he will well-nigh destroy the potato crop of America, which amounts, as stated before, to nearly $90,000,000 a year. I think an appropriation of $25,000, to be used for the purpose of exterminating this pest, would be a prudent, provident investment by the Government of the United States, and I hope the Senate may agree to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply rise to enter my protest against the appropriation now asked for. I think if it goes into this bill it will reappear in similar bills and increase in amount yearly. I can not see why an appropriation should be asked for to exterminate an insect which attacks sweet potatoes any more than one should be asked for to go into the fields where the Irish potato is raised to the value of not $70,000,000 per year, but four or five times that amount, in order to exterminate the diseases which at different times affect the Irish potato, and there is also the potato bug to contend with. In this case the insect is called a weevil——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think a considerable appropriation was made a few years ago to exterminate certain pests that prey upon the Irish potato in New England.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember any, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; $87,800 is appropriated. The Senator will find it on page 21, line 15, the item reading as follows:

For the investigation of diseases of cotton, potatoes, truck crops, forage crops, drug and related plants, $87,800.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, potatoes are named there; but I venture the assertion now that of the $80,800 not $800 will be expended for the investigation of diseases of Irish potatoes. The amount will go to the other items enumerated. I have never heard of any money being appropriated for the purpose of conducting investigations as to diseases of Irish potatoes; and if Irish potatoes have been specified in any appropriation bill, those interested in producing that crop have never asked for any part of the appropriation. I know, however, it is not going to do any good to protest. I rose simply to say that, in my opinion, it is unwise to begin now appropriating for the extermination of the sweet-potato weevil.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask for a division.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. If it be in order at the present time, on page 23, line 23, after the word "rust," I move to insert "and the destruction of vegetation from which such rust spores originate, $150,000," so as to read:

Provided also, That $150,000 shall be set aside for the investigation and control of the diseases of wheat, oats, and barley, known as black rust and stripe rust, and the destruction of vegetation from which such rust spores originate, $150,000.

That would make the entire appropriation $250,000 instead of the $100,000 now provided. It is not specified, at least definitely, that the $100,000 may be used for the destruction of the barberry bush from which the spores of the rust are germinated.

We discussed this subject several days ago, at which time I made the assertion that the rust in a single year, 1916, and in the course of a very few days, caused a damage to the wheat crop of more than $100,000,000. My colleague [Mr. GRONNA] corrected me and said that the damage caused amounted to more than $100,000,000 in the State of North Dakota alone, and probably, at the same ratio, the loss would be more than $150,000,000 in the aggregate. That is a most serious loss; there is no one ravage that is sought to be checked by this bill that will even approach it in the matter of dollars and cents.

Scientists have discovered—at least they think they have discovered—that the spores of the rust originate upon certain vegetation, and that it is necessary to destroy that vegetation. That can not be done unless we have the consent of the States and of the owners of land on which the vegetation is growing that it may be exterminated, because it would come within the police powers of the State; but I have no doubt, Mr. President, we could secure such consent and the cooperation of every State in the Union. I know we certainly could in the spring-wheat growing States, where the ravages of the rust are the greatest.

Considering the importance of the matter and the enormous loss that is caused every year by the rust, it seems to me that I am justified in asking that we increase this $100,000 appropriation to $250,000. It is not necessary to make any further argument. We have already presented to the Senate the facts as to the loss involved; we have presented to the Senate the conclusions of scientists who have studied the question and who declare that the disease can be exterminated in the manner suggested, and I understood when we were discussing this matter the other day that the amendment was satisfactory to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not entirely clear about the appropriation which the Senator suggests for this purpose. I am in sympathy with the object the Senator has in view; but I wonder if he has read the language under which these different sums are set aside for the several purposes specified, all of which must come from the appropriation of $291,505.

Mr. McCUMBER. The adoption of my amendment would necessitate, of course, the changing of other figures, so as to include this item, and of the total amount carried by the bill, as set forth at the end of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The paragraph appropriates $291,505, of which $40,000 is to be set aside for the study of corn improvement, and $100,000 for the study of wheat and oats diseases. The Senator from North Dakota suggests that another $150,000 of it be set aside for the eradication of the barberry bush. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars plus $100,000 makes $250,000, and the addition of $40,000 makes $290,000, leaving only $1,505 for all the other purposes of the appropriation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will state that, if the amendment carries, it will have to be followed by a further amendment adding $150,000 to the $291,505.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator's amendment does not do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; this amendment does not do that; but it would necessarily have to be followed by a further amendment adding to the total appropriation carried by the paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, when this subject was before the Committee on Agriculture the committee increased the appropriation $50,000, and specifically required that $100,000 should be used for the purpose desired by the Senator from North Dakota. The appropriation in all is $291,505. Of that amount $165,000 is assigned for specific purposes, leaving only $126,505 assigned to purposes other than those desired by the Senator from North Dakota. I was under the impression that this provision was entirely satisfactory to the members of the committee especially interested in the growing of wheat.

Now, I wish to ask the Senator whether any estimate has been made by the department for the increased amount to which he refers? The increase not having been recommended by the committee, unless estimated for by the department, of course, the increase can not be made upon the floor of the Senate, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know that there was an estimate made. The $50,000 appropriation was increased to $100,000——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But that was done by the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and I presume that an estimate had been made or that the committee acted upon some information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will simply say that from the information I have, the amount will be insufficient to accomplish the result or anything like the result we desire to accomplish; but not being a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I can not inform the Senator whether the Secretary of Agriculture or the Department of Agriculture has made an estimate on the subject. Probably my colleague [Mr. GRONNA] can inform the Senator, as he is a member of the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me, I will say that while no estimate has been made for such an amount as my colleague has proposed, I am quite sure that the Secretary of Agriculture would be willing at this time to make such an estimate, realizing, as he does now, the importance of this question. I think that it would be impossible to expend any money to any better advantage than for this particular purpose.

I think I called the attention of the Senator from Georgia, in committee, to the fact that in a single year there were more than a hundred million bushels of wheat destroyed in just a few days in my own State, and it was all due to rust; and it is said by nearly all of the scientists of the country that these spores originate from the barberry bush. It is no longer a question of scientific study. It is the same with this question as with the cattle tick or with the citrus-fruit canker. All you have to do is to go and destroy it.

I trust that the amendment proposed by my colleague will not be objected to, although I will say that, so far as I know, no estimate has been made for it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to repeat a question which I asked him a few days ago, when this matter was up for consideration, but I have forgotten the answer the Senator gave me? What has been done in the matter of investigating the source of this evil up to this time? I would like to ask the Senator, further, if the States contribute anything to this fund?

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, yes. The States, and especially the Western States, the spring-wheat States, are practically the only ones that have contributed to it. We have been appropriating some $10,000 a year for this purpose, and all that money, of course, has been expended here in the city of Washington, making these investigations as to the causes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The cause has been discovered, and you want sufficient funds to carry your investigations further?

Mr. GRONNA. Absolutely.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall vote for it with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this $50,000 increase, I think, was made at the instance of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did the Senator before the committee urge the full amount of $200,000?

Mr. GRONNA. No; I did not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was under the impression that we did what the Senator thought we ought to do.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that is very true, and I am very glad the Senator has asked that question. I thought the $100,000 would be sufficient; but since we had this question up before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry Prof. Bolley and the president of the Agricultural College of Crookston, Minn., were here, and they talked with me about this, and they talked with my colleague about it, and they convinced me that we ought to appropriate a million dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the Senator does not think that a sufficient sum can be obtained out of this total of $291,000, increasing even the $100,000 required to go to this source and meet the necessities of the situation?

Mr. GRONNA. I believe, Mr. President, that we can do a great deal of good with two or three hundred thousand dollars; we can do a great deal of good with $100,000; but the Senator knows very well how these things work out in his own State, with these diseases which you have in the South, with the boll weevil, with the cattle tick, with the citrus-fruit canker, and all these things. It is just simply a question of whether you want to eradicate and exterminate these diseases at once or whether you want to do just a little each year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And it is a disease that can be exterminated?

Mr. GRONNA. Absolutely.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The chairman of the committee has come in now, and I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad to know that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So far as I am concerned, the Senate can vote on it.

Mr. GRONNA. I was quite sure the Senator from Georgia would not make the point.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The responsibility rests upon the chairman and not upon myself.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me state, in addition to what my colleague has stated, that the scientists connected with our central agricultural colleges agree that the source of this trouble has been ascertained; that it is in the barberry bush, as we have stated. Now, there are two ways of reaching that. The first is by the destruction of the bushes themselves. They are used for hedges in a great many of our States, and it would necessitate their destruction and possibly some cost would be involved. It is possible that instead of cutting down the bushes and destroying them in that way, and thereby destroying what we might call the nests of these spores, it could be done by spraying at a certain season of the year. I am not certain as to that; but whether it is done by the destruction of the bush or by spraying at certain seasons, I am certain of one thing from their information, that $100,000 is not sufficient, and that they ought to have at least $250,000 this year.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I simply wish to say, for my own part, that I am very heartily in favor of the amendment. I look upon it as an insurance fund. If it can not be effectively used, it will not be used at all; it will lapse and return to the Treasury. If it can be used, the compensation will be out of all proportion to the amount appropriated and expended.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, under the statement of the chairman of the committee and the statement of the Senator from North Dakota, I shall also vote for the amendment. It is a great pleasure to me always to feel that I can help practically to do anything for the agricultural interests of any part of the country, and my interest in the Northwest is almost equal to my interest in my own immediate section. It is a problem of what can be practically done to help increase production, not only in the interest of the producer but in the interest of the entire people of the country who have the benefit of the production.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, I want to say that I have always found the Senator from Georgia willing to assist the Northwest as well as other parts of the country in the production of foodstuffs as well as other things. I am exceedingly glad that not only the members of the committee but the Members of this body will allow this appropriation at this time; and, as the chairman has stated, if the full amount is not necessary, it will go back into the Treasury, and there will be no expense to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is one matter regarding which I should like a little information in this connection. I want to ask the Senators from the wheat sections of the country whether the barberry bush is indigenous to that part of the United States? I know that it is used in the Eastern States, in New England, for ornamental hedges, and I presume these spores can be carried a long distance if there is a high wind; but I should like to know whether or not the barberry bush grows in the wheat-producing States.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say that while the State which I in part represent is not a timber country, still we have a great many barberry bushes around the lakes. They are indigenous to the State of Minnesota, very much so, and more so to the State of South Dakota, but they grow quite profusely in my own State.

Mr. GALLINGER. I raised the question simply to satisfy my own mind as to the distance these spores could be carried. So it seems that the bush does grow, in a sense, contiguous to the wheat fields of the Northwest.

Mr. GRONNA. It does.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the scientists have gotten at the true cause for the rust in wheat which produced such havoc last year in certain of the wheat States, certainly this appropriation is fully justified, and in voting for it I am doing so upon the supposition that the scientists are not mistaken in locating the exciting cause of the trouble.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 23, after the words "black rust and stripe rust," it is proposed to insert "and the destruction of vegetation from which such rust spores originate, $150,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before any further amendments other than committee amendments are introduced I wish to call attention to a committee amendment that has not been disposed of, and then we can go back to individual amendment, if that suits the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to state to the chairman of the committee that in his absence, by unanimous consent, the Senate passed over the amendment on page 92, for which he offered a substitute, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] offered an amendment to the substitute of the chairman of the committee. In the absence of both of those Senators I felt that we could not well consider that part of the bill, and I asked that it be passed over until they entered the Chamber. As they are both here now, I ask that the Senate return to page 92, from lines 10 to 20, applicable to prizes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Georgia that I want to thank him first for asking that it go over. Both the chairman of the committee and myself were in attendance upon a meeting of the Agricultural Committee this morning.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I stated that fact, and I stated that I brought up the bill in the absence of the chairman by request, and that as he and the Senator from Nebraska were absent at that meeting I had had them telephoned, and I had no doubt they would be here in a little while.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much obliged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That act. No. 41, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved August 10, 1917, be amended by adding the following at the end of section 14 of said act:

"Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated, or any unexpended balance heretofore appropriated, shall be used to defray the expenses of the Food Administration or any other department of the Government in the work of grading potatoes, and no regulation shall be made therefor: Provided further, That it shall not be lawful to grade potatoes as to size or otherwise interfere with the marketable value thereof when such products are free from blight, dry rot, and other disease harmful to the public health."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I had printed a few days ago. I may say that I offer it at the request of the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury may detail medical officers of the Public Health Service to the Department of Agriculture for cooperative assistance in the administration of the food and drugs act, approved June 30, 1906, and amended August 23, 1912, and the compensation and expenses of the officers so detailed may be paid from the applicable appropriations made herein for enforcement of said act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is legislation, beyond a question of doubt, and unless there is some good reason why it should go on this appropriation bill a point of order ought to be made against it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will ask to have read a letter from the department on the subject. I think it justifies the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, February 21, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR GORE: Referring to the amendment to the Agriculture appropriation bill, providing that hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury may detail medical officers of the Public Health Service to the Department of Agriculture for cooperative assistance in the administration of the food and drugs act, which you introduced at the request of the department, as made orally by Mr. W. G. Campbell, of the Bureau of Chemistry, it is necessary in the efficient enforcement of the food and drugs act to have such authority as is contemplated by this amendment, in order to fill vacancies caused by a number of our men having left the department since the declaration of war. It is important to have competent medical men, whose judgment is authoritative and whose opinions carry weight in the courts when they appear as witnesses in cases brought under the act.

The department has found it practically impossible to secure the services of competent medical officers of sufficient experience and maturity for this work, at salaries which the department can afford to pay for such services, through civil-service examinations. Through the courtesy of the Public Health Service, Dr. M. W. Glover has been detailed to the Bureau of Chemistry to take charge of this work. This department hesitates to ask the Treasury Department to detail additional men for this work unless the salaries and expenses of such men can be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of the food and drugs act. Medical officers of the Public Health Service receive additional compensation based on longevity of service, and have certain rights of retirement after being in the service a certain number of years, so that if such medical officers are actually transferred to this department they would forfeit the rights and privileges which have accrued to them on account of service already rendered in the Public Health Service.

It is desired, therefore, to secure legislation which will permit the detail of officers of the Public Health Service for this important work, allowing their compensation and expenses to be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of the food and drugs act, and at the same time allowing them to retain their rights and status as officers of the Public Health Service. Legislation has already been enacted authorizing such details to the Bureau of Mines. The legislation referred to is found in an act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918 (ch. 27, 41 Stat. L., pp. 105–146). The amendment which the department recommended, and which was submitted to you by Mr. Campbell, was prepared by the solicitor of the department, as follows. Insert as line 18½ on page 51:

"The Secretary of the Treasury may detail medical officers of the Public Health Service to the Department of Agriculture for cooperative assistance in the administration of the food and drugs act, approved June 30, 1906, and amended August 23, 1912, and the compensation and expenses of the officers so detailed may be paid from the applicable appropriations made herein for enforcement of said act."

This amendment, if adopted, will enable the department to have such men as may be needed detailed from the Public Health Service to the Bureau of Chemistry. This can be done without creating a permanent organization, which might be larger than would be needed later. It is contemplated that not more than one or two details will be necessary at the present time.

Respectfully, D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the following amendment to be inserted in the bill at the appropriate place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the appropriate place in the bill insert:

Section 6 of the act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, approved August 2, 1886," is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins, tubs, or other wooden or paper packages not before used for that purpose, each containing not less than 10 pounds, and marked, stamped, and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and all sales made by the manufacturers of oleomargarine, and wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall be in original stamped packages.

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine must sell only from original stamped packages, in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds, and shall pack the oleomargarine sold by them in suitable wooden or paper packages, which shall be marked and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine in any other form than in new wooden or paper packages as above described, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who falsely brands any packages or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for each offense not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not more than two years."

Mr. WADSWORTH (interrupting the reading). The remainder of the amendment I sent to the desk is a repetition of existing law. May I say to the Senate the only amendment suggested to section 6 of the law of August 2, 1886, is the insertion of the words "or paper" after the words "wooden packages" the idea being that under the existing law oleomargarine can be sold by the manufacturer only in firkins or tubs made of wood. The object of this amendment is to permit that same oleomargarine to be contained in paper packages as well as wood.

Mr. PENROSE. May I make an inquiry of the Senator? I should like to ask whether the amendment alters the size of the package.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. It makes no change whatsoever in the regulations as to the size of the package, the manner of sale, the tax, or the coloring of the oleomargarine in any respect. It simply permits the manufacturer to use paper as well as wood as the container. The idea is this, that the wood containers are, of course, growing more and more expensive as wood is becoming more and more scarce, and there are paper boxes which are entirely proper for use in this connection. This would permit paper boxes to be used as well as wood. That is the only amendment of the law.

Mr. GORE. I do not believe the Senator from New York stated—if so, I did not understand him—that under the law the wooden packages must be destroyed when once used. Of course, that is a matter of waste. The paper packages can be reconverted into paper and used again, and as a matter of economy and conservation I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is another economy that can be brought about.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire at this point, under Rule XL, to give notice of a motion to suspend the rules in order to offer an amendment to the bill providing that growers of wheat who were not satisfied last year with the price paid by the Government shall have the right to go into the Federal courts and ascertain whether or not the price paid was just compensation.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, strike out the word "and," at the end of line 19, and insert a comma after the word "handling," and in line 20, after "transportation," insert "and uses," so as to read:

Grading, weighing, handling, transportation, and uses of naval stores.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That only adds the word "uses." I do not see any objection to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Are we going now into an investigation of what the naval stores are used for?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The different uses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Florida be willing to explain the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I should like to have it explained.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The purpose of the amendment is to give a little more latitude under this appropriation in the research and investigation which is to be made by the Agricultural Department. The naval-stores industry of the country has suffered very materially on account of having the principal markets cut off, due to the inability to transport the products, and it has become necessary to investigate other uses that may be made of naval stores.

To appreciate the merits of that position, of course, we have to consider the value and necessity of this industry to the country. The industry has been almost paralyzed during the war. The avenues of sale have been cut off to a very great extent. The idea of the amendment is that the department may investigate other uses to which the product of the naval-stores industry may be devoted. That really is the object of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the object is that the Government is to find a market for it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is no increase of the appropriation whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. I know there is no increase in the appropriation, but that is really the object of the amendment, is it not?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Florida if that is not really the object of the amendment?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Indirectly that might be the object. Of course if they find additional uses that, of course, would assist in finding an enlarged market.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see any reason why the Senator should not admit it, because that is what it is for, of course.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is the object. It is to enlarge the resources for the sale of the product by making inquiry into other purposes for which naval stores may be utilized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I propose another amendment. It is the same amendment offered a moment ago reducing the appropriation I proposed from $25,000 to $20,000. I wish to say to the Senate again it is a matter of very vital concern to the people living in the southern part of my State, and it is also important to the people of Georgia and Florida and a portion of Texas. It is especially very necessary in the interest of the people who cultivate the sweet potato that some means may be discovered by which this destructive pest may be exterminated. I think that $20,000 invested in this will be wisely expended and bring large returns. I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator if he would not offer his amendment on page 21 to the item for the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits? There is an appropriation of $79,935, of which $8,000 shall be available for the investigation of diseases of the pecan. Then the Senator's amendment might follow, of which $20,000 may be expended for the investigation of this pest.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator propose that amendment to the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, I suggest it. Then there would be no increase in the appropriation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suppose the Committees on Agriculture of the two Houses did not agree to appropriate any more than was needed for the particular item mentioned in the paragraph just read by the Senator. I know this which I propose is necessary. The Secretary of Agriculture thinks so and the people of the States where the insect is perpetrating its devastations think so. I really think that if a method could be discovered by which this insect could be destroyed it would be a very wise investment, a very provident use of money.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from South Carolina called attention to the fact that there was already an appropriation in the bill for the investigation of potatoes. It does not say Irish potatoes nor does it say sweet potatoes. As long as we are appropriating for potatoes I am perfectly willing to have it all go under sweet potatoes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. As far as I am personally concerned that might suit me, but it would not suit the people in other parts of the country where the appropriation is intended by the committee to be expended.

Mr. SMOOT. The appropriation of $75,935, of course, is not intended to include the investigation of potatoes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, not a dollar of this appropriation is to be used unless the State or community where it is to be expended put up an equal amount. I think we can trust to the discretion of the Agricultural Department for the wise use of the money. It is a very small amount.

Mr. SMOOT. We debated the same question before, as the Senator stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have always in considering the Agricultural bill been interested in the various insects as they are from time to time doing destruction to farm products. I was out of the Chamber when this matter was discussed this morning. I should like to know, in a few words, from the Senator from Mississippi precisely what this insect is and what it is doing to sweet potatoes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is an insect that bores through the tuber. It can not be treated like a great many insects that fly. There is an effort being made to discover a method by which it can be destroyed. The destruction of the crop in a great many instances amounts to 80 and 90 per cent, and the Agricultural Department thinks that by preventing the shipment of sweet potatoes from one infected region to another it will probably result in the extermination of the pest.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will ask him if the department has not authority now to quarantine?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The department suggested that we appropriate $50,000. I reduced it to $25,000. The Senate rejected that a moment ago, and I have now asked for $20,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know a year or two ago the department did quarantine Aroostock County, Me., where enormous quantities of Irish potatoes are raised, for the reason that there was a dry rot or something of the kind in the potatoes that was supposed to be communicable. I wondered why the department could not do the same thing in connection with sweet potatoes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The department will do that if it is given anything to work with, and the department could use $50,000 profitably.

Mr. GALLINGER. I just wondered where the department got the money to quarantine in the State of Maine. I am very sure we did not make a specific appropriation for it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If I remember correctly there was an appropriation of a considerable amount of money proposed by the then Senator from Maine, Mr. Johnson.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so. If so, I had forgotten it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think an appropriation was made for that purpose.

Mr. GORE. There was.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply asked the question because I have sometimes wondered whether we are ever going to get control of the various insects that are doing such destruction and causing us to appropriate so much money in these agricultural bills.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that I am just as desirous as he or any Senator in this body that the appropriations shall be confined to necessary and proper uses. I would not ask for this appropriation if I did not think it was an investment that would bring a large return to the American people.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am satisfied of that, as far as the Senator is concerned.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is a very small amount and I should like very much to have the Senator agree to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Still, watching the growth of these appropriations, I shall be greatly disappointed if next year a much larger amount is not asked for the same purpose.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator will recall the fact that these appropriations are made for the protection of the interests of a class of people who have very little to do with the Public Treasury except to contribute the sinews of war. The whole superstructure of commerce rests upon the product of their toil, and as far as I am personally concerned, I am in favor of giving them every assistance possible. I think that the United States gets more from the appropriations made and expended by the Agricultural Department than for any other department of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am quite in sympathy with that view, and yet I have watched these appropriations grow to an extent that sometimes rather alarms me. I will make a suggestion hoping that it will not lead to a debate, because it has already been discussed. I have been much interested in the appropriations for the so-called pink boll weevil. The pink boll weevil appeared a year or two ago. Last year we made an appropriation of $250,000. It has been stated in debate that in some way it crossed the Rio Grande River and is affecting a small part of Texas. The department recommended $500,000 this year, and the committee has made an appropriation of $800,000.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the department estimated for $800,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then in the wisdom of the House Committee on Agriculture they reduced the estimate to $500,000.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senate committee has put it back to $800,000, just a jump of $550,000 in a year, that is all. But then we have such vast amounts of money in our Treasury at the present time that, of course, we can spend it for any purpose we may see fit.

In saying that I do not say it in opposition to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator says that he knows that this is a worthy use of money on the part of the Department of Agriculture, and I certainly shall not interpose any objection that would prevent it from going into the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire, he is familiar with the destruction that resulted in Maine from the potato scale.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. GORE. That was a disease of the white potato, the Irish potato as I prefer to call it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. GORE. It was extremely disastrous. It affected not only the potato industry of Maine but in many parts of the country which relied upon Maine for their seed potatoes. I think we appropriated $100,000 at one session and perhaps a smaller appropriation at another.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the very thing I had lost sight of. I had an impression that we had not made an appropriation, but that the department had money that was used for the purpose of quarantining against that disease. However, the Senator states that there was an appropriation made for that purpose, and I think it was a very wise use of money indeed.

Mr. GORE. There can be no doubt of that, but the point peculiarly gratifying to the Senator from New Hampshire is that it has disappeared from the bill. The disease has been eradicated and the appropriation vanished.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is one of the most remarkable things that has ever been brought to my attention—that an appropriation disappeared from the bill the succeeding year.

Mr. GORE. I mention it as a novelty without precedent and probably without parallel in the future.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in the amendment, beginning at the bottom of page 13, I especially call attention to the clause at the top of page 14 containing the words "for immediate slaughter." The question was before the Senate for the elimination of those words, and there was considerable discussion at that time. I am not going over it again, but I had in my office a letter from the Department of Agriculture with reference to it. I did not have it present with me at the time. I think it ought to go in the RECORD. I believe the Senate acted without any particular information as to what those words "for immediate slaughter" in the bill mean. The words ought to go out. I ask that the Secretary may read this letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary proceeded to read, and before concluding,

Mr. KENYON. There is not anybody paying any attention to the reading of the letter, so I will not ask to have the reading continued; it is a waste of time. Let it go in the RECORD.

The letter entire is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR KENYON: I have your letter of February 18, 1918, with reference to the interstate shipment of cattle reacting to the tuberculosis test.

The Agricultural bill, as reported to the Senate from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, contains an amendment to the act of May 29, 1884, with the inclusion of the words "for immediate slaughter," on page 14, line 1. The amendment with the insertion of these words will only partially accomplish the aims of the department. While it is believed desirable to permit the interstate shipment for immediate slaughter of cattle which have reacted to the tuberculin test, it is considered wise also to provide for the shipment, interstate, of pure-bred animals which have reacted to such tests, so that they may be returned to their original owners to be retained by them for breeding purposes under quarantine restrictions. This can be accomplished by regulation if the words "for immediate slaughter" are eliminated. This latter proposal, in the opinion of the department, is of far greater importance to the country than the provision permitting the shipment of the animals for immediate slaughter.

If the amendment is allowed to stand as it is, then pure-bred cattle which had reacted to the tuberculin test would still be prohibited from moving interstate, except for slaughter, which would benefit the packer but not the farmer.

The interstate movement of these reacting animals will be surrounded by restrictions imposed by means of regulations which will safeguard the movement of the animals as well as protect the live-stock industry against the further spread of tuberculosis. It is proposed to permit the shipment of such cattle only to those States that will cooperate with the department in imposing quarantine restrictions upon such reacting animals at the farms of their original owners. We now have effective cooperation with various States in the shipment of hogs that have been vaccinated against cholera, and it is believed that the cooperation will prove equally effective in the case of tuberculosis of cattle.

Experience has shown that reacting cattle may be safely segregated from healthy animals on the farm and used for breeding purposes by the adoption of what is known as the Bang system. This consists of keeping the reacting cattle entirely separate and apart from healthy animals on the same premises.

The calves born of reacting cows do not inherit the disease and can therefore be safely removed from their mothers immediately after birth and placed with the healthy cattle, where they are reared upon the milk of healthy cows. In this way the healthy portion of the herd constantly increases while the reacting animals are disposed of as rapidly as may be deemed necessary.

Finally all of the reactors have been disposed of and the remaining herd is composed entirely of healthy cattle. There are several modifications of the Bang system which may be adopted under the conditions which obtain in different States, but the underlying principle of all of these is the segregation of the reactors and the removal immediately after birth of their healthy offspring.

Very truly, yours,

J. R. MOHLER, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter on this question from the Department of agriculture of the State of Illinois. Leaving these words "for immediate slaughter" in this bill amounts to nothing, except to help the packers; it helps no one else; and I desire to call attention to the matter in the RECORD, so that the conference committee may have some basis on which to act in striking out those words, if they shall feel inclined to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the letter referred to by the Senator from Iowa will be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS.
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Springfield, March 5, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON,
United States Senator from Iowa, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I notice an amendment to a bill—Calendar No. 243, H. R. 9054—"An act making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919." I think it very important that this bill should be changed a little.

Page 14 of the printed bill, line 1, should be amended by striking out the words "for immediate slaughter." I think the pure-bred cattle breeders in this State, as well as other States—and we have one of the leading States in the Union in the pure-bred cattle industry—would appreciate it very highly if that amendment was made to this bill. In many cases a man will pay as high as $1,000 or $2,000 for a breeding animal. He sells it into another State and it reacts to the tuberculin test. Of course the buyer of the animal wishes the seller to make good the loss sustained by this animal reacting. Under the provision of this bill the animal could be returned only for immediate slaughter.

A cow might be worth $2,000 and react and not be a spreader of tuberculosis either. If this man was permitted to have this cow returned to his herd and keep her for producing cows under what is known as the Bang system, she would be worth as much to him as any other cow, if she were isolated from the herd. This method is practiced very largely by men who have a very valuable breeding cow that reacts.

In these days when we need food so badly it looks almost like a crime to have a valuable breeding cow sacrificed, when under the Bang system she can go on and produce calves perhaps for her natural life, the calf being taken away immediately from its mother and raised on a healthy cow. She may in that way produce many valuable animals to the breed.

I think you would render a very great service to the pure-bred live-stock industry of the country if you would see to it that that amendment is made.

Thanking you in advance for whatever or any interest you may take in this matter, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

CHAS. ADKINS,
Director of Agriculture.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, when this provision was before the Senate the other day, I proposed to strike out the words "for immediate slaughter," which had been inserted by the Senate committee, but a majority of the Members of this body saw fit not to do so. I have here a letter from a very able veterinarian of my State, Dr. W. F. Crewe, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the letter is not long, I should like to have it read.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I ask that the letter may be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. If we have made a mistake in this matter, we ought to correct it.

Mr. GRONNA. I think that we are making a mistake, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
LIVE STOCK SANITARY BOARD,
Bismarck, N. Dak., February 27, 1918.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have received your letter of the 23d instant, in which you indicate that the Senate committee would not concede to the elimination of the words "for immediate slaughter," from the amendment in question, which would permit the shipment interstate of pure-bred cattle that could be held in quarantine for breeding purposes.

Your letter would indicate that apparently nothing further could be done in the matter, and it would seem that if the representatives of the Bureau of Animal Industry were unable to explain the circumstances so that they could be clearly understood by the committee it would hardly be possible for an impression to be made by communication.

However, for your information, permit me to give just one illustration of the conditions. We have had similar in this State, but the cattle have not been of as high value.

A resident of Montana purchased a number of high-class shorthorn cattle in Iowa. The animals were accompanied by a certificate of health, indicating they had been tuberculin tested and were free from disease. However, one of the animals, a bull for which the owner had paid $5,000, was tested 60 days after arrival, and gave a positive, clear-cut reaction to the test, indicating he was tuberculous. The balance of the animals were then retested and eight more of them gave a reaction indicating they were tuberculous.

Now, these animals cost the purchaser over $20,000. Needless to say, the owner did not desire to have this amount of money invested in tuberculous cattle, and apparently there was something crooked in the deal. In his effort to secure settlement, the seller offered to make settlement if the animals were returned to him, as he considered them of great value, and he could hold them segregated for breeding purposes. However, the Federal act in question prohibited the return shipment, and left the settlement up in the air, as it were.

Now, it does not appear that this man would be prosecuted for shipping these animals in the first place, although they undoubtedly were diseased at that time. However, the man that wishes to return them, and is willing to return them, described as just what they are, tuberculous cattle, to be shipped under restrictions and to go into quarantine to be held segregated, would not be permitted to do so. I think you can see the injustice of the matter. The man who resorts to underhand methods to dispose of these animals gets by and the man that goes into the deal and wants to act on the square has to stand the loss.

I wish, however, to thank you for your kind efforts in the matter.

Yours, respectfully,

W. F. CREWE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to further amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I send to the desk an amendment, of which I move the adoption as a new section to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, allow me to make the suggestion to the Senator from Oklahoma, that if this amendment is to be acted upon there no doubt will be a call for a quorum. Why not have a call for a quorum now, and then have the amendment read, instead of after the quorum is called having some Senator who is not now present ask for the reading of the amendment? I think we should save time by suggesting the absence of a quorum now, and having Senators present, so that they may hear the amendment read in the first place.

Mr. GORE. I will say that while I am offering the amendment at this time and in this way I thought possibly there might be a point of order made against it. I am very frank about it. I give notice, however, that if any Senator makes a point of order on the amendment I have filed the required notice to suspend the rules, and if this amendment goes out on the point of order I have arranged with the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to proceed with an amendment which he has, and I will defer for the present the calling up of my motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMOOT. In any event the amendment involves a very important matter, and I think we ought to have a quorum present before the reading is proceeded with, so that Senators will know what is before the Senate. There are now very few Senators in the Chamber; they are at luncheon, and I think it will save the time of the Senate to have a quorum now, and then go on with the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator is mistaken about that in view of what I have stated.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Shields
Bankhead	Harding	Martin	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Hardwick	Myers	Smoot
Calder	Henderson	Nelson	Sterling

Gronna	McLean	Sheppard

Mr. MCNARY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to serious illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has been called from the Chamber on official matters.

Mr. MYERS. My colleague [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily detained from the Senate by official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Secretary will resume the reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment offered by Mr. GORE, which was to insert as a new section the following:

That section 14 of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governing conditions of delivery and payment and differences in price for the several standard grades at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced, adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent as the basis. Thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guaranty within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty. The guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 2 northern spring or its equivalent at not less than $2.50 per bushel at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced.

This guaranty shall not be dependent upon the action of the President under the first part of this section, but is hereby made absolute and shall be binding until May 1, 1919. When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to this section, and ascertains what rate of duty, added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat at the time of importation, would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed therefor pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat under any then existing tariff law of the United States. For the purpose of making any guaranteed price effective under this section, or whenever he deems it essential in order to protect the Government of the United States against material enhancement of its liabilities arising out of any guaranty under this section, the President is authorized also, in his discretion, to purchase any wheat for which a guaranteed price shall be fixed under this section, and to hold, transport, or store it, or to sell, dispose of, and deliver the same to any citizen of the United States or to any Government engaged in war with any country with which the Government of the United States is or may be at war, or to use the same as supplies for any department or agency of the Government of the United States. Any moneys received by the United States from or in connection with the sale or disposal of wheat under this section may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this section. Any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. GORE. Question!

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, do I understand this is the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee relating to the price of wheat?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; I have been authorized by the committee to offer it, and have just offered it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I therefore raise the question that it is new legislation and can not be attached to this appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to say anything on the point of order before the Chair rules?

Mr. GORE. I may say that I think the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks so, and sustains the point of order. The Chair thought, however, before ruling that the Senator from Oklahoma might desire to be heard.

Mr. GORE. I will say further that I have given notice in writing, under Rule XI., that I would move to suspend the rules in order that the amendment may be offered in due form. I thought that probably Senators would be willing for the discussion to go forward without resorting to that expedient.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I shall defer saying what I had intended to say upon the subject until the notice which the rules require has expired and the matter is properly presented to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When was the notice given?

Mr. GORE. The notice was given several days ago, but I will say that I do not feel at this time well enough to proceed with the discussion myself. So I will not call up that notice at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I thought the notice was given just this morning. Did not the Senator give some written notice this morning?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; that related to another matter. The notice in regard to this motion was given several days ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Oklahoma does not desire to proceed with the question now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I was called out of the Chamber for a moment. May I ask the present status of the proposed amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order has been sustained. The question now is whether the Senate will suspend the rule.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understood the chairman of the committee, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota, he does not desire to make the motion to suspend the rules now. He has given the notice, but, as I understand, he desires to go on with other matters in the bill before calling up that motion.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I have given notice, but it was not my purpose call up the notice at this time; in fact, I have been informed that the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] desires to offer an amendment at this time, and I had intended to defer to him for that purpose. I will call up the notice at a later time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether, in his judgment, the consideration of this bill is likely to take the balance of the day?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I may say that I think in all probability it will.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to renew my motion to strike out lines 10 to 16, inclusive, on page 91.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas to strike out the lines indicated by him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think the language ought to be read, so that the Senate may understand what it is proposed to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 91 it is proposed to strike out the following words:

No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau, or office in the District of Columbia which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the clause which I have moved to strike out overturns a system that has worked well for something like 20 years. In 1898 Congress enacted a law establishing a minimum working-day for Government employees of seven hours, with the right on the part of heads of departments to require additional hours at any time without additional compensation. The salaries were fixed on that basis, and, as I say, the system has worked well for 20 years. It was found, after many years of experience and investigation, that a seven-hour working-day was sufficient for all ordinary Government purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he has the statute at hand?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator read the section covering this matter?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The statute reads as follows:

Hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employees, of whatever grade or class, in their respective departments, not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order: Provided, That the heads of the departments may, by special order, stating the reason, further extend the hours of any clerk or employee in their departments, respectively; but in case of an extension it shall be without additional compensation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator state the date of that statute?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was enacted on March 15, 1898.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just after or about the time we entered into the Spanish-American War?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senator is correct about that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it will also be interesting, in connection with the clause which the Senator has read, to read another clause of the same statute that I have never seen quoted myself, and, with the permission of the Senator, I should like to read it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington (reading)—

Hereafter it shall be the duty of the head of each executive department to require montaly reports to be made to him as to the condition of the public business in the several bureaus or offices of his department at Washington, and in each case where such reports disclose that the public business is in arrears, the head of the department in which such arrears exist shall require, as provided herein, an extension of the hours of service to such clerks or employees as may be necessary to bring up such arrears of public business.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. BORAH. How could the public business ever be in arrears, from the standpoint or because of short hours, when we keep adding dozens of clerks almost every time a measure passes the Senate with reference to these matters?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, why does the Senator say "dozen"? Why does he not say "hundreds"?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have simply read the provision that Congress enacted into law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Idaho no doubt has had business in the Land Office. I will ask him if he ever found any business there that was not in arrears? I do not think I ever took up the matter of acting upon final proof on a homestead that I was not advised that it would be reached in the regular order; that is to say, it would be sometimes months, sometimes years, before it would be reached. The same general condition exists in many other offices—the Pension Office, for instance.

Mr. BORAH. What I had reference to was this——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one more suggestion. At the present time, bringing the matter down to current affairs, the War-Risk Insurance Bureau have the duty of paying to the wives and mothers the money which is allotted to them by the soldier. I am not saying this in order to criticize this bureau. I do not know what the conditions are. It may be that the immense amount of work was such that they could not reasonably cope with it; but I am stating what the condition is, and I think that it is of enough importance, and concerns the living of enough people in this country of such a class that they are entitled to the care of the Government, as to justify calling public attention to it.

In many cases that have come to my attention, monthly allotments made by soldiers to their dependent mothers or their dependent wives and children beginning last November, and in some instances, I think, in October, covering the months of December and January and February, have none of them been paid yet to the people for whom they were intended. At least, they had not been within recent weeks and days when I was requested to call the attention of this bureau to them. The consequence has been that a great many families to whom these allotments are of absolute material importance in supporting their families and supplying them with the necessities of life have almost become objects of the community charity in the places where they live, and this condition has subjected them to more or less suffering and considerable humiliation. There is an office in which the public business is in arrears. I do not know whether there is sufficient excuse and justification for it or not, but I know that the fact exists.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not mean to say that business might not get into arrears; but it is not due to the fact of short hours or long hours or, evidently, to want of employees. I know of many instances in the last three or four months where employees have waited here 30 days to be put to work after they went upon the pay rolls. I do not understand that the matters to which the Senator refers have been referred to by him as an evidence of the necessity of shorter hours or longer hours. The Senator does not know why business is in arrears, as I understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know why it is in arrears. I know that it ought not to be in arrears. It ought to be up to date. These payments ought to be made promptly by the month for the purpose for which they were allotted and for which they were provided by the statutes.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not drawing from that any conclusion at all as to how to vote upon the motion of the Senator from Texas. I am simply pointing out the fact, and if it has an application to that motion one Senator can make it as well as another.

Mr. BORAH. I should not be surprised, from the number of employees, to find that the employees' salaries are also in arrears.

Mr. MYERS and Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Montana. Then I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to say in behalf of the General Land Office that while the business of that office is always, owing to its nature, necessarily in arrears, if it may be so called, because not always up to the minute, yet I believe that the business of that office is now dispatched with more expedition than has been done for many years—more expeditiously, I am satisfied, than at any other time since I have been a Member of this body. Matters of final proof and decisions of contests, I believe, are now reached and disposed of very much sooner than in former years. I know there has been in the General Land Office a very great effort to expedite those things, and I know there have been good results. I believe all reasonable effort has been made to expedite the work, and that the office is within reasonable distance of keeping up with its business. I do not believe there are any instances of unreasonable or unjustifiable delay in the business of that office.

Of course, the business is in arrears to some extent, as every business, private or public, is in arrears to some extent, unless when the day ends all business which has come in that day is closed and disposed of and finally out of the way. Matters in the General Land Office can not be disposed of in that way. They can not be disposed of in a day or in the twinkling of an eye. When land contests are started there is a certain route, prescribed by law, which they have to travel, and a certain degree of attention which they necessarily have to receive, all of which takes some time. If they are not unreasonably delayed, there is no ground for complaint; and I do not believe there is any ground for complaint.

The business of the General Land Office may be said to be in arrears just as the business of Congress is in arrears. Our business is in arrears. If not, why is not every bill that is introduced here put through both branches of Congress and made a law the very day that it is introduced? That process necessarily takes some time. Bills have to be referred to committees, and there has to be consideration of them by committees. The procedure requires that most bills be referred to some department for its advice and opinion and for information, and it takes some time to put through a bill; but, if you wish to be critical, when a bill is introduced in Congress, you may say the next day it is in arrears, because it has not been enacted; and I think the business of Congress, as a rule, is much more in arrears than the business of the departments.

There are now hundreds of bills, reported out of committees and on the calendar of the Senate, which are not acted upon. They await action by this body. People frequently write to me and say, "What has become of my bill? What is being done about it?" Well, Congress is in arrears with that bill; that is all there is to it; and I believe that Congress is quite as much in arrears as is any executive department of the Government which it may criticize.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator means Congress is in the rear, does he? [Laughter.]

Mr. MYERS. Yes. It is in the rear when it comes to work. That is what I mean.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, the Senator will not claim, however, that Congress is in arrears because we do not, either as individuals or collectively, work eight hours a day or more?

Mr. MYERS. No; I am not making any claim of that kind. I am not having reference, in my remarks, to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas. I am having reference to some remarks that have been made on the floor by Senators as to the work of the departments.

I know something about the work of the General Land Office. I have personal knowledge of that work to some extent; and I know that it is in fair condition and is disposed of as expeditiously as might be reasonably expected.

As to the War Risk Insurance Bureau, I do not know so much about it. I assume it is somewhat in arrears, because it is a new business, just instituted, and a perfect avalanche, a mountain, of business has descended upon it, and it has a great number of unskilled employees who have been suddenly assembled and hurriedly placed at that work. It is not natural to suppose that they could dispose of everything in a day, nor within a few days; but I have no doubt that they are getting to work with reasonable expedition, and I have no doubt the work of that bureau will soon be in quite as good condition as could be expected by anyone who will take cognizance of the extraordinary demands upon it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, let me say here that so far as the War Risk Bureau is concerned, it is my information that it has made payments in all cases that have come to it through the regular channels from the Army. The bureau can not act on a case until the case has been officially referred to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me just a moment, I think every Senator has had the experience related by my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER]. I know I hardly get a mail but that there is a letter in it about the failure to get a remittance from the War Risk Bureau. I will also say that I was talking with one of the employees of that bureau some time ago and he said he did not really know what he was here for; that there were a thousand employees who were up and down there, and they were not doing anything yet; but I think they are getting down to business now.

I did not expect, however, that the reading of that little clause would bring up a discussion of this kind. I simply read that section to show that there is not only ample authority of law requiring the clerks here to work eight hours or more than eight hours a day, but that there is a positive requirement of the law making it the duty of every departmental head to see to it that they do work more hours a day if it is necessary to keep the work up.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. WATSON. Has the Senator from Washington read a statute of that kind?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have. I just read it.

Mr. WATSON. Would the Senator mind reading it again?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all; I shall be very glad to read it again. As I said a moment ago, I have never seen this paragraph quoted, but it is a part of the very section that has been referred to by the employees who are interested:

Hereafter it shall be the duty of the head of each executive department to require monthly reports to be made to him as to the condition of the public business in the several bureaus or offices of his department at Washington; and in each case where such reports disclose that the public business is in arrears, the head of the department in which such arrears exist shall require, as provided hercin, an extension of the hours of service to such clerks or employees as may be necessary to bring up such arrears of public business.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator further pardon me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Has that law been enforced?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know. That is the law, however.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. I concur in the views of the Senator from Washington; but on that point there is another section to which I wish to call attention. I refer to section 26 of the act of March 15, 1898.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was the section I read a few moments ago.

Mr. PENROSE. I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall be glad if the Senator will read it again.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I read from that section. That is what I was reading from.

Mr. PENROSE. This reads differently, and I did not know that the Senator had read it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mine is a later paragraph in the same section.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator desire it read again?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; the Senator from Indiana has come in since the first part of the section was read, and I should be glad to have the Senator read it again.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to me that this effort to fix the hours of labor would render ineffective the provision of existing law, which permits the heads of departments to make the clerks work all night, if they so desire, without extra compensation.

The section to which I refer reads as follows:

Hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employees, of whatever grade or class, in their respective departments, not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order: Provided, That the heads of the departments may, by special order, stating the reason, further extend the hours of any clerk or employee in their departments, respectively; but in case of an extension it shall be without additional compensation.

Now, Mr. President, if we should attempt to fix the hours of labor, it would mean that when these clerks are required to perform labor of the character of overtime they would necessarily have to receive extra compensation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me say here, Mr. President, that under this authority to require clerks in the various departments to work more than seven hours a day, they are working in many of the bureaus and commissions not only 8 hours a day but 10, 12, and 14 hours a day, and that they are performing this work cheerfully and without complaint.

Mr. PENROSE. I know a great many of them, especially the higher salaried clerks, and doubtless the Senator from Texas likewise knows of such cases, for the last two or three years have been working until nearly midnight, and in one or two cases with serious injury to health.

Mr. STONE. Did they get extra pay?

Mr. PENROSE. With no extra pay.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If I did not say so a moment ago, I intended to say, and I want to say now, the paragraph which I read is the fourth paragraph of the same section from which the Senator from Pennsylvania has just been reading.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the clerks are being worked overtime and up to midnight hours, and so forth, without pay, that ought to be remedied. The Government of the United States does not need to work its employees in that way, certainly without pay. I should like to see the evidence of that fact. There may be some very few instances, but they are very rare exceptions I will venture to say.

I do not desire to occupy the time in the time of the Senator from Texas, but I am opposed to this amendment of the Senator from Texas, and I think I shall state the reasons a little later.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. This provision limiting or providing for fixing the hours of departmental clerks refers wholly to employees in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; it is an attempt to reach all employees in all the departments of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STONE. But the bill we have here is the Agricultural Department appropriation bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The appropriation bill relates only to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. STONE. Is the Senator addressing himself in his amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have moved to strike out the clause in the pending bill, which clause applies not only to employees in the Department of Agriculture, but to all employees in the other departments in the District of Columbia.

Mr. STONE. It is general legislation covering all the departments?

Mr. SHEPPARD. All in the District of Columbia. It does not apply to the 450,000 employees outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. STONE. But it does apply to the employees within the District of Columbia, whether employed in the Department of Agriculture or in some other department?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hesitate to question the accuracy of the Senator's statement, but is the Senator entirely correct in his answer given to the Senator from Missouri?

No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal service in any department.

It is really confined entirely to the employees of the Department of Agriculture, because they are the only employees "herein appropriated for."

Mr. SHEPPARD. The point I had in mind was that it does not apply to employees of the Department of Agriculture outside the District of Columbia. I was somewhat in error in my reply to the Senator from Missouri. The clause applies to employees of the department who are in the District of Columbia.

Mr. STONE. And to no other employees?

Mr. SHEPPARD. And to no other employees.

Mr. STONE. That, of course, is very far short of what the Senator said.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me? The point raised by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] I had intended to raise myself. We are attempting to apply a certain period for a workday for one department of the Government. It seems to me that would lead to very grave complications and an unsettlement of conditions and great discontent. Regardless of the merits of this proposition it ought to be taken up in a logical way and some system worked out that will apply to all the departments.

I have taken a little interest in this matter because a great many people have been to see me about it and I have had many hundreds of letters, not only from the employees, but from business men in Washington and others, concerning this effort to change the hours of labor in the departments from those which have heretofore existed. It certainly is out of all reason to carry a provision in this bill only applying to the Agricultural Department. The answer is made that other bills will come along with similar amendments. I think it is very doubtful whether such an amendment can be inserted in any other bill to come later on from the House to this body. I am informed, I do not know how correctly, that this paragraph got through the House in the Agricultural bill only in an accidental way; I do not mean to say surreptitiously, but in a way that was not fully realized by the Members of the House when the measure was passed, and now that they are awakened to what has been done those opposed to the proposition will be more vigilant in the future.

I intend to vote, outside of the merits of the question, to strike this paragraph out on the ground that the question of hours of labor during this war crisis ought to be taken up after due investigation and deliberation and a general law applicable to all the departments of the Government promptly considered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the clause is so clearly a part of an effort or program to reach all the employees in the District of Columbia that in spirit it may well be said to apply to all the District employees, whereas, strictly speaking, it applies only to employees in the Department of Agriculture.

This clause increases the minimum working day for thousands of employees without at the same time increasing compensation. It is essentially unfair on that account. It is proposed, without any reliable data having been presented to the Senate, without any thorough investigation having been made, with no recommendation from the head of any department or from the head of any bureau or from the head of any efficiency commission.

Let me read what the Council of National Defense has to say on this question of a change in standards of labor during the present war emergency. The Council of National Defense in its annual report makes the following declaration:

> There have been established by legislation, by mutual agreement between employers and employees, or by custom certain standards constituting a day's work. These vary from 7 hours per day in some kinds of work to 12 hours per day in continuous-operation plants. The various States and municipalities have established specific standards of safety and sanitation and have provided inspection service to enforce the regulations. They have also established maximum hours of work for women and minimum age limits for children employed in gainful occupations. It is the judgment of the Council of National Defense that the Federal, State, and municipal governments should continue to enforce the standards they have established, unless and until the Council of National Defense has determined that some modifications or change of standards is essential to the national safety; that employers and employees in private industries should not attempt to take advantage of the existing abnormal conditions to change the standards which they were unable to change under normal conditions.

In view of these facts, Mr. President, I think it would be unjust to increase the minimum working day at this time without going into the question of compensation and without having made a thorough examination.

Let me repeat, it was found in 1898 and has been found during the years that have passed since then that a minimum workday of seven hours is sufficient for ordinary Government purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will yield in just a moment. It was recognized, however, that additional hours might be required at various times and under various emergencies, such as the present. The law provided for that contingency when it vested in the heads of the departments the right to require additional hours whenever needed, and the provision was further inserted that no additional compensation should be paid. The arrangement was entirely fair to the Government. The entire scale of present salaries was fixed on the basis of that law and that arrangement, and it ought not to be changed in this way without adequate investigation and consideration.

Now I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator, who has read the law, what the hours of labor in the department were before the enactment of that law in March, 1898, and what was the occasion for putting into the law a positive declaration that the employees should work not less than seven hours a day?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I can not give the Senator that information, as I have not looked into that phase of the subject.

Mr. McCUMBER. Evidently the employees were working less than seven hours at that time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not necessarily so. This seems to have been a settlement of the entire proposition of working hours in the District wherein it was decided that for ordinary purposes of government a minimum working day of seven hours was sufficient. Whether employees worked seven hours a day before that I do not know.

Mr. McCUMBER. There must have been some reason for the law, and I did not know but that the Senator, who had been investigating it, could give us the reason that justified the introduction of that bill and its passage through both branches of Congress.

Mr. PENROSE. I can answer the Senator, if the Senator from Texas will permit me. As I understand it the original act made the hours of the departments from 9 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon—seven hours. Subsequently an Executive order was made making the day's work expire at half-past 4 o'clock instead of 4 o'clock. The extension was made through an Executive order.

Mr. STONE. Is there an intermission for lunch of about an hour?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I think so. I do not know how long it is.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Thirty minutes.

Mr. STONE. The lunch hour is about noon time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Thirty minutes are allowed for lunch, and it is not taken out of the seven hours.

Mr. PENROSE. The extension was made through an Executive order. I wish to say, while I am on my feet, that I am not defending the way the departments are being run. I am simply maintaining that it does not seem reasonable for us to pass an eight-hour law for the Agricultural Department and let the others go along on the original basis.

I believe there are too many employees in all these departments. I would hesitate to say what percentage of needless clerks or surplus clerks are in the departments, but I believe it is very large. We only have to go through some of these departments that have sprung up like mushrooms in Washington in temporary buildings to see employees fairly tumbling over each other and hardly knowing what they are called upon to do.

I know of one department—I shall not mention it now, but I intend later on to refer to it—in which from two to three thousand people are being employed where I believe from two to three hundred would conduct the business more effectively. That is a substantial assertion to make, but I do make it without fear of contradiction, and hope to be able to satisfy the Senate about the truth of what I say when I get my materials ready.

If we had greater efficiency and economy in the departments we would get at the purpose which the author of this provision had in mind much more quickly than by making a particular regulation for the Agricultural Department.

The situation does require an investigation, as the Senator from Texas has said. Some half dozen resolutions asking for an investigation have been introduced in the Senate, but the majority in the Senate invariably throttled the resolution in the committee or voted it down on the floor of the Senate. The minority are unable to get any resolution of investigation through this body or in either branch, and this condition will continue as long as both branches of Congress are under the rule of the same majority party. Perhaps, should the complexion of the next House of Representatives be different, there will be ample opportunity, and many resolutions will undoubtedly be introduced calling for a strict accounting of the vast lump sums and the thousands of employees, many of whom, in my opinion, do not know what they are doing or are going to do or will ever do very much until conditions are changed.

I will cheerfully join the Senator from Texas in getting resolutions through to investigate this condition and other conditions.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has a resolution to investigate the Creel bureau and I have a resolution to investigate the same bureau asking for no information other than the names and the salaries of the employees in that bureau, and yet we are denied that information—a most extraordinary attitude for any executive or legislative body to assume. But we can not have the information as to salaries and persons, and we are appropriating these enormous lump sums, without exciting passing attention, with utter inability to get any accounting or information as to how the money is being spent.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PENROSE. In one moment. Surely, Mr. President, the Government is in no such crisis, with the enemy at our gates, that all business methods should be overturned and that money should be recklessly appropriated and recklessly disbursed and even the names of the persons employed and their salaries carefully concealed from the legislative branch of the Government and from the American people.

There are a number of inquiries that I would like to pursue after I get the votes in this Chamber to get the information. I should like to know, for instance, how many labor agitators are being employed at $15 a day to exploit the sale of liberty bonds, and there are a number of other interesting questions which occur to my mind, but which I will not go into now, because I expect at a later date all these matters will be very fully gone into; but the trouble is the minority is utterly unable to secure information on these subjects.

I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, in view of the Senator's statement that there has been no information obtainable either at the instance of his own resolution or that of the Senator from New Hampshire concerning the question of the Creel bureau, may I ask the Senator has his resolution passed the body and has it developed that the bureau would not respond to the resolution? Is that what the Senator would mean to infer?

Mr. PENROSE. The bureau can not respond to resolutions which the majority party is careful to keep hidden in the precincts of the committee room.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, if I understand the Senator, the resolution has not passed.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator knows very well it has not passed.

Mr. LEWIS. The bureaus have not declined the information? Resolutions have not passed requesting the information?

Mr. PENROSE. The party to which the Senator belongs whenever a resolution has been read has declined to give it consideration.

Mr. LEWIS. It may be that there were reasons in the committee that I know not, but I thought the Senator meant to infer that after we had passed a resolution some of those bureaus had declined to give the information. That interested me very much.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I seriously doubt the innocence of the Senator's knowledge. He is in this Chamber a good deal, and he must have recalled the debate on the Creel resolution introduced by me, and he must have recalled more than one occasion when it was reached on the calendar and objected to by some Senator belonging to the majority party.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PENROSE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to say to the Senator from Illinois that the Senate has passed one resolution calling upon one of the departments for information that never was responded to by the department.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, in response to both Senators let me say I have been constantly in the Chamber, and from time to time I have heard references on the part of some Senator to obtain the passage of some resolution. It is true I have heard objections, but founded on parliamentary reasons, and not being a member of the committee I did not investigate it; but I assure the Senator that I understood his statement, and I was afraid the country might understand it that, notwithstanding a resolution had passed calling for information requested by the Senator from New Hampshire or himself, these bureaus had declined or had refused to give that information, and that, I felt, would be contumely to the Senate and ought not to be encouraged by this body, whether it meant the majority rule or not. But it appears from the Senator's statement that the grievance of the Senator is that the matter has not been passed by the Senate committee or by the Senate.

It appears that the Senator from Washington urges that upon one occasion the resolution did pass and that, notwithstanding that passage, there was no reply. I regret he did not bring that promptly to the attention of the Senate, for I am sure the Senate would not tolerate such conduct on the part of any department in response to a resolution from the Senate, for such a defiance amounts to contempt that we ought not to encourage from any source. I regret that we have not heard more of such, if the Senator be not mistaken in his premises.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. Before the Senator continues the discussion, I was interested in the statement just made by the Senator from Washington. Perhaps I had overlooked the instance to which he called attention. I should like to have him tell the Senate what case it was and why action has not been taken.

Mr. PENROSE. I will cheerfully yield to the Senator from Washington for a statement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is a resolution passed in the last Congress. It is ancient history. I could name what it is. Why it was not answered I do not know; I have an idea. It passed the Senate, however, calling upon a certain department for the copy of an executive order issued by that department. It was never answered.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say also that at the last session of Congress I introduced a resolution asking for certain information in relation to the Shipping Board and what that board had done in view of what had been brought out by the discussion on the floor as to what Mr. Denman claimed and what Gen. Goethals claimed as to the building of wooden ships. I wish to say to the Senator from Illinois that no answer ever came to the Senate in response to that resolution.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Do I understand the Senator from Utah that the resolution was passed by this body?

Mr. SMOOT. It was passed by the Senate and never answered.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senate resolution was adopted, and no response whatever was given to it?

Mr. SMOOT. No response whatever that I have ever seen.

Mr. LEWIS. Then might I ask, Has the Senator made any effort in any form to get a reply, or does he think it may have been overlooked in some way, because we had a series of investigations superseding his resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. That may have been the case.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret that any such contempt of any such resolution of this body occurred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Has any effort been made to take steps about the matter since the refusal of the executive department?

Mr. SMOOT. As a Senator of the United States I did not think it was incumbent upon me, after the Senate had passed the resolution, to follow it up and state that an answer should be made to the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. It just occurred to me that if it was not replied to it ought to have been replied to, and if the Senator was interested in it, it seems to me, something ought to have been done in the Senate. I would very cheerfully vote to take steps in the event any order of the Senate was disregarded.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I never would have mentioned the fact at all if the question had not been raised in the Senate by an inquiry by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. I do not want to have it appear that I was piqued in any way by not having the department answer the resolution. It was not a reflection upon me; if any reflection at all, it was a reflection upon the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, at this point I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a minute, as the statement has been made that I introduced a resolution that had not received attention. I will state I did introduce a resolution calling for such information in connection with the so-called Creel bureau, and I think I am correct in saying when I asked for its present consideration it was objected to, and I then sent it to the Committee on Appropriations, as it was a matter that dealt with the use of public money. I perhaps have myself to a certain extent to blame for not having urged the committee to take it up, but the committee has been very busy and I have been exceedingly busy outside of that committee in the Committee on Finance and other legislative work. As I said, perhaps I have not urged the committee as I ought to have done to give it consideration. Ordinarily, when an appropriation bill is acted upon by the committee, an adjournment is immediately had, and I have not seen an opportunity to do it. At the next meeting of the committee I shall ask the committee to at least give the matter consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question? I agree entirely with what the Senator has said about the inefficiency of the labor now employed in our several departments, and also in the fact that I think they have a third more people than they can properly use in the departments. But I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that when the departments called for a class of labor, and especially for stenographers, they called for probably more than there were in the country who could properly qualify as such. We have those people, and I am speaking now only of new clerks, who are inefficient, at least now. As long as we are having stenographers who can work out about 50 words in an hour or something like that——

Mr. PENROSE. Ten lines a minute.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; on a typewriter, does not the Senator think that, at least as to salaries, they are getting good wages, and that if they can not perform more than one-third of the ordinary service in seven hours, at least they ought to work for the Government eight hours a day?

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to see the reform on a broader scope and have the number of inefficient employees considerably reduced, as far as I am concerned.

But, Mr. President, to go back to the Creel resolution, I only referred to it as a single case. It is a trivial expenditure compared with many other phases of the present crisis, but it interests a good many people. Correspondents from all over the United States have written to me on this subject and represented the inefficiency of the Creel bureau. It is a kind of a court chronicle to exploit the virtues of the Chief Executive and his subordinates. I think it would be very interesting to have the salaries and the names of the employees. The expenditures are out of all reason under the Creel bureau. No accounting has been made for them that I can learn. I did see some reference in a debate in the House concerning the expenditures of the Creel bureau, but it was not enlightening. I am told, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I believe, has the same information, that over $5,000 a day is being spent by that bureau; that correspondents of daily newspapers who ought to be compensated by their own papers are carried on the roll of the Creel bureau. Why should an inquiry, a legitimate and reasonable inquiry, be blocked? The Senator from Illinois can not conjure up a straw man and knock him down to obscure the situation.

I said nothing about departments not responding. I will take that point up if my resolution is ever considered, but I did charge, and I charge again, that that resolution has not been permitted to be considered even on the floor of the Senate when it came up in due order on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator from Pennsylvania moved the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, my breath was so completely taken away by the treatment accorded to the resolution——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask not argumentatively, but as a matter of information.

Mr. PENROSE. No; but I will do it now, if the Senator has no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can not displace the pending bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I can ask unanimous consent to have this business laid aside. It has been laid aside for a number of other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We shall finish this bill very soon.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator, when this bill is through, vote to take up the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will vote to take it up; yes.

Mr. PENROSE. My recollection is that the Senator from Georgia was the one who objected.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. PENROSE. I am a little nearsighted, and so I am not sure it was the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I state positively that I did not.

Mr. PENROSE. I am satisfied with the Senator's statement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Pennsylvania knows it now, if he did not know it before.

Mr. PENROSE. I feel convinced the Senator from Georgia did not object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. It was some imposing personality who objected to the resolution. I do not, however, recall the name.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am glad the Senator from Pennsylvania recognizes that there is an imposing personality in this place, but I did not object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not know that I have anything further to say on this subject. I will take the Senator from Georgia at his word and count on his cordial and effective cooperation with the majority party to get early action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I personally should like very much to know about this bureau and its work.

Mr. PENROSE. I share the Senator's curiosity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have received a great many letters, chiefly from employees of the United States Government and from "their uncles and their cousins and their sisters and their aunts," concerning the position which I should take with regard to the proposed legislation to compel employees of the United States Government to work eight hours a day. As it is much easier for me to answer all these letters from my place here in the Senate than it would be to answer each one of them, I have risen for that purpose.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I am in favor of making the employees of the United States Government work at least eight hours, provided that provision is accompanied by another, paying them time and a half for overtime. If the provision is presented to me for a vote simply requiring them to work eight hours, I shall vote against it. If the provision is presented to me for a vote combining both propositions, that they shall work eight hours and shall be paid time and a half for overtime, I shall vote for it.

My reason for that, briefly stated, is this: I see no reason why there should be a Prætorian guard of laboring men in the United States, having special privileges merely because they are "at Rome"—at the Capital—and because they have easy access to Senators and Representatives, and because they are constituents of Senators and Representatives, exercising a good deal of influence through their mothers and their cousins and their sisters and their aunts at home. I think that they ought to be put exactly upon the same level as other laboring men.

Workingmen's unions in this country are demanding eight hours' work, or are demanding that there shall be a law not compelling them to work over eight hours, but they couple with it payment for overtime; that is, when they have voluntarily worked when an emergency arises requiring them to work over eight hours they shall be paid time and a half for extra time. I want to put the employees of the Government of the United States exactly on the same footing as all other employees.

It is not a new matter with me, Mr. President, at all to believe that there should be an eight-hour day for everybody who works, if he works protected from interruption by the weather and in a house. Of course the farmer can not work only eight hours, because it may be that, owing to weather conditions, he can work but one hour on Monday or two hours on Tuesday or three hours on Wednesday, and he must then make up on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday for the time that has been lost; but so far as all operatives are concerned—what has been lately called, somewhat too frequently I think, the proletariat are concerned—I think that old Sir Matthew Hale was right centuries ago, before this situation arose, when he said that a day was naturally divided into three equal parts—eight hours for work, eight hours for sleep, and eight hours for nutrition, recreation, edification, and worship. I hope that the time will come when nobody will want anybody else to work over eight hours, because I think that beyond that limit work becomes inefficient, for the body is tired, the mind is tired, and all the statistics bear me out that even when men work 10 hours, or even 9, the last hour is almost useless, and when 10 hours have been changed to 8 hours it has been found that men can do about as much work and very much better work—whether as much or not—within the 8 hours as within the 10.

But I do not want any Prætorian cohort or guard here in the city of Washington setting itself up and demanding special privileges over and above what is demanded by all labor and over and above what the consensus of opinion amongst workingmen has pretty well settled as a right settlement of the controversy, to wit, eight hours of work, with time-and-a-half pay for overtime.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Before the Senator from Missouri proceeds, will he allow me to make a suggestion right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Government employees are not asking for any special privilege. They would be satisfied with the standard eight-hour day, with adequate compensation and with time and a half for overtime, but that is not proposed here. I want to make that clear.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Prætorian guard which alarms my friend, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], in this case is largely composed of women. I can assure him that there really need be no apprehension that these young women and middle-aged women and old women will in any manner endanger the Nation. There will be no slaughter of another just Pertinax upon the steps of the Capitol; neither will there be any great pressure brought upon Congress that will compel it to act.

There is no use in trying to becloud this issue. If the Senate will keep to the real issue, I do not believe the so-called Borland amendment will pass.

For 20 years there has been upon the statute books a law which provides that Government employees shall not work less than seven hours a day, and that they shall work as much longer as their superiors demand, without a single penny extra pay. As the so-called Borland amendment stands, if it is passed, the employees will be compelled to work a minimum of eight hours a day and a maximum of as many hours as they are required to work, without any extra pay. That is something that is not demanded under the rules of any labor union; it is something that is not demanded under any statute of the United States of any other laborer in any department of the United States. It is not proposed here to establish an eight-hour day with overpay for extra time, but it is proposed to substitute a minimum eight-hour day with a maximum as high as the superior may require the employees to labor, and without a single penny of additional pay. Whoever votes to keep the Borland amendment in the bill will vote to compel these laborers to work at least eight hours and to work as much longer as their superiors shall require, even if it be far into the night, even if it includes Sundays; they must do so without a single penny of additional pay, although that is an obligation and a duty that is not imposed upon any other class of Government employees and is a regulation that would not be tolerated under the rules of union labor anywhere in the United States. So much for that. Let us start with the proposition clearly in our minds.

I incorporate in my remarks, without reading, the law as it now stands and, also without reading, the so-called Borland amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The existing law on the subject is section 7, legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 15, 1898, as follows:

> Hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments, in the interests of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employees of whatever grade or class in their respective departments not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order: Provided, That the heads of the departments may, by special order, stating the reason, further extend the hours of any clerks or employees in their departments, respectively, but in the case of any extension it shall be without additional compensation.

The so-called Borland provision of the bill is as follows:

> No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau, or office in the District of Columbia which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day.

Mr. REED. The facts are that these employees are, especially since the war began, frequently called on for extra service. They have performed that service and have never asked any additional pay. They could not get the additional pay under the law, as I have already stated. The Borland amendment, if passed, will single out one class of employees and compel them to work a full eight-hour day for their present wages and leave them liable to be compelled to work overtime without a single additional penny of pay.

As I have already stated, many of these employees have worked overtime without pay, and I have no hesitancy in saying that if the duties of their position require them, they will continue to work overtime during this war without complaint and without any appeal whatsoever to Congress for extra-time pay.

The next thing I call your attention to is the pay that is received. In order to hold these positions practically all the employees must pass civil-service examinations. They must have spent many years in school, for civil-service examinations are somewhat rigorous. Some of them must be, in fact, really specialists in their respective lines. Nearly all of them have to be experienced and skilled. That class of labor ought to be reasonably well paid, and yet I undertake to say without having gone into the figures, that the employees to which this so-called Borland amendment will chiefly apply are not receiving, on the average, much over $1,200 a year.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. A couple of years ago a computation was made in one of the largest departments, and it was demonstrated that the average salary was a little over $1,200 per annum.

Mr. REED. I am obliged to the Senator. Twelve hundred dollars may seem like a large salary at some places, but I assure you the clerk who can keep soul and body together in Washington on $1,200 a year is a pretty good economist. Mark you, these clerks are required to dress decently, and, being human beings, notwithstanding the sneering remarks which have been made here, are entitled to have a room in which to live that is at least "wind and water tight" and reasonably well heated. A clerk who obtains a room in the city of Washington to-day is very likely obliged to pay for rent alone from one-fourth to one-third of his entire wages. For a mere place in which to sleep he must pay from $25 to $35 if the room is in a decent neighborhood. The clerks must pay for their meals. Try eating at a Washington restaurant and see if you can live on less than $1.50 per day. Street-car fares, gas and light bills must be met. The clothing must be respectable. Sometimes doctor bills must be met, for our Government clerks get sick. Often these clerks support dependent mothers. They have families. Think of a Government clerk daring to have a wife and children! Many of the clerks are women. A woman who works seven hours of the day and goes home and cooks her own meals—and she comes mighty near having to do it if she lives on the salary paid in the departments—and takes care of her own room and does her own housework, as she must do if she lives on the salary provided, has worked long enough for any woman to work. Perhaps she has even then to do her own sewing or washing. That sort of a day's work ought to satisfy even the industrious author of this bill. There is a right and a wrong will to all things. You can not turn a wrong into a right by all the sneers that ever came from the curled lip of the creature who, occupying a superior position, employs it to insult those who fill the humbler places of life.

It may serve a good purpose to compare the salaries paid in the departments with wages obtained in other places. I hold in my hand a list of employees, numbering approximately 3,000, I think, at the Hog Island shipyard. The testimony taken this morning before the Commerce Committee is to the effect that these men were employed, in the first instance, at the regular price labor was commanding in Philadelphia and vicinity; that the prices were at once reviewed by the Wage Equalization Board, a Government board organized in the Department of Labor, and subsequently further reviewed, and that to the prices I am now about to read an average of 20 per cent has been added by this board representing the Government. The wage awards have been made retroactive to the early part of January.

These are the earnings. I do not read wages by the day, but weekly earnings. I give you just a few samples of them. I will take engineers; and will read the first six. These are the weekly earnings—I merely take the first six, because I am taking them as a possible average—$69, $94, $88, $46, $65, $60, $111.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A week?

Mr. REED. A week. I will take the brakesmen. They are receiving, as shown by this list, $48, $56, $48, $46, $47, $46, $47, $46, and on up to $72; storekeepers, $47, $47; cement finishers, $49, $51, $53; material checkers, $47, $46; divers, $93; dock builders, running along the entire list, from $60 to $70; electricians, running from $51 to $75; firemen, running from $58 to $111, although the latter figure is generally out of proportion, but running up to $82; field markers $78 to $90; garage men, $48 to $51; inspectors, $53; special laborers, $76. Then, laborers—now, get this—laborers, $48.30, $49, $48, $49, $50, $46; linemen, running from $50 to $72; marine department, $50 to $51; material distributors, $53——

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit an interruption at that point——

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Not to criticize in any way, but to call attention to the fact that the rates of wages the Senator is giving are the same which are being paid in private industrial plants in that neighborhood, and I think the day's work is 10 hours, if I am not misinformed.

Mr. REED. No; the day's work is eight hours, but the men who are getting this wage have worked overtime, practically all of them.

Mr. PENROSE. I think they work 10 hours.

Mr. REED. I think they do; and they get extra time over the eight hours.

Mr. PENROSE. That is counted in that computation, I presume.

Mr. REED. It is counted; I have already stated that. According to this list, miscellaneous mechanics receive all the way from $48 to $101.

Mr. GALLINGER. A week?

Mr. REED. A week.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am giving very careful consideration to the motion made by the Senator from Texas, hoping that I will be enabled to vote right; but in listening to the Senator reading those figures I have wondered, if common laborers are being paid $50 a week, what chance will there be to get laborers on the farms next year to raise food for our Army?

Mr. REED. That, of course, is quite another question. I am simply now trying to give the comparison, and I am trying to impress, if I can, the fact that these men are privileged to work extra time, and they get extra pay when they work extra time, as well as mighty good pay when they are not working extra time, but simply regular hours, are making, some of them, in a week's time as much as Government clerks make in a month's time.

I shall not read more. I will summarize by saying that the gentleman who appeared before the Commerce Committee testified this morning that the 3,000 men covered by the list were making over $200 a month; that most of them were making over $3,000 a year, and some of them far beyond that.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. The pay that the Senator has quoted includes overtime, too, as I understand?

Mr. REED. I have stated that repeatedly. I am discussing the question that it is proposed to make these clerks work eight hours, and, then, under the law work as much overtime as is demanded of them, and to do it without any extra pay; and in that connection I am comparing their wage rate with the rate that even the common laborer is now receiving. The proposition to make them work eight hours a day has no virtue in it, except it be upon the principle that they ought to do more work for the same amount of money.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BORAH. There is a proposition pending somewhere in the Congress to raise the wages of Government employees.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is pending in the other House to-day.

Mr. REED. I shall come to that in a moment.

Mr. BORAH. Stated in a single sentence, I think these clerks ought to be paid a reasonable wage; and then I think they ought to work a reasonable time during the day.

Mr. REED. I will come to that in a moment. The Senator has come in since I made my opening statement, and I want to say to him, because he is one of the fairest men in the Senate, that the present law requires these employees to work a minimum of seven hours and as much longer as may be required without pay. The Borland amendment leaves them in that shape, except that it extends their time to eight hours, so that the proposition now is to make these employees, who on the average get approximately $100 a month, work eight hours, without extra pay for overtime, although a great number of common laborers working in the Hog Island shipyards, where wages are regulated by a Government board that has been appointed for that purpose, are making over $200 a month.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess I have been considerably surprised at the terms of the law as read by the Senator from Missouri and also by the Senator from Texas. I did not know that the head of a department had the power under the law to require his employees to work without extra pay any length of time that he saw fit. I can see that is a serious difficulty with the present law; but I want to suggest to the Senator that there are a great many employees who work seven hours and quit on the dot, while there are many others who work eight hours and then go back at night and work 10 and 12 hours, so that there is no uniform rule. Some are doing their whole duty; some are doing more than we ought to require of them; and perhaps some are doing less than they ought to be required to do. Does not the Senator believe that we ought to specify the number of hours which should constitute a day's work and require that of all of them, and then obligate the Government, whenever the employees are required to work longer, to pay a higher rate of salary? In other words, treat them the same as men and women are treated in all other branches of labor.

Mr. REED. I doubt the proposition, but am not prepared at the moment to say more.

Mr. NORRIS. Under present conditions they are not all treated alike.

Mr. REED. Well, they may all be treated alike; they are all on the same——

Mr. NORRIS. It does not work out in that way in practice.

Mr. REED. They are all on the same legal basis.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not work out that way in practice.

Mr. REED. They are all on the same legal basis, and, answering the Senator's question at this time, although it rather breaks in on the thread of my remarks, this is what I have to say:

In the Bureau of Engraving and Printing they may to-night have to work overtime, some of them. To-morrow night in the Agricultural Department some of the clerks may have to work overtime. And so, without taking the time to go into the details of the illustration, I suppose it may be safely said there is not a single department in the city of Washington where the clerks are not required during this war period to work overtime. In the long run you find burdens are equalized. To introduce now the element of paying time and a half for overtime will, in my opinion, increase the burdens of the Government. As I said, it will not do us any good in the long run. If a change would benefit, it seems to me that somebody connected with some one of the departments would have discovered it long before this. Some of the heads of departments would have seen the necessity and would have recommended the change. Yet I am not aware of a single head of a department who has asked for the enactment of this statute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What would the Senator think of the suggestion that the Borland amendment be itself amended, so that it would provide that if at any time these clerks were required to work overtime the amount of the overtime worked should be carefully recorded and a less number of hours given to make up for it on some other day, or that an increase of their annual leave be given, at the option of the clerk, to make up for the overtime worked, the regular day being eight hours, and whenever overtime was required that the clerk should be given credit for it?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the answer I have to make is this: The man best capable of answering a question of that kind is the man who has been at the head of the department, the man who has had the experience. Here is a law that has been on the statute books for 20 years. Nobody ever found any trouble with it except a gentleman from my State and my district, my Congressman, the Hon. W. P. BORLAND. He is the man who made this discovery. The heads of the departments did not find it out; and some of the heads of these departments, I am afraid, are almost slave drivers themselves. I intend to touch on that a little bit later.

But before I leave the Hog Island situation, not only are these wages paid there—and the testimony is, and the finding of a Government board is, that they are the wages paid in Philadelphia and vicinity—not only are these high wages paid, but these men are furnished their meals on the ground at the actual cost of production when food is produced in great quantities. A meal is given to them for 30 cents that you could not get at the Willard Hotel for—I was going to say $30; that might be a little high, but perhaps not very much too high if you allow for the tips. I do not mean by that to say that it is any too good a meal for an able-bodied workingman. I am only comparing prices there with those at the Willard as they were when I was last there. It has been some time since I have had the courage to visit that palace of pleasure. I understand, however, it is still the favorite habitat of Congressmen who practice economy by cutting down the wages of women clerks. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri whether he has statistics affecting the wages of bookkeepers and clerks? If so, they might make a more correct parallel with the classes of labor we are discussing.

Mr. REED. No; I have not. I never could see any reason, though, why a bookkeeper or a clerk should get less wages than a mechanic or a common laborer, although I am free to say that in some places I think since union labor has been thoroughly organized it does get better wages than bookkeepers or clerks. That is because it has demanded and commanded fairer compensation.

Mr. PHELAN. I understand that the Senator is contending that it is more advantageous, then, for the Government to maintain the present status of its employees than to adopt the Borland amendment. The Senator is arguing, of course, from the point of view of the interests of the Government, that the Government has an advantage in requiring but seven hours' work without allowing extra compensation for overtime.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator does not quite get my position. I am arguing, as a matter of fairness to these employees, that they should not be required, as a matter of law, to work this additional hour. I am arguing that the Government suffers no disadvantage because it can call for extra work without extra pay. I am also calling attention to the fact that the wages these clerks receive are very much lower than the wages received in other avocations and callings since the war began; and I instanced the Hog Island testimony because the wages there are fixed by a Government board of supposed experts who studied the whole situation; that is all.

In addition to the cheapness of meals, many of the men at Hog Island are roomed on the ground at 10 cents a night, furnished a clean bed in sanitary quarters for 10 cents a night, and families that reside outside of the grounds are housed in quarters that have been arranged for at moderate rents. Among other places that have been utilized are the Girard estate properties, which are leased at a percentage which, I think, pays but a very small return upon the capital invested.

Mr. President, at a time when values are changing as they are at this time, when the cost of living is becoming so enormously high, when it is becoming so high in the city of Washington that we are about to pass a law—at least, it appears that we are about to pass a law—regardless of the Constitution and Magna Charta and the common law, and everything else, that will regulate the charges for rents, and so forth—at a time like that it is proposed to take the poorest paid employees of the Government, and yet about the highest class employees of the Government, and extend their hours of labor. I say that that is unfair; it is contrary to common equity and justice.

Now I come to the other question.

Some of those who advocate this law say that "We are going to make these people work eight hours a day, but we are going to make it up to them by raising their wages." Now, I wish that those who propose to advocate that theory might give me the benefit of their attention.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Harding	Martin	Smoot
Calder	Henderson	Myers	Sterling
Colt	Hollis	New	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Cummins	Kellogg	Nugent	Thomas
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Penrose	Trammell
Fall	King	Phelan	Wadsworth
France	Kirby	Pomerene	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Reed	Watson
Gallinger	Lewis	Shafroth	Williams
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. GERRY. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] by reason of illness.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the argument is made that these people ought to work an extra hour, but that they ought to have more pay; and the statement is made that a bill has been already introduced in the House to increase their pay. Let us see where that leaves us. What is the complaint about the shortness of the hours per day? What virtue is there in that complaint?

It is not claimed that any of these departments are behind with their work and that they could bring their work up to date by working an additional hour. Indeed, that can not be claimed, because the boss in the department has the right to tell the clerks to come and work 8 hours or 9 hours or 10 hours or 11 hours, and not a single penny additional has to be paid. The head of any department can issue an order to-morrow morning, if they are behind with their work, for every clerk to report an hour earlier and to stay an hour later, or even more hours, either way, if he sees fit. So that the demand for an extra hour can not be justified upon the ground that "it is because the work is behind, and hence it is necessary to catch up the work."

What, then, is the sole ground upon which it can rest?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not true that the departments are just bringing people by the hundreds here and packing even their corridors with extra people, upon the ground that the regular force can not do the work?

Mr. REED. I will answer that question in a moment. I prefer to answer it by itself. Let me continue the argument I was making.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not intend to divert him.

Mr. REED. That is all right.

The argument in favor of the eight-hour day is not advanced now by its author, and is not advanced now by anybody, upon the ground and for the reason that the department is behind in its work, and hence it is necessary to have this additional labor, or the department will remain behind in its work. The argument that was made in favor of this amendment in the first instance, and the only sound argument that can be made in favor of it now, is that these people are only working seven hours and that they are being paid enough so that they ought to work eight hours, and that it is therefore unjust to let them off at the end of seven hours. Now, gentlemen are telling us in the other House, and Senators are telling us here, that they propose to vote additional pay to these clerks on account of the eight hours.

How much will the Government save, if it has a hundred clerks who work an aggregate of 700 hours in a day, and who receive $700 for it—I am using that sum merely to make easy figures—if it compels them now to work 800 hours, and pays them $800 for it? Will the Government make anything? The author of this amendment may be able to go out to the farmers and tell the farmers, "I made these lazy clerks down at Washington work eight hours a day," but he will fail to tell them that he made the Government pay an additional amount for that additional hour.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. I yield, gladly.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that as far as I am personally concerned—and I think it is the case with many other Senators to whom I have talked—no matter whether the Borland amendment is agreed to or not, the clerks in the departments will receive an increased compensation. They did last year, and they will this year; and I want now to express my opinion that it will be a larger increase this year than it was last year.

Mr. REED. Very well. That increase is going to be made, then, regardless of the question of the hours.

Mr. SMOOT. In my opinion, it will be.

Mr. REED. It is not being made for the purpose of compensating for the additional time. It therefore affords no basis whatever for the claim that has been advanced that these people should be required to work eight hours in the interest of economy; does not jump true with the assertion that they are underpaid, and hence are entitled to a raise of wages.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will understand that I did not make the statement that I made by way of an argument.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply made the statement as to what I believed would take place, and I am quite sure it will.

Mr. REED. I now come to answer the question of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], which was whether the departments were not now behind with their work, and are therefore bringing in large numbers of people from the outside, so that the corridors were packed, and so forth.

The Senator from Georgia always asks practical questions. He is one of the fairest minded men in this body; and if he is committed to the other side of this case I can only express my regret. My answer to the question is this:

If the departments have needed extra help, and have brought in that extra help, and the people now employed are not being paid too much, then we might as well hire some extra help and let them all work seven hours, if the expense to the Government is thereby not increased, as to have those who are here work eight hours, and increase their wages, and bring in a less amount of help from the outside. You gain nothing by that. If it takes 800 hours of labor for one man to complete a task, it will take 100 laborers one day, working eight hours, to finish the job, or it will take approximately 114 laborers one day, working seven hours, to do the work. The Government might as well hire the 14 extra men as to pay the 100 men for the extra hour. If you make them work eight hours a day in order to do one-eighth more work and pay them one-eighth more wages, you come out at exactly the same point financially as you would if you allowed them to work seven hours a day at the same wages and hired one-eighth more employees. There is nothing in that argument.

The fact of the matter is that the author of this amendment, finding that a good deal of a hornet's nest had been stirred up, is reported in the newspapers to have made the statements that he was willing to raise the wages of the clerks, but he wanted them to work more hours. Now, if you raise the wages so that the raise of wages is equal to the additional length of time these people work, the Government comes out exactly where it was in the first instance so far as finances are concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him another question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has not a condition developed in Washington whereby the expense of living is so great that we are compelled to pay more to a certain class of our clerks to enable them merely to live here, and is not that necessary whether we increase the hours of work or not?

Mr. REED. Well, if that is to be done because of the general advance——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not mean to express an opinion about it. I merely present that thought to the Senator to get the benefit of his opinion.

Mr. REED. If that is to be done because of an advance in the cost of living—because, in other words, of a depreciation in the value of money—and because of the extortion and the profiteering by those who rent rooms and buildings in this city, then let us do that as a separate proposition upon its merits. Let us not confuse that question with this question of hours of labor. The truth is, and I state it again, that the author of this bill, having introduced it with the idea of extorting more work from these people so that he could make campaign material of it in his district, then undertook to square himself with union labor by writing a letter to union labor saying he was willing to raise the wages. At least he was so reported in the Washington papers. I never saw the statement denied.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish the Senator to understand that I am disposed to agree with him on that subject. The question of raising their pay or not raising it is not involved in this question, and we ought to dispose of the question of an eight-hour day on its merits.

Mr. REED. Absolutely. I am glad that the Senator from Georgia made his last statement. It is the statement of a great, big, fair man. I hope before this debate is over these overworked and underpaid people will have the benefit of his great support, and he is just a big enough man to take that side if he is convinced. I know he is pretty hard to convince, because he does his own thinking; but he is a man who listens to others, and that is one of the qualities of greatness.

Of course, the question of a raise of wages generally in the city of Washington ought to be settled by itself. It ought to be made to apply where it should apply, and not otherwise, and of course the question of hours of labor ought to be settled by itself upon its merits, and it should be mixed with nothing else.

Now, it is said we are bringing in extra employees. We are bringing in many extra employees, but I do not at all agree to the proposition that we are bringing in a great number of supernumeraries and useless employees. But if we were, that has nothing to do with this case. If supernumeraries and useless employees are being imported into Washington by the hundreds or by the thousands that is not the fault of the old clerk who has been here, and for the most part it is not the fault of the old head of a department who has all along been here. If the fault exists it will be found in some of these new-made bureaus, these newly organized concerns, where the civil service has been disregarded, where wages have been fixed by some man who organized the bureau to suit himself, and where the wages are frequently out of all proportion to the wages paid in the Agricultural Department and other regular departments. We are straining at gnats and swallowing camels. We are saving at the spigot and paying no attention to the bunghole. You are proposing to say to these old-time clerks, who have devoted their lives to the service of the Government in the Agricultural and the other regular departments of the Government, "You have got to work longer at your present wages, work overtime while the war is on," because in some new bureau they have too many clerks. Not a single reformer is throwing financial fits because the much higher salaries are being paid in the newly organized bureaus than are paid to the old-time clerks in the Agricultural Department. I do not say they are getting too high pay in the new bureaus, but they are receiving much higher pay than those in the regular departments.

Now, what do we gain by making the old clerk, who has been here for years and who knows his business, work an extra hour because some other bureau organized since the war began has some incompetent or inexperienced clerk? That does not answer the question that we must answer here to-day. It does not meet the issue.

What is the real question that ought to be argued here to-day? The real question and the only question, in my opinion, that ought to be settled here to-day is this: Are these people rendering a reasonable day's work for the pay they are receiving? The question whether we need them an hour longer or five hours longer is not before us, because if called upon they must work that hour or that five hours without any additional pay.

Mr. President, answering the question, I observe, first, that a very large percentage of these clerks are women, and because they are women we are able to get them at a less wage than we could men, speaking generally. And because the great majority of them are women having to make their living, I think they are entitled to a little shorter hours than men who work in the open and have the benefit of God's sunshine and His breezes. These people work inside, and most of them work at a mental labor which requires them to be taxed to a very high degree. I am not talking of slackers; I am not talking of loafers. If there are slackers and loafers, then find the head of the department who permits the slacking and loafing and let us take his head off. That is the answer. You never can get an honest day's work, you never can get good results, if the head of the department, if the boss himself, is not there to attend to business. I do not care if you were to demonstrate that two-thirds of the clerks were slackers, I would answer that has nothing to do with this case, but has to do with the boss, with the head of the department, and the head of the department who permits it ought to be put out of office. But I do not think it is permitted to any great extent among the older departments, very little indeed.

Let us consider the question of seven hours a day now. There is a mighty big difference between mental labor and physical labor. I have worked at physical labor and I have tried to work at mental labor. I say that you can take the man who works at physical labor under modern conditions and it is not nearly as destructive to his body, not nearly as wearing to his nervous system as is mental labor. If you do not believe that let me call your attention to the fact that there is hardly a single one of the great banks of the country where the clerks work over seven hours a day. Why is that? Because of the strain on the brain of a man who has to deal with a set of books, where a mistake may involve many large sums of money. No man is up to his best if you work him too long. How many students put in over six hours' actual work a day? How many men are capable of working over six hours a day at hard mental labor?

I do not mean, now, where a man sits in his office and talks a little with A, and consults with B, and reads a book touching upon some subject for half an hour, and writes a letter. I am talking about the man who has to do a particular task and to do it over and over again, and to do it with absolute accuracy. How many girls can sit in an office and pound a typewriter steadily for seven hours a day and not break down under the the strain? I mean where they are required to work; I do not mean where they sit around.

I want to tell those of the Senators who are here to-day that I hope before they vote for additional hours of labor they will go down to one department that I happened to visit. True, it is not covered by this bill; but surely, if we put in this provision and make the clerks in the Agricultural Department work eight hours, we must pass similar laws regulating all other departments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We must put them in all or none.

Mr. REED. I visited the Auditor for the Post Office Department. Let me describe the place. The auditor may be here to-morrow denying the statement I am going to make, but all the witnesses this side of the pearly gates will never remove from my mind the impression I received. I saw scores and scores and scores of young women and middle-aged women and some old women and a few men—nearly all women, though—sitting down at a new-fangled machine, and each of them had before her eyes where she could see it a card with a post-office number upon it, with the figures showing the amount of some postal transaction. It may have been a money order for 10 cents or it may have been one for $10. She was required to touch exactly the right keys, to punch exactly the right number in a card, and then to punch exactly the right amount in dollars or cents, and if she missed a single figure, if she touched the wrong key once, she was docked, and when she had a certain number of dockage marks against her her pay was liable to be reduced or she was liable to discharge. So hour after hour they sat there, and there they still sit, like automatons, like human machines, their eyes glued upon the paper before them, their fingers working almost, it seems, by magic, touching with great rapidity these keys, then quickly seizing another card and replacing the one just completed. Employees in that department tell me that scarcely a week passes that does not record the fact that some poor girl or woman is stricken with nervous prostration. A body has been broken on the wheel of labor—discarded as worn-out human machinery—mere wastage, no longer to be counted. But the God above, looking down in kindness, sees the frail limbs writhe in pain; His tender ears hear the cries of despair that come from the wretched lips of women who must toil or starve and who have fallen under the cross of labor.

Seven hours and a half a day at that kind of work is about as bad as it was to serve in the galleys of old Rome. But, of course, they ought to be made to stay another hour if it will get a few votes for somebody who desires to go out and tell the farmers in his district that "he made the lazy clerks down in Washington work an extra hour." I do not mean to say that that is the motive at all that inspires many of those, in fact the majority of those, who have been for this measure; but I beseech the Members of the Senate before they vote for a bill of this kind to take into consideration the fact that there are places where the men and women do not work hard enough and where, perhaps, a remedy ought to be established; there are other places where they work like slaves, so that the heart of any human being will bleed as he stands and looks at them bending to their tasks.

There are departments here in this city where chemists are shut up for many hours with the noxious and poisonous vapors that they must breathe in order to compound those products that are necessary to carry on the war. But there is to be no exception to the new rule. They must stay eight hours, no matter how it racks their nerves, no matter how it poisons their lungs, no matter if their efficiency is thereby reduced; there is to be no exception.

Senators, let me tell you something. I have found that when a condition has existed for 20 years or more and it has been generally applied—now note the condition—and where a large number of men have had the enforcement of it and all have been free to act and not one of them has suggested a change, generally it is not wise for an outsider to rush in and force a change. It is generally well to let well enough alone. This rule will cover a multitude of varied activities. It will apply to law clerks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Are eight hours too long for them?

Mr. REED. Absolutely. Eight hours are too long for any man to really grub and work at books. I do not mean to say you can not sit around and mull things over; I am talking about work; and that is what these people are supposed to give us. I say there is not a man living who can sit down and put in eight hours a day absolutely at his desk on legal propositions and stand up under it. I do not refer to talking to your clients and that sort of thing. I have done that for 14 hours a day many a time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Do not the law clerks confer together a part of the time? Do they not confer with their superiors?

Mr. REED. Possibly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Do they not spend about as much time talking over what they are working upon in the departments as a clerk in a law office?

Mr. REED. I do not think so; but I say that the right kind of a law clerk, with the business he has to perform, will work it out if it takes him 14 hours a day; but the next day if he was in Senator SMITH'S office or in mine and worked for only three hours we would say nothing about it. We are talking about people working by rule, working so much each day, measured out to them, and they must do it.

If we pass this law, we should logically make it apply to the clerks in our offices. Yet if I had a clerk in my office whom I had to work under the eight-hour rule I would not have him there five minutes. I require and expect him to help me out with my work, and if he wants a day off or if he wants to put in two hours a day when work is slack I say nothing, but if he has to put in 10 hours the next day and makes complaint he can not work for me. I expect my clerks to take an interest and get out the work, and I expect to treat them like men and give them some liberties. That is the spirit of the present law.

As it stands now the law allows the head of a department to say to his people, "You must be here seven hours a day anyhow; if I want you longer you must come." It is proposed now that they must come for eight hours and also come the extra hours without pay. Senators, it is a cheap performance.

Oh, of course they say war is on and everybody ought to work now. What difference does that make? If because of this war we get behind in these departments, the head of the department will say to these clerks, "I want you here an hour earlier in the morning, and you must work an hour or two hours later." They have said it in some of the departments, and, having caught up with their work, they then released their clerks.

I have taken much more time than I expected. I did not have time to prepare what I wanted to say on this matter, and it always takes a good deal longer to make a speech when you are not prepared than when you are. That accounts for the great length of many of mine. But I come back to this proposition: Wages of clerks are very low on the average; I mean low for the city of Washington, because the expense of living is very high here. Mostly women will be affected, women who have to live in rooms, many of them who have to get their own meals and attend to their own house work. If they do that and work seven hours a day it is long enough and it is hard enough. Hard taskmasters do not get good results. I do not want to see it made so that women who work in these departments can not make a decent living, and I do not want to see it made so hard that they will break down under the strain of long hours. Seven hours a day working over books or pounding a typewriter or working on a comptometer, or doing any of the other difficult tasks that have to be performed by first-class clerks, are as many as any poor girl or woman ought to be compelled to labor. We do not need to require them to work out their very heart's blood even if we are in a war. We will not get any more labor in the long run out of them, because a person who is weary and worn and tired and half sick can not perform a full day's work.

Let this matter stay where it has been. Let the head of a department be authorized to require more than seven hours of labor whenever he needs it. Let him release his help at the end of seven hours when he can do so without impairing the public service. Who is raising complaint about present conditions? What head of a department has complained? Who has been wronged or injured by this thing? Where did this agitation begin? Has the President seen anything wrong and called our attention to it? No. Has the Secretary of Agriculture told us that he needs his employees more hours? No. He is there on the job. He knows about as much what he needs in his offices as the Representative in Congress from the fifth district of Missouri. He is quite as intelligent, he is quite as patriotic, he is quite as honest, he is quite as far removed from the cheap demagogue. There is not a word of protest from the Secretary of Agriculture. Has Mr. Secretary Lane asked us to regulate the hours of the clerks in his department? It occurs to me, as I stand here, that my distinguished friend, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was Secretary of the Interior when this law was upon the statute books.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There were so many clerks in the department at that time that seven hours a day were ample to do all the work. Not only is that true, but in many branches of the Interior Department I found the work a year and a half behind when I took charge. In a year and a half it was all current. It never occurred to me that we should increase the number of hours, unless we gave up some of the clerks.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to state my experience at the head of two departments for a considerable period of time—the Department of State for four years and the Department of Justice for three and a half years? Although both those departments were undermanned, both being relatively small departments and never having had the pull in Congress that the larger departments have, I never could get quite the number of clerks I wanted, yet my experience has been that although called upon sometimes day after day for weeks for extra service there never was the slightest complaint; that they had become accustomed to it; that it was a part of their duties to come when the necessity required, and they made no complaint. I think the most practicable rule we can have is the rule that now obtains.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am delighted to hear that statement from the Senator from Pennsylvania, who speaks out of the abundance of a long and a very extensive experience and illustrious career. I am also delighted to have the testimony of the distinguished Senator from Georgia, because it completely bears out what I have been saying. He tells us that there was a superabundance of clerks in the Interior Department when he went in, that the work was away behindhand, but that in a short time after he took charge the work was up to date. It depends always on who is at the head of a department. With the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] at the helm, without abusing anybody, he would get the work up; and with the Senator from Pennsylvania at the head of a department, without abusing anybody or calling on Congress to pass any harsh laws, he would have such a spirit among his employees that they would keep the work up.

I pass on down the line now. Has Mr. Secretary Lane asked for this, I repeat? No; and yet Secretary Franklin K. Lane is generally reputed to be a practical, hard-headed man who expects a day's work for a day's pay. Without at all having the reputation of being a hard taskmaster he is regarded as a most efficient and careful man. Has the Secretary of War asked for it? No. If there is any place in all the departments where the pressure of work has come hard and insistent, it has been in the War Department; but the Secretary of War has not asked for any such rule, and I apprehend that if the Secretary of War wanted his clerks to work all night there would not be a single laggard among them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Secretary of War did ask for more than $4,000,000 of additional money to pay his extra force during the present year.

Mr. REED. Exactly; but while he is asking for that he did not ask that his clerks should be compelled by law to work a longer time than that already fixed. There was a necessity for extra clerks, and I have no doubt clerks in the departments have been working far into the night and doing it without any extra pay. I might call the roll of the entire Cabinet, but all would answer that they have not asked this law.

Is it not singular, now, that it remains for a Representative from the fifth district of Missouri to discover what neither President Wilson nor a single Cabinet officer had discovered—that there was something wrong in these departments? Is it not strange that this amendment, which has been turned down time and again in the House of Representatives, was finally got through as a war measure? I am sorry it is here. It will do no good to anybody. Let these heads of the departments run their own departments; let them be responsible. They can make their clerks work all night if they need them, and I would fire a clerk in five minutes who would not work all night if I needed him at a time like this, provided he was able to work all night. I would not expect him to do that, however, very many nights.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does not the Senator know that the clerks who are now in the War Department work every night?

Mr. REED. I think they do. I have already stated that. I am coming back again to this proposition, because I want to get it impressed on the Senate if I can.

A very great proportion of these clerks are women—women who have to earn their own living. I say now that my heart bleeds every time I see a lot of women going down the street in the morning on their way to some shop or store or office where they work for a living. I wish to God no woman in this world ever had to do any work except in the home of a father or a mother or in the home of some good man who was her husband.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that there was a sufficient number of men of enough account to take care of all of them.

Mr. REED. Yes; I wish so; but that is not the way life is running now. As soon as girls are out of school they have to take up their tasks—a very large percentage of them—and, no matter how strong the dear women may think they are, they are not fitted by the Almighty for the hard contests of the world. There is not a woman who ever lived, who was an honor to her sex, who did not need the shelter of a home. It may be she could get along without home or protector, but it was by taxing her soul and her body and her energies and her life. They are down here in these—I will not say sweatshops—but in these Government offices, and seven hours a day is long enough for them to work, unless in case of a rare emergency.

I do not class them at all with the big, husky, muscular fellows who work in the gun factory, who are in the open air, whose blood circulates with all the force and energy of splendid health, who can eat a peck of pork and beans at dinner and digest it; who are living the lives men ought to live—I do not put in the same class with these stalwart men the poor, pale girl, who sits, with her brain tense and her fingers nimbly running over the keys of a machine, whose mind is working, whose fingers are working, who must remain seated in one position, away from the sunlight, away from the air, away from exercise. There is a difference. This Senate will do itself no greater credit than by recognizing that difference.

Let the heads of the departments alone; let them run their own departments; let the clerks in the departments work seven hours; and, if they need them eight hours, let them call them in, but do not pay them anything more for it; but when the extra time is no longer necessary, let the clerks have the hour in the sunshine; let them walk out where the trees are green and where there is an occasional flower to look at; but do not pen them up for the sake of penning them up. It is not necessary.

There is a principle which runs through the employment of clerks who do mental labor in departments and offices that does not apply at all to a gun factory. Let me tell you what that is. It may be that it will have the effect on some benighted soul who is about to vote for this provision of the bill. If I am running a gun factory, I can lay out a certain amount of steel; I can start a certain number of lathes moving; I can plan the task so that every minute of the day will work along and everybody every minute of the day will be busy. I can do that day after day and week after week, and if I find out I am going to be short of material for a week or for a day, I can lay off so many men. That is a principle that runs through that kind of work. But I will give you an illustration upon the other side.

In order to illustrate the principle I will take an extreme case, a United States marshal's office. You have to have men there to serve summonses when the emergency arises. A great deal of the time they are sitting around, doing nothing; but you must have the surplus there to take care of the emergency when the emergency comes. So it is in your offices. The work does not come as it does in a gun factory, every single hour of the day a certain amount coming in, but there will be hours when there will be some slack work, and often there will be hours when there is an extra demand upon you so that when you come to apply an absolute eight-hour day to the clerk, and say he has got to stay there whether the work is there or not, you have imposed an unnecessary hardship on him. What you ought to do is to say that he shall be there 8 hours or 10 hours or 12 hours if the work is there, but when the work is not there, then he is to be allowed to relax. That is the proper principle upon which to do office work. It is the principle that runs through office employments; it is the principle that runs through almost every office in the world, except where they have the thing organized into a sort of sweatshop.

I beg pardon for having taken so much time of the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I gave notice this morning of an amendment which I intended to offer to the Agricultural appropriation bill. I find on examining it that I desire to perfect it; and I ask unanimous consent to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to perfect it to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, like the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], I have not prepared a speech, but, not like him, I shall occupy only a few minutes.

I indorse a great deal that he has said—his splendid tribute to women and his expression of intense sympathy for them when they are called upon to endure hard labor. I most deeply regret that there is not a strong man to care for every woman, and when I see a woman compelled to engage in hard labor I always stop to think, Is not some man to blame for it?

Mr. President, we all have constituents in these departments. I have many. I am proud to call them my personal friends, and for them I have the most cordial affection. I believe, however, in the eight-hour rule for a day's work, except where the work is of such variety and so changeable that a longer number of hours is entirely practicable and not too severe a strain upon the person doing the work. I believe in the eight-hour limitation, because I think it is best for the human race. I think the limit of eight hours for a continuous day's work is saving to the person and saving to the Nation. More than 40 years ago, long before eight hours had been recognized as a limit for a day's work, I began a fight in my State against excessive hours of labor.

I do not like the present statute; I do not like the provision that clerks in the departments may be worked just as many hours as desired by their superiors. I do not believe in the eight-hour day and time-and-one-half pay for extra hours. I do not believe in extra hours; and if extra hours are required on one day I believe in having those hours made up to the workmen by lessened hours on some other day just as soon thereafter as possible. I believe in the eight-hour day, because I think that is the average length of time that a man ought to work in the interest of his health, in the interest of his mental and moral development, and in the interest of other responsibilities he may carry. To work him 12 hours and pay him double time for the four extra hours does not save his life or save his health or develop his mind and character; it is an excessive, unwise, improper wearing of the man or the woman who is required to work that length of time. When, perchance, extra hours must be given upon a particular day, instead of double pay or time-and-a-half pay, I think the true rule should be that just as speedily as possible an equivalent number of hours should be taken off of a subsequent eight-hour day so that the average time of employment shall be eight hours daily.

Mr. President, the Borland amendment came to the Agricultural Committee, and, with one dissenting vote, we approved it. I am in favor of amending the Borland amendment by providing that if at any time clerks are required to work over eight hours the time shall be kept and shall be given to them in a day with full pay without work.

Under the present system employees have 30 days' leave with full pay and an additional 30 days' sick leave with full pay when they are sick. If they work over eight hours a day, the extra time should be added to their 30 days' leave or, better still, the day without work should be allowed as soon as eight hours of extra work have been performed. How does the system work at present? Some of the clerks in a department may be called upon to work 10 hours, while others are working 7, and those who work 10 hours get no credit for the 3 extra hours. How much better it would be to require them all to work eight hours, and if, perchance, any are called upon to work over eight hours, then give them credit for it in reduced hours on some day or days later on?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Of course, that proposition may be a very meritorious one, but the Senator will agree with me that that is not the proposition we are now discussing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have an amendment to the so-called Borland amendment, which I intend to ask the Senate to accept, and it is therefore the proposition which I am considering. It has been the view that I have entertained with reference to the subject by reason of which I felt justified in voting for the Borland amendment.

Mr. REED. That is a very different proposition; many people will agree to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand, of course, that it is a different proposition.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator read the amendment he intends to offer, so that we may listen to his discussion in the light of the proposed amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After the so-called Borland amendment I propose to add:

> And when work is required in excess of eight hours the extra time shall be kept and leave shall be allowed to the employee required to do the extra work to an extent equal to the extra service.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator to put in the words "annual leave," so that it will come in the same year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well. The leave ought to be at the option of the clerk. If a clerk worked over eight hours for a week, I think it would be wise to give extra time or leave to the clerk immediately thereafter, if the clerk so desires, but certainly within the year, and I will change the language so that the clerk shall have it at least in the year. I believe the wisest course would be for a clerk who has worked eight hours' extra time to be given an extra day for rest immediately thereafter, or as soon as the clerk desires it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has introduced that amendment. I shall favor it if the motion of the Senator from Texas is defeated. I had intended, if the motion was defeated, to submit an amendment providing that the requirement as to eight hours' labor shall remain in force during the existence of this war. I think possibly the amendment of the Senator from Georgia may obviate the necessity of that. I had intended to vote against the motion of the Senator from Texas, and I wanted to state in the RECORD at some time that I would offer that amendment, making this provision applicable during the present war. That, however, may not be necessary in view of the Senator's proposed amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, let us see what the condition is in Washington at the present time. All the departments are greatly overworked; into the departments are being brought large numbers of additional clerks; the halls are filled with desks and with women at work; and in some places you will see women working into the night. I believe it would be vastly better for all of them to work a regular eight-hour day, and if in any division women are asked to work two hours extra I think as soon as they have earned a day's leave by eight hours' extra work they ought to be given a day's leave for rest. I do not know but that it would be better in framing this amendment to provide that as soon as the extra work has amounted to eight hours, at the option of the person required to do the extra work, the privilege should be given of a day's leave.

My view of this eight-hour rule has always been that it was in conservation of human life and human health and the saving of human life and human health, particularly where the work was steady, unvaried work. I do not apply the eight-hour rule to varied work, such as the work of a Senator. We may begin at 8 o'clock in the morning and work until 11 o'clock at night, and yet the variety and change of our work is such that it is entirely different from the work of a person who sits at a desk and hammers at one steady proposition for eight hours. Where the work is steady and continuous, without the rest of variety, there should be an unyielding limit of eight hours, without added hours of work; and if it is necessary to work extra time, those hours of extra work should be made up by days of less than eight hours' work.

The Senator from Missouri said that the heads of departments have not called for the proposed change in the law. That is true. I think the whole subject has been brought to public attention with more force within the past 12 months than ever before. For the first time we have found the departments here entirely unable to do their work on account of the pressure coming upon them. For one department to ask Congress in a deficiency appropriation bill for over $4,000,000 to pay extra clerks is something unprecedented in the history of the Government. The truth is that I have thought in that department they have so many clerks that they can not work; they seem to be falling over each other, with messengers sitting around the doors in each other's way. There are enough idle watchmen and messengers in some departments in Washington sitting about the doors as you walk through to make you tired.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator in the observation he has just made. I sat in a certain bureau not long ago and watched some women who had been brought, I presume, from the interior, perhaps from the far West, or possibly from New England, at salaries of $1,000 or $1,100 a year, when I would not have given anyone of them $5 a week to do work for me. But they are there. They are in the way of each other, and I think that the reform ought to be made at that point. The fact is that there have been brought here a mass of young people without any equipment to do the work that is required of them. I read in a newspaper the other day that a certain gentleman, not the head of a department, said, if he was correctly quoted, he would like to get 1,200 stenographers, but he did not know where he could find more than 12. Twelve hundred stenographers! It is absurd; there is no such demand to warrant any such statement as that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator stop a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If that gentleman was in the public service, I think we should obtain some competent man to take his place.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so, too. I am following the Senator's speech very carefully, because I am seeking information on this complicated subject, and we all want to do the right thing by these employees. The clerks have substantial advantages over clerks employed in private business. A young man or a young woman clerk in my section of the country gets a vacation of about two weeks in the year. The young men and young women in the Government departments get a regular month's vacation; and then they get an additional month if they are sick. I presume that they are all honest about being sick, but plenty of them get that additional month. Some of them, to my knowledge, go to Europe during those two months and take other trips abroad.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor; but, if he has no objection, I will yield.

Mr. KING. I want to suggest to the Senator that I have had a great many complaints from the business and professional men of this city because the departments are taking away all of their employees. Senators complain about paying the employees of the departments too small wages, and yet those wages are nearly double what is paid here in private employment; where the hours of labor are very much longer than in the Government service; where the conditions are not nearly so favorable; and where the work is infinitely harder than that in the Government service.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg pardon of the Senator from Georgia for taking so much time. My sympathies are along the same line that the sympathies of the Senator from Georgia run, and yet there are two sides to the question. Two or three years ago in the city of Washington I sat at a table not far removed from an interesting young woman who complained to me with a good deal of regularity of the inadequacy of her salary; and yet, to my knowledge, she went to the grand opera four nights in that particular week. I did not go at all, because I thought I could not afford it, but she went. One Senator has complained that these young women do not have recreation. I think they get a good deal of recreation, because a great many of them go every night to the moving-picture shows. That, of course, does not touch the question at issue at all, except in a collateral way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will yield to me for one further observation, I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that within the past six months I have had applications from at least 50 or 75 individuals who were formerly in the Government service, but who went back into private life and failed or found the work there too arduous. They have come back now, and have earnestly sought positions at the hands of the Government, indicating conclusively—and they so state—that they would very much prefer to work for the Government than to work for private individuals or to work for themselves.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, my sympathy goes out to every one who has a hard struggle to meet expenses and to all who struggle for a livelihood, and yet we ought to think of all the people of the United States, and remember that the balance of the people of the United States pay the salaries of those in office, and we ought always to seek to equalize the compensation we give to those in office, with a regard to what the same work brings to those not in office. However much we may desire larger pay to all, whether in or out of Government service, we must remember that compensation for labor can not be pressed beyond the value of the laborer's production.

There has recently been an examination made by the Railroad Wage Commission of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and a statement has been furnished me of the report of one of the important railroad systems operating through Washington, D. C., showing salaries paid to its clerical employees during the month of December, 1917, and the analysis that I intend to furnish the Senate is based upon a summary submitted by the company covering five representative divisions of the company's system.

The divisions reported on were selected by the railroad under the following instructions from the commission:

These divisions must be so selected as to avoid valid criticism as to their not being truly representative of the entire system.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] gave us figures of compensation paid to the employees at Hog Island. From what I have heard of Hog Island it is about the last place I would select as an example for consideration in the line of any other endeavor in the United States, unless it were to express the hope that it would not be followed as an example. I would cite it only to guard against what seems to have gone on there. But when you come to the employees of a railroad company, and take 10 divisions, and take the clerical force of a railroad company, you get into the same class as our average clerical work here.

The figures are really surprising. They indicate compensation which I think was too low.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. KING. Does not the experience of individuals who have come in contact with employees in the railroad service and those who have come in contact with those who are working for the Government conclusively demonstrate that the service rendered by employees in private activities is very much greater per hour, per day, per month, or per year than that rendered to the Government by the employees of the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My observation of the work in railroad offices has rather impressed me with the thought that it was being done with more force, with more vigor, and more dispatch——

Mr. KING. And more efficiency?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And with more efficiency than I have usually seen it conducted in the departments in Washington.

Now, here is the result. These figures were prepared by the railroad companies in connection with a demand for an increase of freight rates, so there was every inducement to furnish the figures indicative of their expenses in a way that was as favorable as possible to the railroad company, and it was to the interest of the railroad company to select the divisions representing its highest average of salaries.

They were showing how heavy their expenses were and how their expenses had increased:

Two hundred and ninety-nine clerks out of 1,043 were paid between $75 and $100 per month.

Six hundred and sixteen received between $30 and $75 per month.

A total of 915 clerks received $100 and less per month out of a great total of 1,043.

Mr. President, I have the statement in detail, and I ask leave to print it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does that refer to the employees of the railroad or to the employees of the departments?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is a statement of the pay of the employees of the railroad. I have presented this statement in detail of the employees of the railroad to which I have just referred.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an indirect question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. KING. Is there anything to indicate the sex of the employees? And if there is not, does not the Senator think that the majority of them are males?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have nothing to indicate the sex, but I should certainly say that the average of males is much larger in the railroad service than it is in the departments here.

I print this statement in order that our employees in Washington may see that they are not unkindly treated; that relatively their compensation is not unjustly decreased; and that as compared to their fellow citizens who are at work at home, even though they are men, they are paid more for the amount of work that they do than is paid in private employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator likewise, in that connection, feel justified in making the suggestion that in all human probability at this session of Congress some added compensation will be given to the employees of the departments?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think undoubtedly it will be done. During the address of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that subject was up, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and I expressed the opinion that it would be done; and I furthermore expressed the opinion that I was in favor of some increased compensation without regard to the change of hours, whether we leave them seven hours or provide for eight hours. If we stand on the law as it is now, we have determined the hours. The expenses in Washington at present are heavy, and if we bring people here we ought to give them a chance to live by what we pay them, even though they do receive more than is paid for similar work in other parts of the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, probably the Senator has had this matter called to his attention, and I do not know how far it will go toward relieving the situation; but the Government is now employing women to take houses in the city of Washington, the Government becoming responsible for the rent for a certain length of time, and fixing a maximum price that the women running these houses shall exact of the girl clerks who have come here; and, as I understand, the maximum is $10 a week.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For board and room?

Mr. GALLINGER. For board and room.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That will quite substantially improve the situation, and I am very glad to know it is being done.

Mr. GALLINGER. I state that because I know a very excellent woman from my own State who has taken a house upon those terms. The Government likewise advances money for the furnishing of the house, to be paid back in installments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This whole condition in Washington is abnormal. Our whole course in connection with governmental matters is abnormal. As a general proposition, I believe in employing those that the Government needs to serve the Government and letting them attend to their private affairs just like any one else, with just as little paternalism and interference with individual responsibility as possible. But we have a condition in Washington now that is so entirely unprecedented that I think it excuses unprecedented attention to the situation.

I shall not detain the Senate longer, and I wish again to say that in presenting this table showing compensation I commend it to the attention of those employed in the Government service in Washington. I think it will make them feel a spirit of greater contentment with what they are receiving. I think if they have forgotten what the compensation is to the public generally at home, it will remind them of it, and they will realize that they at least are not being unkindly treated.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 14, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Eternal One, from whom proceedeth all that is pure and holy, Thou art the Father of life and light, truth, justice, mercy, and love. Help us, we beseech Thee, without the fear or favor of men, to seek by every means to develop these qualities in our own being, that we may press toward the goal of that perfected manhood, as we know it in Jesus Christ, and to Thee we shall ascribe all praise, in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MEMBERS ELECT FROM THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Mr. RIORDAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. RIORDAN. Mr. Speaker, the four Members who were elected at the recent special election in New York are present. Their certificates of election have not arrived on account of the soldier vote. Under the laws of our State the votes cast by the soldiers can not be canvassed until six weeks after the election. There is no question about the election of any one of these Members. The plurality in every case is a substantial one, the lowest being more than 2,100, running up to nearly 6,000. I ask unanimous consent that they be sworn in at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think there is no disposition on the part of the House to prevent these gentleman from being sworn in at this time. If the gentleman from New York will make a statement it will make it clear—I understand such a statement can be made—that the soldier vote can not under any circumstances affect the election of these Members; if the gentleman will kindly give their majorities and the best estimate possible of the soldier vote.

Mr. RIORDAN. The total soldier vote cast in the four districts is 353, which would make an average of less than 90 votes in a congressional district. The majorities by which the four Members were elected, as shown by the returns, are: Mr. DELANEY, from the seventh district, succeeding Mr. Fitzgerald, plurality 3,166; Mr. CLEARY, succeeding Mr. Griffin, plurality 4,744; Mr. DONOVAN, succeeding Mr. Hulbert, plurality 2,102; Mr. GRIFFIN, succeeding Mr. Bruckner, plurality 5,937.

Mr. MONDELL. These pluralities seem to be larger than we wish they were, and it seems to indicate there can be no doubt of the election of these gentlemen, and I hope there will be no objection to their being sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that this Congress is asked to seat these gentlemen before the count is all in?

Mr. RIORDAN. Yes, sir; for the reason——

Mr. MEEKER. I object.

Mr. RIORDAN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MEEKER. Yes.

Mr. RIORDAN. The count is all in and so is the soldier vote; but under the State law providing for the vote of the soldiers in France and other places—that did not affect this particular election; there are only 353 of those votes—they can not be canvassed by our local canvassers until six weeks after election.

Mr. MEEKER. For the time being I object.

Mr. MONDELL. I trust the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MEEKER. I object for the present.

Mr. MONDELL. There seems to be no doubt——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3833. An act to authorize Cole and Osage Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across the Osage River; and

S. 41. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3833. An act to authorize Cole and Osage Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across the Osage River, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 41. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel purposes, to the Committee on Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 175. An act to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes."

REREFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Woman Suffrage I ask unanimous consent to have the bill H. R. 4665, a bill granting right of suffrage to women of Hawaii, retransferred from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4665) granting to the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii additional powers relative to elections and qualifications of electors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, under direction of the Committee on Woman Suffrage I move you as follows: That the bill H. R. 4665, a bill granting to the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii additional powers relative to elections and qualifications of electors, referred to the Committee on Territories, be rereferred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move that that motion be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to lay the motion upon the table.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion to either motion.

The SPEAKER. What is the preferential motion?

Mr. SIMS. I want to make one.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, why is that a preferential motion?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to call up the conference report on the railroad-control bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will get around to all of them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is not preferential over a motion from a committee having the powers that the general appropriating committees have for the consideration of their bills.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If this situation presents a question of preferential consideration then the preference should be given to the motion of the gentleman from California to correct an erroneous reference of a public bill. Rule XXII, subsection 3, provides specifically for this motion, and prescribes that it may be made on any day after the reading of the Journal, by unanimous consent, or on motion of a committee claiming jurisdiction. The gentleman from California makes his motion on the authority of his committee claiming jurisdiction. The rule contemplates immediate action, since it excludes debate. Moreover the motion can be made at only one moment of time, that is, the moment immediately succeeding the reading of the Journal. These circumscriptions about the motion indicate that the time given is sacred to this motion, and that a Member in a position to make the motion under the rule, and appearing at the prescribed time, should be protected in his right and have his motion submitted. There is no provision in the rules or in the precedents of which I am aware which gives a Member rising to make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole to consider a general appropriation bill the right to displace a Member proceeding under the rule to correct an erroneous reference and have his motion submitted in preference to the prior motion intended to correct the reference complained of. The House can decline to make the correction, and then go into the Committee of the Whole if it so desires. But this is a matter in the discretion of the House. The Member who has secured recognition to make the motion to correct an erroneous reference is entitled to have his motion submitted as a matter of right. He is not subject to displacement by the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], to table the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 69.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the motion to table will, as their names are called, vote "yea," and those opposed will vote "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 268, answered "present" 4, not voting 92, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to rerefer.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS and Mr. RAKER rose.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Is not an application for a rereference in order?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The gentleman has just had it.

Mr. RAKER. I have another one.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman will not get it up.

FEDERAL CONTROL OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the railroad bill (S. 3752).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up the conference report on the railroad bill. The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read instead of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether it is his purpose to explain in a general way the changes that have been effected in conference in the bill as it passed the House after the statement or conference report has been read?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection, then.

CONFERENCE REPORT NO. 376.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House, insert the following:

"That the President, having in time of war taken over the possession, use, control, and operation (called herein Federal control) of certain railroads and systems of transportation (called herein carriers), is hereby authorized to agree with and to guarantee to any such carrier making operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission, that during the period of such Federal control it shall receive as just compensation an annual sum, payable from time to time in reasonable installments, for each year and pro rata for any fractional year of such Federal control, not exceeding a sum equivalent as nearly as may be to its average annual railway operating income for the three years ended June 30, 1917. That any railway operating income accruing during the period of Federal control in excess of such just compensation shall remain the property of the United States. In the computation of such income, debits and credits arising from the accounts called in the monthly reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission equipment rents and joint facility rents shall be included, but debits and credits arising from the operation of such street electric passenger railways, including railways commonly called interurbans, as are at the time of the agreement not under Federal control, shall be excluded. If any lines were acquired by, leased to, or consolidated with such railroad or system between July 1, 1914, and December 31, 1917, both inclusive, and separate operating returns to the Interstate Commerce Commission were not made for such lines after such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, there shall (before the average is computed) be added to the total railway operating income of such railroad or system for the three years ended June 30, 1917, the total railway operating income of the lines so acquired, leased, or consolidated, for the period beginning July 1, 1914, and ending on the date of such acquisition, lease, or consolidation, or on December 31, 1917, whichever is the earlier. The average annual railway operating income shall be ascertained by the Interstate Commerce Commission and certified by it to the President. Its certificate shall, for the purpose of such agreement, be taken as conclusive of the amount of such average annual railway operating income.

"Every such agreement shall provide that any Federal taxes under the act of October 3, 1917, or acts in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, commonly called war taxes, assessed for the period of Federal control beginning January 1, 1918, or any part of such period, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation; that other taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period of Federal control or any part thereof, either on the property used under such Federal control or on the right to operate as a carrier, or on the revenues or any part thereof derived from operation (not including, however, assessments for public improvements or taxes assessed on property under construction, and chargeable under the classification of the Interstate Commerce Commission to investment in road and equipment), shall be paid out of revenues derived from railway operations while under Federal control; that all taxes assessed under Federal or any other governmental authority for the period prior to January 1, 1918, whenever levied or payable, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds, or shall be charged against or deducted from the just compensation.

"Every such agreement shall also contain adequate and appropriate provisions for the maintenance, repair, renewals, and depreciation of the property, for the creation of any reserves or reserve funds found necessary in connection therewith, and for such accounting and adjustments of charges and payments, both during and at the end of Federal control, as may be requisite in order that the property of each carrier may be returned to it in substantially as good repair and in substantially as complete equipment as it was in at the beginning of Federal control, and also that the United States may, by deductions from the just compensations or by other proper means and charges, be reimbursed for the cost of any additions, repairs, renewals, and betterments to such property not justly chargeable to the United States; in making such accounting and adjustments, due consideration shall be given to the amounts expended or reserved by each carrier for maintenance, repairs, renewals, and depreciation during the three years ended June 30, 1917, to the condition of the property at the beginning and at the end of Federal control and to any other pertinent facts and circumstances.

"The President is further authorized in such agreement to make all other reasonable provisions, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act or of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, that he may deem necessary or proper for such Federal control or for the determination of the mutual rights and obligations of the parties to the agreement arising from or out of such Federal control.

"If the President shall find that the condition of any carrier was during all or a substantial portion of the period of three years ended June 30, 1917, because of nonoperation, receivership, or where recent expenditures for additions or improvements or equipment were not fully reflected in the operating railway income of said three years or a substantial portion thereof, or because of any undeveloped or abnormal conditions, so exceptional as to make the basis of earnings hereinabove provided for plainly inequitable as a fair measure of just compensation, then the President may make with the carrier such agreement for such amount as just compensation as under the circumstances of the particular case he shall find just.

"That every railroad not owned, controlled, or operated by another carrier company, and which has heretofore competed for traffic with a railroad or railroads of which the President has taken the possession, use, and control, or which connects with such railroads and is engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, shall be held and considered as within 'Federal control,' as herein defined, and necessary for the prosecution of the war, and shall be entitled to the benefit of all the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as including any street or interurban electric railway which has as its principal source of operating revenue urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic, or sale of power, heat, and light, or both.

"The agreement shall also provide that the carrier shall accept all the terms and conditions of this act and any regulation or order made by or through the President under authority of this act or of that portion of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, which authorizes the President in time of war to take possession, assume control, and utilize systems of transportation.

"SEC. 2. That if no such agreement is made, or pending the execution of an agreement, the President may nevertheless pay to any carrier while under Federal control an annual amount, payable in reasonable installments, not exceeding 90 per cent of the estimated annual amount of just compensation, remitting such carrier, in case where no agreement is made, to its legal rights for any balance claimed to the remedies provided in section 3 hereof. Any amount thereafter found due such carrier above the amount paid shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. The acceptance of any benefits under this section shall constitute an acceptance by the carrier of all the provisions of this act and shall obligate the carrier to pay to the United States, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from a date or dates fixed in proceedings under section 3, the amount by which the sums received under this section exceed the sum found due in such proceedings.

"SEC. 3. That all claims for just compensation not adjusted (as provided in section 1) shall, on the application of the President or of any carrier, be submitted to boards, each consisting of three referees to be appointed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, members of which and the official force thereof being eligible for service on such boards without additional compensation. Such boards of referees are hereby authorized to summon witnesses, require the production of records, books, correspondence, documents, memoranda, and other papers, view properties, administer oaths, and may hold hearings in Washington and elsewhere, as their duties and the convenience of the parties may require. In case of disobedience to a subpœna the board may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and such court within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, corporation, partnership, or association, issue an order requiring appearance before the board, or the production of documentary evidence if so ordered, or the giving of evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Such cases may be heard separately or together or by classes, by such boards as the Interstate Commerce Commission in the first instance or any board of referees to which any such cases shall be referred may determine. Said boards shall give full hearings to such carriers and to the United States; shall consider all the facts and circumstances, and shall report as soon as practicable in each case to the President the just compensation, calculated on an annual basis and otherwise in such form as to be convenient and available for the making of such agreement as is authorized in section 1. The President is authorized to enter into an agreement with such carrier for just compensation upon a basis not in excess of that reported by such board, and may include therein provisions similar to those authorized under section 1. Failing such agreement, either the United States or such carrier may file a petition in the Court of Claims for the purpose of determining the amount of such just compensation, and in the proceedings in said court the report of said referees shall be prima facie evidence of the amount of just compensation and of the facts therein stated. Proceedings in the Court of Claims under this section shall be given precedence and expedited in every practicable way.

"SEC. 4. That the just compensation that may be determined as hereinbefore provided by agreement or that may be adjudicated by the Court of Claims shall be increased by an amount reckoned at a reasonable rate per centum to be fixed by the President upon the cost of any additions and betterments, less retirements, and upon the cost of road extensions to the property of such carrier made by such carrier with the approval of or by order of the President while such property is under Federal control.

"SEC. 5. That no carrier while under Federal control shall, without the prior approval of the President, declare or pay any dividend in excess of its regular rate of dividends during the three years ended June 30, 1917: Provided, however, That such carriers as have paid no regular dividends or no dividends during said period may, with the prior approval of the President, pay dividends at such rate as the President may determine.

"SEC. 6. That the sum of $500,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which, together with any funds available from any operating income of said carriers, may be used by the President as a revolving fund for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Federal control, and so far as necessary the amount of just compensation, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment, such terminals, motive power, cars, and equipment to be used and accounted for as the President may direct and to be disposed of as Congress may hereafter by law provide.

"The President may also make or order any carrier to make any additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other equipment necessary or desirable for war purposes or in the public interest on or in connection with the property of any carrier. He may from said revolving fund advance to such carrier all or any part of the expense of such additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment so ordered and constructed by such carrier or by the President, such advances to be charged against such carrier and to bear interest at such rate and be payable on such terms as may be determined by the President, to the end that the United States may be fully reimbursed for any sums so advanced.

"Any loss claimed by any carrier by reason of any such additions, betterments, or road extensions so ordered and constructed may be determined by agreement between the President and such carrier; failing such agreement the amount of such loss shall be ascertained as provided in section 3 hereof.

"From said revolving fund the President may expend such an amount as he may deem necessary or desirable for the utilization and operation of canals, or for the purchase, construction, or utilization and operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways, and may in the operation and use of such facilities create or employ such agencies and enter into such contracts and agreements as he shall deem in the public interest.

"SEC. 7. That for the purpose of providing funds requisite for maturing obligations or for other legal and proper expenditures, or for reorganizing railroads in receivership, carriers may, during the period of Federal control, issue such bonds, notes, equipment trust certificates, stock, and other forms of securities, secured or unsecured by mortgage, as the President may first approve as consistent with the public interest. The President may, out of the revolving fund created by this act, purchase for the United States all or any part of such securities at prices not exceeding par, and may sell such securities whenever in his judgment it is desirable at prices not less than the cost thereof. Any securities so purchased shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, under the direction of the President, represent the United States in all matters in connection therewith in the same manner as a private holder thereof. The President shall each year, as soon as practicable after January 1, cause a detailed report to be submitted to the Congress of all receipts and expenditures made under this section and section 6 during the preceding calendar year.

"SEC. 8. That the President may execute any of the powers herein and heretofore granted him with relation to Federal control through such agencies as he may determine, and may fix the reasonable compensation for the performance of services in connection therewith, and may avail himself of the advice, assistance, and cooperation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the members and employees thereof, and may also call upon any department, commission, or board of the Government for such services as he may deem expedient. But no such official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such services except as now permitted by law.

"SEC. 9. That the provisions of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, shall remain in force and effect except as expressly modified and restricted by this act; and the President, in addition to the powers conferred by this act, shall have and is hereby given such other and further powers necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred. The provisions of this act shall also apply to any carriers to which Federal control may be hereafter extended.

"SEC. 10. That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President. Actions at law or suits in equity may be brought by and against such carriers and judgments rendered as now provided by law; and in any action at law or suit in equity against the carrier, no defense shall be made thereto upon the ground that the carrier is an instrumentality or agency of the Federal Government. Nor shall any such carrier be entitled to have transferred to a Federal court any action heretofore or hereafter instituted by or against it, which action was not so transferable prior to the Federal control of such carrier; and any action which has heretofore been so transferred because of such Federal control or of any act of Congress or official order or proclamation relating thereto shall upon motion of either party be retransferred to the court in which it was originally instituted. But no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control.

"That during the period of Federal control, whenever in his opinion the public interest requires, the President may initiate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices by filing the same with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall not be suspended by the commission pending final determination.

"Said rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be reasonable and just and shall take effect at such time and upon such notice as he may direct, but the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, upon complaint, enter upon a hearing concerning the justness and reasonableness of so much of any order of the President as establishes or changes any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of any carrier under Federal control, and may consider all the facts and circumstances existing at the time of the making of the same. In determining any question concerning any such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices or changes therein, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall give due consideration to the fact that the transportation systems are being operated under a unified and coordinated national control and not in competition.

"After full hearing the commission may make such findings and orders as are authorized by the act to regulate commerce as amended, and said findings and orders shall be enforced as provided in said act: Provided, however, That when the President shall find and certify to the Interstate Commerce Commission that in order to defray the expenses of Federal control and operation fairly chargeable to railway operating expenses, and also to pay railway tax accruals other than war taxes, net rents for joint facilities and equipment, and compensation to the carriers, operating as a unit, it is necessary to increase the railway operating revenues, the Interstate Commerce Commission in determining the justness and reasonableness of any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall take into consideration said finding and certificate by the President, together with such recommendations as he may make.

"SEC. 11. That every person or corporation, whether carrier or shipper, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by a carrier or shipper, or other person, who shall knowingly violate or fail to observe any of the provisions of this act, or shall knowingly interfere with or impede the possession, use, operation, or control of any railroad property, railroad, or transportation system hitherto or hereafter taken over by the President, or shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of any order or regulation made in pursuance of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or, if a person, by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both. Each independent transaction constituting a violation of, or a failure to observe, any of the provisions of this act, or any order entered in pursuance hereof, shall constitute a separate offense. For the taking or conversion to his own use or the embezzlement of money or property derived from or used in connection with the possession, use, or operation of said railroads or transportation systems, the criminal statutes of the United States, as well as the criminal statutes of the various States where applicable, shall apply to all officers, agents, and employees engaged in said railroad and transportation service, while the same is under Federal control, to the same extent as to persons employed in the regular service of the United States. Prosecutions for violations of this act or of any order entered hereunder shall be in the district courts of the United States, under the direction of the Attorney General, in accordance with the procedure for the collection and imposing of fines and penalties now existing in said courts.

"SEC. 12. That moneys and other property derived from the operation of the carriers during Federal control are hereby declared to be the property of the United States. Unless otherwise directed by the President, such moneys shall not be covered into the Treasury, but such moneys and property shall remain in the custody of the same officers, and the accounting thereof shall be in the same manner and form as before Federal control. Disbursements therefrom shall, without further appropriation, be made in the same manner as before Federal control and for such purposes as under the Interstate Commerce Commission classification of accounts in force on December 27, 1917, are chargeable to operating expenses or to railway tax accruals and for such other purposes in connection with Federal control as the President may direct, except that taxes under Titles 1 and 2 of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1917, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, shall be paid by the carrier out of its own funds. If Federal control begins or ends during the tax year for which any taxes so chargeable to railway tax accruals are assessed, the taxes for such year shall be apportioned to the date of the beginning or ending of such Federal control, and disbursements shall be made only for that portion of such taxes as is due for the part of such tax year which falls within the period of Federal control.

"At such periods as the President may direct, the books shall be closed and the balance of revenues over disbursements shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revolving fund created by this act. If such revenues are insufficient to meet such disbursements, the deficit shall be paid out of such revolving fund in such manner as the President may direct.

"SEC. 13. That all pending cases in the courts of the United States affecting railroads or other transportation systems brought under the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, including the commodities clause, so called, or under the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, approved July 2, 1890, and amendments thereto, shall proceed to final determination as soon as may be, as if the United States had not assumed control of transportation systems; but in any such case the court having jurisdiction may, upon the application of the United States, stay execution of final judgment or decree until such time as it shall deem proper.

"SEC. 14. That the Federal control of railroads and transportation systems herein and heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, which shall not exceed one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace: Provided, however, That the President may, prior to July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation, further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable; and the President may at any time during the period of Federal control agree with the owners thereof to relinquish all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation. The President may relinquish all railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control at any time he shall deem such action needful or desirable. No right to compensation shall accrue to such owners from and after the date of relinquishment for the property so relinquished.

"SEC. 15. That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect the existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

"SEC. 16. That this act is expressly declared to be emergency legislation enacted to meet conditions growing out of war; and nothing herein is to be construed as expressing or prejudicing the future policy of the Federal Government concerning the ownership, control, or regulation of carriers or the method or basis of the capitalization thereof."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the conference report:

The conferees adopted the amendment of the House as the basis of their conference.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 1 of the House amendment with an amendment striking out so much of the House amendment as provided an increase of the annual sum payable as compensation to the carriers upon the cost of any additions or betterments, less retirements, or road extensions made during the six months ended December 31, 1917, and with further slight amendments in the wording of the House amendment.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 2 of the House amendment with an amendment providing that the compensation that might be agreed upon as provided in said section should cover the time consumed in arriving at an agreement.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 3 of the House amendment in full with an amendment added to the end of the section providing that proceedings in the Court of Claims under the section should be given precedence and expedited in every practicable way.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 4 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 5 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 6 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same with an amendment striking out the third paragraph of said section and substituting therefor practically the same provision differently worded, as appears in the conference report.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 7 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 8 of the House amendment with an amendment striking out all of the second paragraph.

Section 9 of the House amendment, which made provisions regarding the operation of short-line railroads that were not taken over, was stricken from the bill because of the adoption by the House of the Senate provision requiring all lines referred to in said section of the House amendment to be taken over.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 10 of the House amendment. Said section 10 in the House amendment, by reason of striking out section 9, is numbered in the conference agreement as section 9.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 11 of the House amendment down to and including the words "but no process, mesne or final, shall be levied against any property under such Federal control," with an amendment to the first portion of said paragraph wherein it provides that "carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control," as follows: After the word "control" insert the words "or with any order of the President." Also an amendment striking out all the remainder of said first paragraph after the words "such Federal control," as above set out. Also with a further amendment striking out the remainder of the section of the House amendment and substituting in lieu of same the provisions of the conference report, the effect of which is to give paramount and final power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine finally as to the reasonableness and justness of any rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices that may be initiated by the President during the period of Federal control, with authority to make such findings and orders as the commission may think right and proper with regard thereto.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 12 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same in substance and effect.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 13 of the House amendment with an amendment striking out all of the second paragraph, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 14 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 15 of the House amendment with an amendment providing that the period of Federal control shall not continue longer than one year and nine months, next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace, which was agreed to by the House.

The conferees agreed to strike out section 16 of the House amendment and substituted therefor a new section as set out in section 15 of the conference report. The substitute section provides that this act shall not be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the States in relation to the lawful police regulations of the States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transportation of troops, war materials, Government supplies, or the issue of stocks and bonds.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to section 17 of the House amendment, and agreed to the same.

T. W. SIMS,
FRANK E. DOREMUS,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the gentlemen of the House that the only change that was made by the conferees in their last report was to strike out all limitation of the taxing powers of the States, put in in the form of a proviso by the conferees, so that that portion of the bill referring to the taxing laws and powers of the States and subdivisions thereof is exactly as it was when it passed the House.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What section of the bill is it?

Mr. HAMLIN. It is section 16.

Mr. SIMS. It is section 15 of the conference report. We substituted nothing in lieu of it. In other words, on the question of State taxation the conference report is exactly like the bill as it passed the House. There is no other change. A point of order was made in the Senate with reference to that provision and it went out.

Now, the conference report which I ask to have adopted is in all other respects word for word exactly like the former conference report and statement which were filed and put in the RECORD a number of days ago.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. MONTAGUE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] first, a member of the committee.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, to say that the language is the identical language of the bill passed by the House?

Mr. SIMS. There might be a change of a word here and there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the gentleman is correct in that statement. I now ask the gentleman the further question: Is it not the identical language of the bill as passed by the Senate? Did not the House and Senate concur in the exact language?

Mr. SIMS. In the respective bills, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. While the House generally understands that there is not much change in this second conference report from that which was first submitted, nevertheless I think the House is interested in having an explanation given as to wherein the conference report as agreed to differs in substantial particulars from the bill as it passed the House. The statement as read to the House is not illuminating in that particular.

Mr. SIMS. If it is read in connection with the bill. Now, I would like to know of the gentleman what particular section he has in mind?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am particularly interested in a matter that will be discussed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. I will yield to him to make that inquiry.

Mr. TOWNER. In section 10, as it is now numbered, I notice that the conferees have reinserted the language which allows the President merely by order to set aside all of the laws and regulations made with reference to the liabilities of carriers. I would like to ask the gentleman why the House conferees agreed to that?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman refers to the order of the President?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. That provision was in the Senate bill.

Mr. TOWNER. That was in the Senate bill, you say.

Mr. SIMS. Yes. That is my recollection.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman will remember that while in the House by a very large majority that language was stricken out. I think there were practically no opposition votes against it.

Mr. SIMS. To be exactly accurate, that language was in the Senate bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And the conferees of the House, I will say, stood out for the House provision, and the Senate conferees stood like a stone wall against it. The section the gentleman refers to has reference to the criminal penalties, does it not?

Mr. TOWNER. It refers to all the laws regarding carriers.

Mr. SIMS. But it comes in connection with the criminal provisions of the bill, does it not?

Mr. TOWNER. It allows the President, by a simple order, to set aside all of the laws on the statute books for the protection of the people against the carriers, whether those laws be civil or criminal.

Mr. SIMS. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. TOWNER. Why so?

Mr. SIMS. The law provides what the President can do, and this provision is simply that the same penalties may apply to a violation of the order of the President, made in pursuance of the act, that would apply against a violation of the provisions of the act itself, because a great deal of this act must be executed by orders of the President. It can not be done in any other way.

Mr. TOWNER. Here is the language that will be the law:

That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control—

But then comes this further provision—or with any order of the President.

That is, any law now in existence regarding Federal control of railroads, civil or criminal, may be set aside by order of the President.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, if the order of the President violated the provisions of this act or was not authorized by it, it would be void, because he would have no authority to make it; and, of course, any order made by him must be made in accordance with and in pursuance of the authority given him by the act of August, 1916, or by this act, and any order made outside of the authority conferred by those acts would be absolutely void.

Mr. TOWNER. I am very sorry that the gentleman has yielded to such sophistry as must have been presented by the Senate conferees, and by which the gentleman must have been deluded.

Mr. SIMS. This matter was fully discussed in the Senate.

Mr. TOWNER. I know it was discussed there, and it was discussed here; and if there is any meaning in the English language, it means that the President may by order set aside any provisions at all relating to common carriers. It says that we may repeal the laws regarding common carriers by act of Congress. It says that if we do repeal them by this act they are set aside, and it says that they may be set aside by order of the President. It occurs to me that with such a practically unanimous determination of the House that that provision ought to be eliminated, it is a serious disregard of the wishes of the House for the conferees to have allowed that language to be retained in the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I want to say that the House conferees were absolutely powerless to get an agreement on that particular provision, as the Senate conferees regard it as very vital.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the language used to which the gentleman from Iowa refers is rather unfortunate. It is regrettable that there were not added to that paragraph words to indicate that the orders of the President referred to were orders under this act and under the jurisdiction granted him. But I can not agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], and I hope no one anywhere will take that view, that this language authorizes the issuance of orders by the President outside of the authority which we have granted him in the law under which he took over the railroads and under this act.

Mr. SIMS. I understand it just as the gentleman does.

Mr. MONDELL. The language here used is frequently used in the same way with reference to the issuance of orders and regulations. It can not in any instance mean to convey authority beyond the authority specifically granted in the legislation itself, and any order issued must be an order under the authority granted and in conformity with the authority granted.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. SIMS. I yield for a question. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, which makes his observation not pertinent; the provision is—

That carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers—

That is, they shall be subject to the general laws as affecting the general laws of the country, as affecting provisions that are either civil or criminal in their nature—

whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law—

That is all right. Now we come to the exception—

except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President.

That is, if any of the laws regarding common carriers regulating them in the interest of the people, punishing crime, are inconsistent with any order issued by the President, those laws go down.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Iowa is a good lawyer, and I have great respect for his opinions, but I hope no one will take the view he has just expressed. It seems to me it would be a most extraordinary interpretation of any statute to assume that Congress, by mere reference to an order, intended to grant additional authority. The reference is to an order issued under the authority and within the authority granted to the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no such language in the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman misinterprets it.

Mr. MONDELL. It would not be possible that anyone would interpret language of this sort as indicating that Congress, using a few words at the close of a sentence, intended to wipe out all the statutes.

Mr. TOWNER. That is what the House thought. They did not think it was reasonable that it should be so, and therefore they struck out that provision. If we want to repeal a law, let us do it as laws ought to be repealed, by a repealing statute. If we do not want a law to remain in operation, let us say so by repealing it and taking it off the statute books; but we should not say that laws may be repealed by a mere order of the President.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not conceive that anyone would ever interpret the language used as granting any such authority. I do admit the language used is not as clear and definite as it should be, but it can not be properly held as an additional grant of power.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When this matter was before the House, the House as a whole, without division of sentiment, was practically unanimous in approving the interpretation now placed upon it by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. In my judgment, he is entirely right. If the gentleman will permit me, I can not agree with him in his interpretation. This says "all laws and liabilities of common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law."

Any one of these may be set aside by order of the President and the common carrier is subject to certain liabilities. It owes certain duties in the matter of carrying freight, in the matter of carrying passengers, answering liabilities for injuries and damages sustained to freight and passengers. The President might set aside any or all of these laws simply by an order if this was to stand.

Mr. MONDELL. If Congress had had any such intent as that, it would have simply provided that the roads shall be operated as the President might order. In that view of the matter we have used a lot of language to no purpose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Congress did have the idea that it would be interpreted as the gentleman from Iowa says, and therefore the House struck it out, and it ought to remain out.

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman that the language as used is not altogether satisfactory.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Very unfortunate.

Mr. MONDELL. But somewhat similar language has been frequently used in reference to orders and regulations, and I do not know of a case where it has been assumed that language of that sort was intended to grant authority or power beyond that conferred by the statute itself. It contemplates an order within the authorization of the President's statute.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not able to say that Congress has not at some time——

Mr. MONDELL. I regret that anyone anywhere should suggest a different interpretation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not able to say that Congress has not foolishly placed in the hands of the President or the head of a department, sometimes, authority beyond that which Congress intended or ought to have placed. But when we know it, when our eyes are opened, when attention is drawn to it, we ought not to do it. In my opinion this is very serious.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to make this observation? Unfortunately, it is too late to cure that language and we ought not to misinterpret it. Congress did not intend by one short sentence to repeal all laws.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. NORTON. I am much interested in this question, and I would like to know the interpretation the gentleman from Tennessee places on the power granted to the President by section 10. Is it the opinion of the gentleman from Tennessee that an order by the President under this provision would set aside, or could set aside, any State or Federal law affecting railroads?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the law will apply to any order that the President issues in pursuance of this act or the act of 1916, but it would have to be made in pursuance of the authority vested in the President by that act or this bill after it becomes a law. This provision does not mean any more than if you followed it by the words "in pursuance of this act," which is wholly unnecessary. The uneasiness of the gentleman from Iowa, I think, is rather exaggerated. None of us would be in favor of saying to the President, "You may violate the Constitution of the United States and all State and Federal laws by making such orders as you please."

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman has given this question a great deal of study, probably is more familiar with the provisions of this conference report than anyone in the House. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Does he have in mind any Federal law or any particular State law pertaining to railroads the provision of which could not in effect be set aside by order of the President given under authority of section 10 of this act?

Mr. SIMS. The act itself provides——

Mr. NORTON. I wish the gentleman would do me the courtesy of answering my question directly. Does the gentleman have in mind any particular provision of a Federal law or any particular provision of any State law affecting railroads that could not be set aside by an order of the President under section 10 of this act? If the gentleman has any such State or Federal law in mind, will he state what it is?

Mr. SIMS. I have all such laws in mind, and it is plainly provided that the carriers under Federal control shall be subject to all laws, whether Federal or State.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman answer my question as to what Federal law or what State law could not be set aside?

Mr. SIMS. I am trying to answer the gentleman the best I can. I may not do it, but I am trying to do it. This reads:

except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or with any order of the President.

That means inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any order of the President made in pursuance of such acts or this act. Now, I can not conceive that the President would ever for one moment suppose that he could make an order to overturn a law of a State that was not inconsistent, unless it was a law that would cripple and make it impossible to operate a railroad under Federal control.

Mr. NORTON. To get back to my question, does the gentleman have in mind a single Federal law which could not in effect be set aside by an order of the President?

Mr. SIMS. No; I do not; and if I pointed out one the gentleman from North Dakota would probably disagree with me.

Mr. NORTON. Has the gentleman in mind any State law?

Mr. SIMS. No; I do not; because the language would be general and applies in a general way.

Mr. NORTON. I thought perhaps that the gentleman might have in mind some law that could not be set aside. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Iowa in his interpretation of this provision. I wanted, however, to have the expression of the gentleman from Tennessee as to what his interpretation was.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, without yielding the floor, I want to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS] on this point.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that section 11 and section 10 of this bill ought to be construed together. Section 10 provides that the President, in addition to the powers conferred by this act and the act of August 29, 1916, is hereby given such other and further powers necessary or appropriate to give effect to the powers herein and heretofore conferred.

Mr. NORTON. What section is that?

Mr. DOREMUS. Section 10 of the House bill.

Mr. NORTON. But that is not in the conference report.

Mr. DOREMUS. Yes; it is.

Mr. WINGO. Section 9 of the conference report.

Mr. DOREMUS. The House freely conferred upon the President all of the power that is given in section 10. Section 11, concerning which this controversy has arisen—section 10 of the conference report—provides that carriers while under Federal control shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or with any order of the President. The point I make is this: The House in the preceding section freely conferred upon the President all powers necessary to give effect to this act, and the two sections are in entire harmony with each other.

Mr. NORTON. Let me ask the gentleman the same question that I asked the gentleman from Tennessee. Does the gentleman have in mind any particular provision of Federal law that could not be set aside?

Mr. DOREMUS. None whatever.

Mr. NORTON. Then the gentleman concurs with the interpretation given by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. DOREMUS. I also call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he must construe this section in connection with all of the other provisions of the act.

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. DOREMUS. Nobody would contend in any court that we are conferring upon the President powers not authorized in the act itself.

Mr. NORTON. No; no one would maintain differently from that.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he has pointed out so far—I probably may have missed it, as I have not been in the Chamber all of the time—the difference between the Senate and the House bills and this report in so far as it refers to the short-line railroads?

Mr. SIMS. I have pointed it out in the statement, but I have not orally. I can state to the gentleman what it is. The Senate agreed to our provision exactly, and ours was put in by a motion to concur, made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], and therefore the two provisions are exactly alike; but the House retained section 9, which I explained very fully in the general debate and also under the five-minute rule, and section 9 was made for the purpose of protecting, as far as possible, the short-line roads that might not be taken over. It remained in the House bill, but some gentleman thought there was no use in retaining it, from the fact that we had taken over by the action of this House all roads to which the section applied. We took them all over, regardless of the judgment of the President as to whether they were needed or not. The Senate conferees contended that section 9 was utterly useless and simply incumbered the bill, and they would not agree to anything except to strike it out. A number of the Members of the House thought so, and a motion was proposed to strike it out while we were considering the bill. Section 9 was stricken out, but it only provided for the operation of the short lines not taken over.

Mr. DYER. That is not in the conference report?

Mr. SIMS. No; section 9 of the House bill was stricken out bodily because the Senate conferees held that it was not necessary after the House and the Senate had taken over the short lines by a provision in both bills.

Mr. DYER. Therefore the short lines are all taken over?

Mr. SIMS. Every one of them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Without going into details as to the transposition of language and paragraphs, I would like to know whether the bill as now reported preserves the right of the President to initiate rates?

Mr. SIMS. Absolutely, and with the further provision that they can not be suspended until finally determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the explanation in the statement of the managers of section 15, page 11. That explanation is as follows:

> The substitute section also provides that this act shall not be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the States in relation to the lawful police regulations of the States—

And so forth, leaving out the word "taxation," which appears in the section. Was that intended?

Mr. SIMS. The act plainly exempts the States from any kind of control with reference to taxation. The other language that the gentleman refers to simply has reference to the police powers of the States.

Mr. OSBORNE. I wanted to know whether the States were left their powers of taxation.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; exactly as it was in the House. There is no attempt to modify it because the Senate rejected the report on the point of order that it had something in it that was not in either bill.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. In section 11 of the bill as it passed the House there was a provision which permitted the Government to pay out of the compensation that is to accrue to the carriers any final judgments that may have been outstanding at the same time the Federal Government took control, but I find in the conference report that the conferees have rejected that provision, and I should like to know what were the reasons for leaving that provision out.

Mr. SIMS. I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that the House conferees had no objection to the amendment he refers to.

Mr. WINGO. What objection did the Senate have?

Mr. SIMS. None whatever to what followed in the next page and on down to and including the paragraph referring to operating accounts and businesses of the carriers. But it was insisted on the part of the conferees of the Senate that this language was not necessary to secure the rights of any person who might be interested in a judgment——

Mr. WINGO. Judgment creditor.

Mr. SIMS. Judgment creditor or whether he was a judgment creditor or not. The rest of that part of the bill had reference to what is called overlapping accounts, which last provision of the bill was put in by an amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey on account of the amendment to which the gentleman refers to having been adopted. Now, as to the gentleman's amendment and all after referring to and including liabilities of the railroads that arose before the Government had taken them over, they contended that if they undertook to force the Director General to take this into consideration as to all these liabilities, overlapping accounts, judgments that might be obtained for anything whatever prior to the taking over, that it would involve a great deal of trouble in keeping accounts of the Government during the railroad control and that it was not necessary to secure the payment of the debts, because if the railroads had money coming to them in the way of just compensation, that creditors can still proceed to enforce collection out of what may be coming to the railroads, and consequently such creditors did not run the risk of losing their debts on this account; that in so far as the railroad with which there was a contract as to compensation, that contract might provide for anything of that sort; that the railroads had over $800,000,000 cash when taken over, out of which the railroads no doubt could and would pay their debts. This question of overlapping accounts might be of tremendous volume and cause a great deal of expense and trouble in the way of detail in trying to protect the Government against the payment of something that ought not to be paid or which the railroad companies litigate. That was, in substance, what was stated as why it was not necessary to secure these debts, and therefore they would not agree to that part of the House bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, without losing the floor, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, there are two questions under discussion here. The first is this, whether or not the President can make an order which does away with common law, does away with statute law—Federal law and the State law. Now, I can readily understand why the gentleman from Iowa is agitated about this question. It is for this reason: The State, of course, is not liable to the citizen except as that liability is created by statute; and so, if we can confine ourselves to the first sentence of that section, it might well create distrust; it might well arouse our suspicions. But we are not confined to the first sentence. The first sentence is followed by a second one, and the question that is under discussion here is whether or not a man who has a claim against a railroad, a just claim, a claim which he as a poor man finds it necessary to enforce, a claim which he ought to enforce, and which to protect his solvency he must enforce, can do so. And I say that under this statute there is no doubt about the fact that he can do it.

We had this same discussion when the bill was in committee, and I took the same position then that I do here; but I was willing to waive it, because I wanted to be sure as to the language itself. What is the language? Why, a man can bring any suit to enforce his demand, whatever that demand may be.

Now, take the two sentences together. If you can bring any suit to enforce any claim, no matter what your claim may be, then surely the President can not make some order which will take away that right. A primary rule of construction is this, that you shall not give life and effect and validity to simply a part of an act. You shall give that to all of the act. You shall construe the act as a whole, giving it all vitality and life and effect; and when you do that you take into consideration both the sentences, and you give the President the right to make an order, but at the same time you give the citizen a right to bring any suit that he has at law or in equity.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. How can the citizen execute his judgment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am coming to that. I pass now from that question to the second question. Is the citizen protected, if he has a judgment, in collecting it? That is the question raised by the gentleman. Now, it is not my understanding that at any time the citizen is ever given a right to levy an execution against a sovereign State, and that is what the gentleman asks.

Why, take the State of New York, for example. We have just spent $150,000,000 on the construction of a canal. We have spent a very large amount of money in condemning land. Now, when land is condemned and a man obtains his award, does he issue an execution against the State of New York? Of course not. It would be a monstrosity. The State, as a privilege, permits him to come in and establish his right, and then it takes its way of paying your claim. That is always so. It should be so. It is simply orderly procedure.

You say, "We are not permitted to levy an execution." The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] well asks, "Would you, in time of war, in the stress of war, when railroads are under the control of the Government because it needs them to wage the war, tie up the rolling stock and stop the operations of the carriers in order to collect a judgment?" Of course not. No one dreams of such a process. But you have your judgment. You simply can not levy an execution, but that does not prevent your collecting your judgment. No. The gentleman from Arkansas

[Mr. WINGO] knows that as a legal proposition you could not levy upon the railroad funds in the Government's hands. Why? What is the familiar rule of attachment about money?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has the time.

Mr. SIMS. I regret it exceedingly, but I can not yield further without surrendering the floor. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I want to save all the time I can to the gentleman who has been so kind to me, and I will try to conclude in three minutes.

The judgment question was all mixed up in the amendments passed by the House, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], I think, does not understand his own amendment in one respect. He orders all judgments paid out of the moneys that go to the railroads. Some of the judgments are mere operating judgments, whether they are recovered before or after the railroads went into Federal control. A judgment, we will say, got by a man who was hurt by an accident, must be paid out of operating expenses, and the United States will pay it out of operating expenses, and when the United States gives up the roads, the railroads themselves will pay any such judgment obtained for an accident while the roads were under Federal control, and it will not be paid by the United States. It must be so paid in the ordinary course of overlapping and deferred accounts for operating expenses.

Now, with reference to the question of an order of the President, the phrase is intended obviously to provide only for such orders as he may make under this act, because by this law he has full control and is not subject to the laws against pooling, and is able to make special orders to send special goods forward. The act gives him power to make various special orders. When we come afterwards in the act to say that he shall be subject to all of the laws of the United States, except when inconsistent with the purposes of this act or with any order of the President, it means such order as he is allowed to give. That is section 10. I want to get the words. They are: "Inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control or any order of the President." This would cover an order under this act to prefer railroad munitions.

I shall support the conference report. That is all I care to say.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 11 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], a member of the committee.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SIMS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], a member of the committee, without yielding the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will withdraw that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan withdraws it. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, just a few words with reference to the conference report and to point out how it differs from the Senate and House bills.

The first radical change made by the conferees was that we struck out the term "standard return" and substituted in lieu thereof the words "just compensation." These words are now used throughout the bill. In the Senate bill there was no provision allowing an increase of compensation to the carriers for investments made on additions, improvements, and road extensions for the last six months of the year 1917. We had such a provision in the House bill. It was stricken out in conference. The reason why it was stricken out was that the proclamation of the President confined the just compensation to the three-year period ending June 30, 1917, and for the further reason that there was a feeling on the part of the conferees that the compensation provided in the bill for the three years ending June 30, 1917, was generous and ample.

Another change was recommended by the conferees in regard to the rate-fixing power. In the House provision we gave the initiation of rates to the President, with right of suspension. We gave to the orders and findings of the commission merely prima facie evidence that they were correct. In other words, the House bill did not give finality to the orders or findings of the commission. The Senate bill gave such finality. The conference report gives finality to the orders and findings of the commission, but charges the commission with the duty of taking into consideration the necessity of the carriers for increased revenues in order to meet the costs of Federal control. The commission is further to take into consideration, in determining the rates, the fact that the railroads of the United States are now under a unified and coordinated Federal control. The contention of this side of the House for the finality of orders and findings of the commission is sustained in the conference report.

With reference to the provision that was referred to here as to "any order of the President," I think that has been explained. We must interpret those words in the light of the section in which the words appear; and if so interpreted they will not give to the President this broad and unlimited power to repeal or suspend any statute of the United States or any statute of a State.

With reference to section 15, relating to the taxing power, we have practically gotten back to the House provision. There was a clause inserted in conference, which went out on a point of order, fixing the ratio of taxation of railroad property to other property in the States. That was held to have been beyond the power of the conferees, and under the Senate rules it went out. The House conferees assented to its going out. It is not contained in the House bill or in the conference report.

I believe that the conference report should be sustained. There is every need of prompt action, for until this measure is finally passed it will be impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury to perfect his plans in reference to the sale of liberty bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. I see the conferees struck out section 9, which is, in my opinion, the real protection to the short-line railroads, or the railroads not taken over under the original bill or taken over under the amended bill and relinquished. Did the House conferees insist on keeping that section?

Mr. SIMS. I insisted on that section remaining in the bill for the reason that I gave a few minutes ago, that if any of the short-line railroads that we will take over if this bill passes should be relinquished, then this section would be of benefit to them; but the conferees insisted that under the bill, by both the Senate and House provisions having taken over all of the railroads, there are none to which this section would apply unless it was entirely reconstructed. So they would not agree to it, and it went out in that way. The Senate conferees contended, and Members of the House not on the conference committee contended, that by the House agreeing to the Senate amendment we took over all the railroads, and that now they are all under Government control, and therefore there is no use in making provision for a railroad that we do not know will ever be relinquished. That is the substance of the contention made.

Mr. KITCHIN. The thought in my mind was this, that under the provisions of the bill, on or before July 1, 1918, the control of any railroad or all of the railroads may be relinquished by the President. If so, the short lines, with section 9 stricken out, will have no protection. Now, if the President or the Director General, or both of them, were really opposed to the taking over of the short-line railroads as being unnecessary for the prosecution of the war, and it has been stated that they were, suppose they are still of that opinion and before July 1, 1918, they should relinquish them——

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The time is up.

Mr. SIMS. I move the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me have just one minute. I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Five.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. I do not understand this will affect my motion for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to make any motion. The Chair will make it.

Mr. KITCHIN. As I started to ask, if the President and the Director General and their advisers were opposed to the taking over of the short lines as being unnecessary for the prosecution of the war, and they are still of that opinion, and will remain of that opinion, and under the provisions of the bill will on or before July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all of them, then what protection in this bill as reported by the conferees have the short-line railroads? None at all, have they?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], more forcibly than I could do it, has made the argument that I made to the conferees, and I suggest that it is not probable that there will be any relinquishment of these after Congress has put them in the hands of the President, without his request or suggestion.

Mr. KITCHIN. I just do not want the short-line railroads to get a gold brick by this provision in the conference report.

Mr. SIMS. After Congress has, by express legislative action, placed these short-line roads in the power and possession of the President, that he will not relinquish control without by proper regulation provide the same character and kind of protection and relief as was provided in section 9 of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 8.

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. Those in favor of agreeing to the conference report will answer yea, those opposed will answer nay. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 306, nays 26, answered "present" 3, not voting 93, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were reopened.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. RIORDAN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the swearing in as Members of the House the four Members elected at the recent special election in New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The following Members elect appeared at the bar of the House and the Speaker administered to them the oath of office prescribed by law:

WILLIAM E. CLEARY, eighth district of New York; JOHN J. DELANEY, seventh district of New York; JEROME F. DONOVAN, twenty-first district of New York; and ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, twenty-second district of New York.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee just prior to the adjournment, upon which it was agreed that there should be one hour's debate, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, before stating as briefly as I can the purpose of the amendment, it is proper that this should be said to the Committee of the Whole. The provision that is here offered is a provision coming from the Committee on Appropriations, but it is the result of a consideration and a study by Members other than those belonging to that committee.

It was apparent early in the history of the session, from bills introduced and from agitation in the newspapers and otherwise, that there would be legislation this year, as there had been legislation last year, looking to increase in compensation of Federal employees. It was desired to avoid some of the confusion and some of the delay and trouble that grew out of the situation last year by having the House vote various proposals, not always the same, on different appropriation bills, as they came before the Congress. And it was suggested informally that the various appropriation committees get together and consider this subject. As the result of informal conference had between the chairmen and the ranking minority members of the various appropriation committees, as well as the Committee on Appropriations, this proposition is presented to the House at this time.

Now, the proposition itself is in the form of a flat increase for all the different employees, other than postal employees, rather than by naming percentages for the various classifications, as was done last year. The provision last year provided for 5 and 10 per cent increases. The percentage this year is to be ascertained by taking the salary of the person and the amount that is given, $120 in each instance.

So that, starting with salaries of $480, you have a percentage increase of 25 per cent, and that runs on down from that amount to $2,000, where the percentage increase would be 6 per cent. In other words, for a man drawing $540 the percentage increase is 22 per cent, for $600 it is 20 per cent, for $640 it is 18 per cent, for $720 it is 17 per cent, for $840 it is 14 per cent, for $900 it is 13 per cent, for $1,000 it is 12 per cent, for $1,200 it is 10 per cent, for $1,400 it is 9 per cent, for $1,600 it is 8 per cent, for $1,800 it is 7 per cent, and for $2,000 it is 6 per cent. That makes a percentage that runs on a scale that is constantly decreasing as the salary goes up, and without the saw-tooth arrangement you would get by classifying by percentages people within certain groups, and is not only a more scientific method but it is a method that makes the accounting and the work of the pay officers of the Government very much simpler. There was another reason for it which seemed to the Members dealing with the matter somewhat basic, and that was the idea that the added cost of living, which has been one of the basic reasons for this increase, applied to all people without regard to their salaries; that there are certain expenses in life that are constant to the poor man and the rich man. They must all have a certain amount of food, a certain amount of clothing, a certain amount of protection in the way of housing. The need of the poor man is as great, and in many instances greater than the rich man, because he has less leeway than in the case of employees of larger salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to grant me three minutes more.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. One hundred and twenty dollars was taken as representing a fair increase, all things considered. There are two cases that are different from those presented by the employees generally. They are cases of men or women who have received large increases of salary recently and those who have come into the Government recently, and I may say in passing that notwithstanding the repeated assertion in the press to the effect that salaries are on the same basis as they were back in 1857 or some other remote period, the facts show that there have been increases of salary ranging from 25 per cent to 100 per cent of the personnel in the various departments within the last year or so, and the very great expansion of the Government has resulted in giving to the employees of the Government very much more rapid advance and promotion than has ever been known before. We have provided that in cases where people have had a promotion within either the present fiscal year or shall have in the next fiscal year of over $200 they shall be allowed this $120 additional only when there is a certification made by the head of the establishment or the department in which they work of the reasons that justify such an increase, the idea being that we could not arbitrarily exclude such people because there might be some instances in which they ought to receive additional sums, and yet there ought to be something shown affirmatively to avoid the presumption that people who had received over $200 increase did not need this addition.

As to the new employees the same proposition applies, because, presumably, they came with a knowledge of conditions as they exist, with the cost of living, and so forth, and it is a well-known fact that in regard to many of the places that have been created in lump-sum appropriations the initial employment has been at rates very much higher than formerly existed and which did take into contemplation the increased cost of living. We have, in addition to that, exempted from the operation of this law the same classes that were exempted under the operation of the law passed heretofore. We excluded the Panama Canal and the Alaskan Railway employees, because the salaries and compensation of such employees have been arranged with regard to the peculiar conditions surrounding those people—the cost of living in those respective places—and they did not present, therefore, the situation that is presented by employees here and in the country at large. We excluded those who give only a part of their time to the Government for a perfectly obvious reason, with the exception of the charwomen, whom we permitted to have the full benefit of the increase. We also excluded those who get compensation from other sources than the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HELM. What does the total increase amount to?

Mr. SHERLEY. Assuming that everybody that is eligible for the increase under the terms of the law would get it, the increase would amount to approximately $26,600,000, and would affect about 240,300 people. Different proposals have been made. The proposal contained in the Keating bill would have made an expenditure to this Government of considerably more than twice that sum. Proposals that have been made for greater increases than the $120 would have carried additional sums. If gentlemen will keep in mind, in rough figures, 240,000 people as affected, they can easily determine by a very simple mathematical calculation what any increase or decrease in this sum would amount to. It is perfectly easy for anybody on the floor here to cite any number of cases where this will not work a complete equity. No one lacking infinite wisdom could work out a proposal that would give absolute equity, but this is submitted in the belief that it is generous treatment of the employees. The fact was developed in the hearing, and it will come out in the course of the debate, that as to all low-paid employees of the Government, except the very low-paid ones, speaking by and large, they receive a greater sum than people engaged in similar employment do from private sources. That is particularly true of salaries of stenographers and clerks and people around $1,000, and $1,100, and $1,200, and $1,300; but when you get up to the higher-paid employees, then the Government pays very much less than outside people do.

In other words, there are men in the Government service working for $3,000, $4,000, and $5,000 who in private employment would receive much greater sums; but, with the exception of a few cases, speaking of most of the employees embraced in this classification, they are now receiving sums in excess of what are being paid by private institutions for similar work. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] in opposition to the proposal.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] said that the basic reason for this increase in salary to the Federal employees was founded upon increases in price of commodities and increases in the cost of living. I am reading from a table published by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 176 of the hearings, and I want to call attention to the way in which this committee figured the increase in living costs in making the allowance of $120 a year and then contend they are basing it on the increased cost of commodities. We find on page 176 relative retail prices of the principal articles of food in the United States. Average prices for 1913, 100. These prices are from the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics. I am going to take the basis of 100, and I am going to show you how inconsistent the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky is that they are basing these increases upon the increased prices, and especially from 1913. In 1913 sirloin steak, at the basis of 100, has increased in December, 1917, to 126, an increase of 26 per cent. Round steak has increased in price from 100 to 134, an increase of 34 per cent; rib roast has increased in price from 100 to 128, an increase of 28 per cent; bacon has increased in price from 100 to 181, an increase of 81 per cent; ham has increased in price from 100 to 161, an increase of 61 per cent; lard has increased in price from 100 to 211, an increase of 111 per cent; hens have increased in price from 100 to 143, an increase of 43 per cent; eggs have increased in price from 100 to 184, an increase of 84 per cent; butter has increased in price from 100 to 142, an increase of 42 per cent; flour has increased in price from 100 to 205, an increase of 105 per cent; corn meal has increased in price from 100 to 235, an increase of 135 per cent; potatoes have increased in price from 100 to 178, an increase of 78 per cent; sugar, from 100 to 172, an increase of 72 per cent; all articles combined, according to this report, an average of 157, or 57 per cent, and the greatest increase is upon the commodities that the lower-paid employees must necessarily have to exist, not alone live.

I want to show you that they are allowing some of these low-paid employees, not the people who are receiving the higher salaries, but I want to show you what they are allowing the employees who receive less than $1,200 per year to meet the increase in the price of commodities during the last year. They are increasing the salary of the $480 a year employee from 10 to 25 per cent, or from $4 per month to $10 per month; they are increasing the salary of the $540 employee from 10 to 22 per cent, or from $4.50 to $10 per month; they are increasing the salary of the $600 employee from 10 to 20 per cent, or from $5 to $10 per month; they are increasing the salary of the $660 a year employee from 10 to 18 per cent, or from $5.50 to $10 per month; they are increasing the salary of the $720 employee from 10 to 17 per cent, or from $6 to $10 per month; they are increasing the salary of the $840 a year employee from 10 to 14 per cent, or from $7 to $10 per month; they are increasing the salary of the men and women who get $75 a month 3 per cent in the last year; a raise of $2.50 per month. They are increasing the salary of those who get $1,000 a year 2 per cent in the last year, or $1.66 per month. The employee who receives an annual salary of $1,100 per year will get an increase of $10 per year or 83⅓ cents per month. I leave it to you, to your own good judgment, to your own experience here in the District of Columbia and elsewhere if that is a square deal to the men and women in the Government employ receiving $1,000 or less.

Mr. DYER. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. NOLAN. I understand the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] is going to offer an amendment to make it $180 a year, but I do not think that is fair for the men and women in the Government service getting $1,000 a year or less. I think they should have a fixed basis of not less than $3 a day. [Applause.] I do not think that is a living wage under present conditions. I think we ought to be fair, and I think it is not fair to put men receiving $1,000 and less on the same basis as a $2,000 a year man. They have got to pay the same prices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere that the $2,000 man has got to pay. It is not square; there is not an industrial institution in this country or corporation or any business institution that could get away with that and have their help satisfied. I do not think you are going to benefit by it. It is not fair and square to those men getting $1,000 a year and less to say the cost of living has increased from 10 to 12 per cent since a year ago. If that is the way the Government of the United States is going to treat its employees you can not expect to have cooperation, you can not expect to have a patriotic feeling among them, you can not have them to respect their employer, and if you can not have respect from them what in God Almighty's world can you expect to have from them? Gentlemen of the committee, you have not undertaken this problem right; you have held executive meetings when examining witnesses who favored the bill presented by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Just one minute.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield the gentleman one minute additional.

Mr. NOLAN. You have not given the same sort of hearings before your Committee on Appropriations that every other committee of the House gives questions of this kind. You brought the employees and their representatives in and brought them in before your subcommittee one at a time. You did not have the hearings printed or did not have them ready for distribution until last night—at least, some of us could not get them—and you did not bring up this proposition until late yesterday afternoon, when the understanding was it was going through last night. Why, why did you do this? Why did not you give this proposition, a proposition in reference to the payment of salaries and wages for the employees—why did not you give them the same free and open opportunity for the presentation of their case which you give to everybody else?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman, if he will yield——

Mr. NOLAN. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say that we gave them all the time they wanted. We asked them if they wanted additional time, and they said no.

Mr. NOLAN. Did you not take them into the committee room one by one? And why was not this testimony published?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We asked the heads of these different federations if they wanted more time, and they said no, and they thanked us.

Mr. NOLAN. You did not give the newspapers an opportunity to find out what they said. You did not give these people the benefit of public hearings, so that their case might be presented to the public.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the newspapers published very full statements.

Mr. NOLAN. I do not think so. And we were not able to get hold of this testimony until this morning.

I hope the amendment that will be offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING], raising the amount from $120 per year to $180 per year, will prevail. [Applause.] I insert a little poem by a Government clerk that I think fairly expresses the feeling of the average low-salaried Government employee:

THE GOVERNMENT CLERK.

How dear to my heart are the scenes of the office,
When mountains of labor I mournfully view;
The papers and files and reports that are endless,
And all the punk stuff that I have to wade through,
The folks back home think I'm rolling in velvet;
How little they know of conditions that are;
In the job of the clerk there is nothing to covet,
However rose-colored when viewed from afar.
The old stuffy office, the small crowded office,
The place where you bid your ambitions good-by.

I long for the fields and the woods and the streamlets,
And pensively heave a deep, cavernous sigh
As I think of the farmer boys counting their greenicts,
While I mournfully watch the promotions go by.
I long for the lawn with big trees growing on it,
A garden with flowers and eatables green:
Instead I've a hole in the wall near the sidewalk,
With a sad little yard that's ashamed to be seen.
The old gloomy office, the life-tenure office,
It can not compare with a job back at home.

Oh! these flat-chested houses, each just like the other,
All along the same street just as far as you see;
You have to stay sober to find your own cover,
And identify yours by the fit of the key.
I joyfully welcome the coming of pay day,
When the ghost walks around with the scads and the bones;
But the butcher, the baker, the loan shark, and faker
Got the very last sou—not a cent is my own.
The old civil service, the ossified service,
With pay roll secure, but so hopelessly small.

I would like an auto, at least a tin flivver,
To ride around town with companions so dear;
But alas for the lot of the Government worker,
Only those having "pull" can afford such things here.
So I bend to my work with such grace as is in me,
And hope that a better day will quickly dawn,
When the long-promised pension roll really gets working,
And my name in big letters is written thereon.
The old stuffy office, the prison-cell office,
And graveyard of hope for the Government clerk.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, there is another viewpoint to this proposition. The soldier in France is offering his life; he has subscribed for liberty bonds; he is buying war stamps. The little children on the streets and in the homes are buying and peddling war stamps, the passage of this amendment means that the proceeds of their efforts are to be devoted not to the prosecution of the war but to the increase of salaries of these Government clerks around Washington, who are enjoying the best advantages of any employees in the United States. [Applause.] They have the best of conveniences, the most sanitary and comfortable offices to work in, with electric lights, hot and cold water, electric fans in the summer and well heated in the winter. I maintain that the civil employee of this Government should occupy the status of a volunteer, not to get the utmost dollar out of the Government, but to do his might for it while his Nation is in peril, and it ill becomes the Government clerks, whether in Washington or elsewhere, who work only seven hours a day for 300 days of the year, and are receiving as much as $2,000 a year, to come in and ask that the proceeds of these little war-stamp sales and these liberty bonds be contributed to their further comfort, pleasure, and pastime.

I am against this wholesale lump-sum, indiscriminate increase in clerical salaries. Over yonder, over there, is the boy standing on the firing line fighting for the very life of this Republic, for home and fireside. You are proposing to send him back to raise the crops. You take from him a portion of his earnings to support a dependent mother; you take from him a portion of his salary to buy Liberty bonds; you send him back into the furrow to raise the crops to furnish the food for these employees who are now coming here and asking for $28,000,000 increase out of the war funds that ought to be sacred and dedicated to the prosecution of this war. [Applause.]

This is but an entering wedge. It is to be followed by like bills increasing other employees' salaries. In the name of God, will the American Congress always be cowards and not stand for the people who are paying these taxes? Think of them. There is an army of income-tax collectors going about over this country. The farmers and merchants are all denying themselves the necessities and comforts of life to prosecute this war, and here comes a raid on the Treasury to make money out of it to give to these people who ought to be willing to deny and stint themselves in order to aid in a more successful prosecution of this war; and I say to you that it ill becomes the Congress of the United States, in the first place, to invite, protect, and guarantee organized labor against punishment, as it did, by giving it the right to strike when the ships are moving with the boys on board, but requiring emergency repairs, and some set of men say, "No; we will not drive a rivet," and then have the Congress go ahead and say, "We will protect and guarantee you against punishment." Call back the boys from France.

You are sending 1,500,000 boys over there. Stand here and protect them. They are the ones to be protected and safeguarded at all hazards. Speak it to the world and let it be known that the American Congress is looking solely and exclusively to the welfare and success of the boys on the firing line and not to the joy-riding comforts of these clerks, who ought to be contributing to instead of attempting to gouge the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I favor some increases to the employees of the Government, and I think the recommendation of the committee of an increase of $120 a year to all those below $2,000 is little enough. I am surprised, however, at the recommendation of the committee in this respect, that the increase of $120 is to be applied to salaries as they were last year, before the percentage increases were made, by virtue of a resolution, I think, increasing salaries below $1,200 by 10 per cent and those below $1,800 by 5 per cent. If this amendment goes through as offered by the committee the addition of $120 will be made to the old salary and not to the salaries of clerks as they are now paid.

And I wish to offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman, and have it pending, to be considered at the proper time, striking out the proviso beginning on line 15. If my amendment should be adopted it would provide for the addition of $120 to the salaries that the clerks are now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to have the amendment read in his time?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Or at some future time. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Then, if I may be permitted, I will have the amendment read now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 1, line 15, strike out the proviso beginning on line 15 and ending on line 19.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, it will be unnecessary for the Chairman to admonish the galleries not to applaud during my speech.

The men who pay these taxes and who meet the burdens you propose to impose upon them are, none of them, in the galleries to-day. [Applause.] They are back on the farms, 6,500,000 of them, working not 7 hours a day, but working 12 hours a day [applause], and working more than that. They were receiving in 1909 an average compensation for themselves and their families of $600 per year. It is more than that now, but not to exceed $700 per year. And you propose to increase the compensation of Government clerks, who work seven hours a day and who receive $2,000 compensation. Their average compensation is $1,200 per annum. Very few of these clerks receive as little as the farmers of the country, assisted by their families, are able to earn.

We are taking from the farms of this land and from the factories of this land a million young men between the ages of 21 and 30—the age when they ought to be earning most and laying it up for the evening of life. We are taking them away from employment that was paying them more than $30 a month; thousands of them from employment that was paying them $100 a month, and you are compelling them to work all day long and all night long in muddy trenches in France for $30 a month, and to take all the risks incident to war. When they come back from France and commence to carry the burdens that you have laid upon them in their absence you will begin to hear from some of them. [Applause.]

There has been in France a readjustment of salaries paid to employees on the civil list, a recent readjustment, on account of the increase in the cost of living. Those civil-list employees in France who formerly received less than $694 a year are receiving $104 more. Those who were receiving less than $960 a year are receiving in France $69 more. But none of them can receive more than $965 per year. Those who receive less than $965 and who have two children under 16 years of age dependent on them are allowed $19 a year in addition to that amount for each child, and for each additional child they are allowed $38 a month. It is a scientific revision of salaries to meet the increase in the cost of living in France.

But our Government employees in this country to-day, without the increase proposed here, are receiving twice as much as they are receiving in France, and the cost of living ought to be as high in France as it is here, because we are supplying the people of France from our farms and our factories with the necessities of life. You propose to increase here the salaries of the highest-paid clerical employees in all the world. We are confronted with the certainty of a fixed annual budget after the war is over of $5,000,000,000. The pay roll of our Army and Navy is now $1,000,000,000 a year and is constantly increasing. The war is costing us in direct and indirect cost $40,000,000 a day; more than it is costing any other nation. This proposed increase is as unscientific as it is unpatriotic. No other nation has done quite so bad as we propose now to do in the matter of increases in salaries, except Russia under bolsheviki rule. In insurance companies in this country they start stenographers at $50 a month. At the present time you are starting them off here in Washington at $100 a month, and the same is true with reference to clerical employees of other grades, and you propose to increase their compensation still more. Under authority granted by Congress the President of the United States has just appointed a wage commission to examine into the question of wages paid by railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman two more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. RAINEY. And they have made some computations to start with. They applied to the railroads to furnish figures as to the amounts paid to clerical employees in five railroad centers. These employees perform about the same character of work as is performed by Government employees. The figures have been furnished for 1,042 employees, and a total of 915 out of that 1,042 receive less than $100 a month, and out of that number some 300 or 400 receive from $50 to $60 a month.

Only 4 employees of the entire 1,042 receive over $150 per month; 930 receive $100 and less per month—most of them work seven days in the week. The eight-hour day applies to less than half of them. One hundred and forty-six of them work 12 hours a day, seven days in the week, and receive between $50 and $60 per month. They are allowed no holidays. Government clerks are allowed 30 days' sick leave, 30 days' vacation, every holiday off, none of them work on Sundays, they only work 7½ hours a day; on Saturday they are allowed a half holiday and their pay goes on all the time whether they work or not. I submit that Government clerks are not badly treated.

These figures are significant as to railroad employees, for the reason that they are now Government employees whose salaries you can increase, and they will be here demanding increased compensation in the future; and when you set the mark by increasing the compensation of Government employees, as you propose to do, it will cost to bring the railroad employees of this country up to the standard of the wage set now for Government employees, according to these figures, $1,000,000,000 every year. You must treat all Government employees alike; this is the argument these railroad employees will advance. How are you going to meet it?

Now, where are you going to stop with this sort of proceeding? I realize that a man who speaks against any proposition that takes money out of the Treasury of the United States and divides it among any considerable number of people who vote is speaking against a proposition that is peculiarly popular here. Heretofore the people of this country did not realize that they were paying the expenses of the National Government. They did not think so, at least, until recently. There are direct taxes now and they will soon know what they pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. RAINEY. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am sorry I have not got it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Give the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I give the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. RAINEY. Not long ago a fight was made on this floor by a Member of Congress representing a certain organization of Government employees. The movement on the Treasury led by him won, and I am calling attention to it to show how grateful these Government employees will be to you who vote for this proposition—they, and their uncles, and their fathers, and the rest of them back in your district. When these taxes pile up mountain high others may begin to understand what you are doing. This Member of Congress went back to his district and the efforts of the Government employees he had aided at the expense of the taxpayers of this country were unavailing and did not reelect him. But they were grateful—these Government employees. They had a banquet over in New York, and they took up a collection all over the United States, and they brought it there on a silver platter, and tendered it to this ex-Member of Congress. In a spectacular way they piled upon this silver platter 35,000 silver dollars, and tendered him for his services in leading the movement against the Treasury the silver platter and the 35,000 silver dollars. In this way they demonstrated how they proposed to reward their friends. The newspapers reported that he declined to accept it. I do not know what became of the fund. I know it was not paid back to those people who contributed it. But this shows the feeling of gratitude these men have for the Members of this body who lead these raids on the Treasury.

And this is not the only raid to be made during this session. This will involve an outlay on the part of the Government of $28,000,000. It satisfies nobody; it is not enough, they say. They are all protesting against it to their Representatives. Government employees are now organizing in unions and are connecting up with the American Federation of Labor; they announce that they have back of them the American Federation of Labor, and together they march grandly on the Treasury of the United States, millions strong.

Now, there is not any reason for Government employees to be federated in unions, except to raid the Treasury. I believe in collective bargaining, but not when it is directed against the Treasury of the United States. May I remind you, gentlemen, that this is not your money you are so generously giving away. The Government is collecting some of it in taxes; it is borrowing most of it. You are not following any scientific or patriotic plan. You are following the precedents set by the Bolsheviki of unfortunate Russia. You are yielding to the socialism so rapidly developing in the country to-day. This raid on the Treasury involves $28,000,000. It is to be immediately followed by the Post Office reorganization bill, which means an additional salary increase of $50,000,000 per year. And that is to be followed by the minimum-wage bill, which means a still further salary increase of $60,000,000, and there will be other salary increases to come next year. We are sowing seed from which we may, as a Nation, reap a whirlwind of disaster, and the harvest may come in the not distant future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks leave to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, if this legislation affected any other people than those of the city of Washington, I doubt if there would be any criticism of so just and meritorious a proposition. We all know from experience in Washington the difficulty there is to support yourself and family upon $100 or $150 per month. Members of Congress know that themselves. Yet employees of the Government here in this great city, hundreds and thousands of them to be affected by this legislation, are drawing less than $100 a month, and we all know that it is impossible for them to live or exist decently upon that amount of money. So, Mr. Chairman, we ought to be willing to help and aid the right thing as recommended by this committee. The Government employees in Washington are men and women who are working faithfully and assiduously for the interests of this Government. Those who are within the draft age are going to France when they are called, just the same as those from every other community. Those who remain here have the privilege, because of their age, to do so. Yet they are working for the Government, pouring over the figures concerning this war, working to bring supplies to the troops, and things that are necessary to make this war a success, and they are working long enough and faithfully enough to receive consideration from the American Congress. Mr. Chairman, we ought to be able to do for them that which is a mere pittance of justice and right, and give to them this increase in their pay. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUFKIN].

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this amendment because I believe that it is the best compromise which we can get at the present time. While $120 a year will not allow the Government clerks to buy many liberty bonds to help win the war, the amendment is at all events a step in the right direction, and I hope that eventually it may lead to a permanent reclassification of the present inadequate salaries of Government employees, not only here in Washington but throughout the country.

I was hopeful that the committee might be able to bring in an amendment providing for more generous increases for the very lowest paid Government employees—the watchmen, janitors, and firemen in public buildings, for example—to say nothing of the lighthouse keepers and the employees of the Bureau of Fisheries located on stations in various parts of the country. How these men are able to live on their salaries, ranging from $500 to $720 a year, and bring up families, with the present high prices, is a mystery. I am not so familiar with the men connected with the Government buildings, beyond knowing that their pay is very low, but I am familiar with the struggles of the lighthouse keepers and the employees of fish hatcheries, as some of those men live in my neighborhood.

Take the latter case, for example: The laborers, firemen, and general helpers at these fish-hatchery stations receive the princely salary of $600 a year, or $50 a month. Think of it, gentlemen, $50 a month, with no allowances with which to provide food and clothing and house rent for a wife and children, to say nothing of the few luxuries which every family, no matter how humble, must have under present-day conditions. It is true that at some of the stations sleeping quarters are provided for these men. But that is all. The stations are usually isolated and the men must pay for their mess while on duty as well as providing for their families back in town, and all on $50 a month.

The fish culturist, who is in charge of the men, is more fortunate. He must be more or less of a scientific man. He must start in at the $600 grade, learn the ins and outs of producing millions of lobsters and cod fish from the minute spawn, spend months or even years on the car service of the bureau, and in the meantime improve his leisure by learning the science of fish culture from dry, technical books. But at last his goal is reached. If he successfully passes a rather difficult scientific examination he is rewarded by an appointment at some isolated station—at what salary, my friends? Does the Government pay this semiscientific man $2,000 a year, or $1,800, or even $1,500? Not much. After perhaps one or two or three years in the service he is appointed at the minimum as well as the maximum salary for this sort of work, which is $75 a month, or $900 a year, $200 less than the 17-year old girl just out of high school, who perhaps can not command more than $6 a week in an industrial institution at home, is offered to come to Washington and enter the departments. Is there any doubt of the injustice of that sort of thing, my friends, or is there any doubt that the ancient standard of salaries in our departments needs reclassification?

Then take the case of the lighthouse keepers of this great country of ours, the men who are intrusted with the tremendous responsibility of sending out the beacon light to guide the mariner on his stormy way. The average pay of the lighthouse keepers in the United States to-day is exactly $555 per year. The maximum pay which he can receive under the law is $600, but Uncle Sam has been economizing a little on that. Yes; but I hear someone say that the lighthouse keeper gets some allowances. Let us see what these amount to. In addition to his pay envelope of $10.67 each Saturday night—shipbuilders and other mechanics are earning almost as much in one day—he has his house. He must have this, as in many cases he is practically on duty all of the 24 hours in the day.

He has his house, it is true, and the land around it. Think of all the benefits and pleasure which the light keeper at the mouth of Boston Harbor must receive from gazing on his land, with his home pitched high in the air almost at the mouth of the Atlantic Ocean, its only support one slender spindle of steel coming up out of the ledges far below the surface of the water. Of course this is an extreme case, and many of the keepers have sufficient land to plant a garden, if they have enough left to buy seed from their weekly stipend of $10.67. Or perchance, in the olden days, they could keep a few hens, but not on $10.67 a week with the present price of grain, soaring as it does from month to month.

But that is not all. The Government gives these men a ration allowance, an allowance, my friends, of exactly 30 cents a day. Think of how that man's family must revel on all that money. At present prices that allowance will buy the family two loaves of bread perhaps, but not a dish of strawberries at the restaurant downstairs.

To sum it all up, then, these lighthouse keepers, with all the responsibility their position entails, are receiving for their 12 months of hard and nerve-racking labor $555 in salary, $109.50 for food, a house of some kind, and perhaps enough land to attempt a little farming on a small scale. Do you wonder that these men have worried? Do you wonder that they have waited expectantly for this amendment? Do you wonder that one of them has compared his position to that of an aged clergyman in a poor and struggling parish in my district, who was asked what his compensation was for administering the gospel to his people. "Oh, I am very well taken care of," he replied, "I receive $3 a Sunday for my sermons, and then I am given the free rent of the parsonage and half of the blueberries which I pick in the summer."

In striking contrast is the pay of the members of the Coast Guard, in many instances adjoining neighbors to the lighthouse keepers and doing similar work. As against $555 for the keeper, the captain of a coast-guard station receives $1,000 a year, the No. 1 surfman $840, and an ordinary surfman just entering the service $780. In addition, with the coast-guard men, there is a provision for longevity pay sometimes amounting to as much as 40 per cent. Take the case of allowances again: The coast-guard man is given 40 cents a day for rations, as against 30 cents for his less fortunate neighbor, and a clothing allowance of $50 the first year and $20 each succeeding year, as against nothing for the lighthouse man. And to cap the climax, gentlemen, when the coast-guard man becomes too old for further service the Government generously retires him on a pension, while there is no avenue left for the aged lighthouse keeper except the public almshouse.

Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism to make of the Coast Guard. There is no more courageous class in the country, no body of men doing a more noble work, and I glory in the fact that Congress a few years ago realized this and placed them on a footing where they belonged. But I want to see this justice extended. I want to see the lighthouse keepers put on the same footing. I want to see them paid a living wage during their activity, and I want to see provision made for their retirement to some other life than that of a public charge when they become too old to longer serve their country.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I shall vote for the proposition brought in by the committee, but I should like to see it amended in some particulars in order to improve it. I am somewhat surprised that my good friend from Illinois, Mr. RAINEY, and also my friend from Kentucky, Mr. HELM, should seek to prejudice the minds of this House against this proposition by trying to compare the salaries received by the civil employees of the Government with the sacrifices being made by our brave and gallant boys at the front. That is impossible. We can not compare any position in civil life with that of the boys who are offering to make the supreme sacrifice for the flag and freedom of their country. [Applause.]

So the only purpose these gentlemen could have had in referring to that matter, and seeking to make that comparison, was to prejudice the minds of this committee against the proposition now before us. Let me remind these two gentlemen that I have a recollection, and I do not have to go back but a very few days, when we were considering a provision in this bill which sought to increase by $500 the salary of a man now receiving $4,000 a year, and of two more who are receiving $4,000 a year each, increasing their salaries $1,000 a year, neither the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] nor the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] were here to raise their voices against that increase. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman advise me when that was?

Mr. HAMLIN. It was only three or four days ago.

Mr. RAINEY. I will say that raids on the Treasury are so numerous that a man can not leave the Hall without missing one.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman seeking to pose as the watchdog of the Treasury ought to stay here, and not be absent when the big increases are proposed, and only show up when there is a proposition being considered to give a small pittance to some clerk in a department who is not receiving enough to keep soul and body together. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY again rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I can not yield further. I have only five minutes. I should like to yield if I could.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] laid down this proposition, to which I heartily subscribe, that the basic reason for this increase is the fact that there is a stated expense incumbent upon everybody, regardless of his situation in life, regardless of the compensation received by him, that must be met by everyone alike. That is exactly the position I took the other day. It is the position I take now, and I will say that a clerk receiving $480, or $600, or $720, or $840 a year does not receive enough to meet these stated vital living expenses in these abnormal times.

My criticism of this amendment is the fact that I do not believe in these war times, when the resources of the Government are being strained to the very limit, we ought to increase the salaries of men receiving $2,000 or more a year one single penny. Perhaps a man receiving $2,000 a year earns more than that, but he is receiving enough money to meet the vital necessities of life, and we do not need to increase his salary at this time. But I do say that a $120 flat increase to a man receiving only $480 is not enough. An increase of $120 to the $720 clerk is not enough. An increase of $120 to the $840 clerk is not enough. If nobody else does, I shall offer an amendment increasing the salary of all clerks now receiving $1,000 and less $200 a year, instead of $120, and those receiving from $1,000 to $1,500 $150 a year, and those receiving over $1,500 and not more than $1,800 a year $75, but I would not go above the $1,800 limit. I believe that ought to be done, because there are two things that this Government can not afford to do at this time. The Government can not afford to ask anybody to work for it for a wage less than will enable him to meet the actual stated vital expenses of living. And then we ought not now to increase the salaries of those who are receiving enough to meet their expenses and enjoy the comforts of life.

That my position on this question may not be misunderstood I will say that under existing conditions I would not favor increasing any salary except those which are so low that it will not enable the recipient to meet reasonable living expenses. When I say reasonable, of course I mean a comfortable living. On the other hand, I think this is not the time to increase salaries simply because we feel that the present salary is not commensurate with the qualifications of the person performing the service or not in keeping with the dignity of the position held.

The only criticism of this bill in regard to salaries that I have had is that the committee recommended large increases to certain individuals now drawing $4,000 and $4,500 a year, respectively. To my mind that proposition in these times of stress is not justified, and the most remarkable thing about it all is that of all the gentlemen who are protesting so vigorously against the comparatively insignificant increase of $120 a year to clerks drawing $2,000 a year and less, not one of them raised his voice to oppose a proposition to increase the salary of the Chief of the Efficiency Bureau from $4,500 to $5,000 per annum and the salary of the President of the Civil Service Commission from $4,500 to $5,000, and the other two Civil Service Commissioners from $4,000 to $5,000 each per annum. Here was a proposition where the increase for one employee proposed in the bill was as much as the entire salary now received by each of over 100,000 clerks working for the Government. I felt that that was not fair, and that is why I opposed those proposed increases.

My position not only on the question of salaries, but in every other line of activity during this war, is that great sacrifices must be made, but that things should be adjusted in such a way that these sacrifices will be distributed as equally as may be among all people and classes. No favoritism should be shown.

While I am going to vote for this amendment as reported by the committee, in case it can not be amended, yet I feel that the clerk receiving $2,000 a year does not need the increase as badly as the one receiving $720 or $840, or, in fact, any of these low salaries. For that reason I hope to see the bill amended so as to give the principal increase to those who need it most.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in order to show the spirit, temper, and teeth of the organizations who are demanding this increase I want to read to you colleagues two excerpts from a petition which has been sent from one city in my district:

* * * * * * *

Whereas a member of the Cabinet of the President of these United States has stated in his annual report that the organization of employees in his particular branch of the Federal Government is a menace to the public service; that such employees, though justly compensated (as he claims), are making many selfish demands, are endeavoring to unjustly influence Congress, and will inevitably go out on a strike, and that they will make impossible a provision for the economic conduct of the service—

And so forth—

Therefore be it

Resolved by the El Paso Central Labor Union of El Paso, Tex., and vicinity, That we, the representatives of over 3,000 workingmen of El Paso and vicinity, denounce and brand the statements of the said member of the Cabinet of our President as untrue, misleading, and farfetched in the main, and that we sincerely regret that he is a citizen of these United States and of the fair State of Texas and is a member of the Cabinet of the President of these United States, and do hope and trust that his resignation will be requested, if he shall not have the honor and manhood to present the same.

* * * * * * *

Simply because the able Postmaster General of the United States, Hon. Albert S. Burleson, under a sense of duty felt compelled to make certain recommendations to insure the best and most efficient service to the Government, organized labor is trying to cudgel him out of office. I was reared to young manhood on a farm and worked my own way through the university of my native State, and knowing by actual experience the many hardships which beset the man who toils for his daily bread, my heart has always beat in close sympathy with the labor problems of the land; but when organized labor becomes bigger than the Government and in a war crisis is selfishly making demand after demand at the expense of millions and millions of the unorganized toilers of our country, I must raise my voice against it, even though it may cause strong political antagonism against me in the future.

This is the spirit and temper of the organizations that are demanding this increase at this time. That is why, for one good reason, I am going to vote against this amendment. I want to say to my colleagues that I do not believe that there is a class of workmen anywhere in existence who are better cared for than the clerks in the employ of the United States Government, save and except postal employees and certain postmasters. Why, they get 30 days' vacation in summer on full pay; they get every single holiday that is enjoyed by the banks or individuals; they get each and every one of the 52 Sundays—something that the Members of Congress do not get. [Laughter.] They are entitled to as many as 30 days' sick leave on doctor's certificate on full pay. They enjoy the privilege of 12 half holidays in the summer and others on all special occasions in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield the balance of my time to the gentleman. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to you gentlemen that these clerks are housed in the most comfortable quarters imaginable; they are surrounded by every kind of luxury found in department buildings; you will find many of them wearing the best tailor-made clothes in Washington, and many of them drive their own automobiles every day on the streets of this city. [Laughter.] You will find many of them in the most popular theaters in the city.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And they do all this on $480 a year?

Mr. BLANTON. That $480 a year is a myth. The new employees that have been coming here day after day from my district have been entered on the department pay roll at $75 a month, with increases, when some of them do not know how to run a typewriter and are absolutely inexperienced, and could not draw $40 a month in their home towns. [Applause.]

I know of assistant bank cashiers in my district, filling important and honorable positions of trust in national banks requiring high business qualifications, who do not now get over $100 per month. I know of a young lady who was drawing a salary of $60 in a bank in New Orleans, who accepted a position as interpreter of French in the Ordnance Department, beginning at a salary of $1,100, and one day this week she remarked to a friend that all she did that day was to translate three short letters, and that often she had nothing to do at all. I was told by the principal of Wood's Commercial College that girls are constantly being taken out of his school who hardly know the keyboard of a typewriter and started in at $1,000 and $1,100 salaries by the Government. I know of an employee in The Adjutant General's Office drawing $1,400 a year who is the secretary of a labor organization, and who spends part of his time during office hours in soliciting clerks to join the union, arguing to them convincingly how much influence over Congress such unions can exert in their behalf.

There is hardly a department in Washington where if the employees all worked faithfully and diligently eight hours a day it would not be possible to dispense with at least one-third of the employees. I have been told by conscientious clerks from my district working here that if Members of Congress could only see how much time is wasted each day, how much time is used by cigarette smokers in rolling, lighting, and smoking from 10 to 20 cigarettes each day, how much time is wasted by social conversations each day between many young men and young women, see just exactly how many soldiering, time-wasting, clock watchers there are in the various departments of Government service in Washington among the 240,000 employees whose salaries this amendment seeks to raise, and which $28,000,000 increase the now already overburdened taxpayers will have to pay, that instead of granting this increase to each and every one of them alike, we would take steps to weed out these incompetents, decrease the salaries of the slackers, and raise the salaries only of the diligent employees who are giving good service and deserve it.

I have a 15-year-old son who is an employee of this House, receiving $2.50 per day, and no man in Washington better earns his pay, for from the day this session met in December he has not missed an hour, but sits at that desk there from the time Congress meets every day until it adjourns, including the Sunday sessions we have had, yet I do not think that he is entitled to the increase which this amendment would give him, and I am going to vote against it.

I am in favor of granting a substantial increase in salary to certain second, third, and fourth class postmasters, post-office clerks, railway mail clerks, and rural carriers, who are now making less than any family can live upon, and I think that we should not further delay the passage of the bill providing for their relief, but this amendment offers them no relief whatever.

But during this war crisis, when we are taking young men between the ages of 21 and 31 from their families, their wives and children, and their private businesses, and forcing them to fight in the trenches, knee-deep in mud, for $30 per month, it does occur to me that these 240,000 employees we let stay safely at home, who are to be benefited by this bill, and most of whom get salaries ranging from $1,100 to $2,000, ought to be willing to make some sacrifice, dispense with some of their accustomed luxuries and extravagances, and neither demand these increases nor protest against working eight hours a day, especially while safely living in the Capital, and many filling positions vacated by soldier boys now in the trenches of France. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has exhausted his time. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Was this a trick purposely played on me by the gentleman from Tennessee? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time is kept by the timekeeper at the desk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 17 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, we are passing through abnormal times. We must make unusual provision for the support of Government employees. Any gentleman who closes his eyes to the fact that all commodities of life have risen and who tries to solve this question without the increased cost of living will fail to find a correct solution. We must in some way do what the industrial, commercial, and financial interests of the country have done in the way of increasing the pay of Federal employees. We ought to do it in a large way and with fine spirit. All admit that the Government should be a model employer. On the other hand, the person who would set no limit to the increase he would grant to the Federal employees would do a great injustice to the Treasury of the United States. He would do a great injustice to the millions of patriotic men and women who are called upon to buy liberty bonds in order to place money in the Treasury with which to pay this increased compensation.

It has been said on the one hand that we have gone too far, and on the other hand that we have not gone far enough. Some would grant no increase in pay of Federal clerks, while others would make the sky the limit. These positions were presented to the subcommittee. We conducted the hearings and the committee tried to strike a golden mean somewhere between the two extremes. I believe if you will read the hearings conducted by the subcommittee you will find that we have, on the whole, dealt very liberally with the Federal employees. There are inequities in the provision. Some will get too much and some too little under its provisions. The Federal employees have, I think, labored under some misapprehension of the facts due to the statements made by a part of the Washington press. I do not see how some of the publishers of the Washington newspapers, who pay practically the lowest wages in Washington, much less than the Government pays for similar work, can look the reporter in the face when they hand him his little stipend of about $25 a week for doing high-class newspaper service. [Applause.] Let the newspaper publisher read the hearings and increase the pay of his stenographers, reporters, and bookkeepers somewhere near the standard price of the Government, and then they will have a right to criticize Congress for not appropriating more money for Government clerks. [Applause.]

The committee made some real investigation of this subject. This amendment is offered only after full study and investigation. We caused to be sent to 132 cities in the United States inquiries requesting data from manufacturers and employers of labor, and I have here a graphic showing the result of that investigation. Manufacturers and employers of labor all over the country were asked what wage they paid for a certain class of work. Take the first class, female bookkeepers, No. 1, preparing schedules, and so forth. We found that the wage scale of the private employer has gone up in that class from $460 in 1914 to $660 in 1918. The pay of the Federal Government for the same class of work in 1914 was $1,020 as compared with $460 in private employment, and that Federal wage has increased from $1,020 in 1914 to $1,170 in 1918, and so on all the way through. On the whole, for clerical work the investigation shows that the Government pays a wage from $200 to $300 a year more than is paid by the private employer for the same grade of work. Take promotions. Last year there was one department of the Government that promoted 130 per cent of its employees, and these promotions averaged $200 each.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. RUCKER. I just wanted to find out if that was in the Pension Office.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman has his per cent wrong, has he not?

Mr. GOOD. No; that is correct. That is to say, every employee in that department was promoted once, and 30 per cent were promoted twice. Take the War Department, for instance. Over 90 per cent of the employees in the War Department last year were promoted and most of these promotions amounted to $200 and some of them amounted to $600. One gentleman, a private employer, came here, brought by the organization furthering the Keating bill, and spoke of the magnanimous treatment his concern was affording its employees. He had instituted a very humane plan to increase the pay of his employees. His plan was commendable. Yet he admitted that stenographers coming into his employment who had two years experience were taken in at from $8 to $10 a week, and that his own private secretary, who was a relative and who had been in the employ for 10 years—and there was none better, that she could conduct the business—received, before he instituted this new and humane plan, $20 a week, and after the increase she got only $105 a month. Yet I undertake to say for that class of employment the Government of the United States is paying from $1,600 to $1,800 a year, and in many cases more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman to yield me two minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GOOD. It seems to me that we ought to be fair to the employees, but at the same time we must be just to the hundred million people who are called upon to buy liberty bonds, to pay the salaries that you are voting to-day. I do not subscribe to the statement that we must increase the wages correspondingly to the increase in the cost of living. There is not a person in all this land who should be permitted to escape from the sacrifice to maintain the flag of the United States in our present war [applause], and I would not write into the statutes of my country a provision that all of the hundred millions of people should make the sacrifice in this regard except the clerk who is working for the Government of the United States, and I do not believe a single clerk is asking that. All of us are compelled to retrench because of the high cost of living. The Government clerk must make some sacrifice also.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in the two minutes allotted me I desire to call the attention of the House to the inconsistency of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who is decrying the very small raise provided by this amendment to the employees of this Government. Mr. BLANTON is being fairly well paid for his services at $7,500 a year. In addition to that he is receiving, as I am informed, more than $700 mileage per session; also $2,000 a year for a son, who is a clerk in his office.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I can not yield now.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. What is your clerk's name?

Mr. BLANTON. My son is a clerk, but my son gets very little of that money. Mrs. R. L. Arceneaux is one of my clerks in my office at $1,200 a year, and from time to time I have had various other employees.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. He also has a son on the page's bench at $83 a month—nearly the sum that he says the cashiers of the banks receive down in his State. So I think the gentlemen who live in glass houses should not throw stones. The amount that is provided for by this amendment as an increase helps some. It does not help as much as the committee would desire to have it, but in these times when sacrifices are being made by all, the clerks are willing to make some sacrifice themselves, but we must be just to these people who are quite as necessary here doing their bit in these offices as those on the firing line—and I am not here to detract one iota of honor from the great duty they are performing; but without the help of these clerks, without the help of these servants of the Nation, our men in arms could not go very far nor last very long. This $120 will not be a great amount for any person under present prices, but it will help some in enabling them to live in accord with the American standard of living, and not in accord with the debased standard of Europe.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, last year in the legislative bill we provided an increase of 10 per cent for all appropriated for by the bill and who entered the service before June 30, 1917, who received less than $1,200 and 5 per cent for those who received $1,200 up to $1,800. For two months and more, while the subcommittee has been considering the legislative appropriation bill, we have had before us continuously the question of what plan the committee should follow in recommending increases to the Government clerks during the next fiscal year. After long deliberation we found that the percentage plan was inequitable in its operation, and so the committee decided on a level amount to be paid to all Government employees receiving salaries of $2,000 and under. That is not equitable to some, I am sure, and if we could have apportioned it so as to provide a larger amount for some—for instance, those having families dependent upon them, or dependents—we might have done so, but we found that was not workable.

Then some of the committee believe those who were appointed from lump-sum appropriations and who have been recently brought into the Government service, and there are thousands of those, whose salaries are based upon existing pay in commercial employment, that they should be excluded; but after deliberation, we decided that they also should be included.

Much emphasis on the part of those who would increase this amount has been laid as to those who receive $480 and $500 or $600. I want to say to the members of this committee that if you study this bill you will find that those who receive $480, $500, or under $600 are mostly boys who perform the work of messengers, and that the lowest paid salary of men employed in the departments, unskilled-labor positions, is $660. Your subcommittee, in framing the bill, in every instance raised the salary of unskilled laborers where it was shown they were receiving to $660, the statutory rate. Watchmen receive $720, messengers, $840, and artisans with higher pay. I have in my hand a schedule showing that in industrial and commercial employment the salary of watchmen is $200 less than what we are paying in the Government service. And mark you, my fellow Members, that while it is easy to get up here on the floor and declaim in favor of these low-salaried people in the Government employ, we all know that somehow or other we live on different scales; and while we do wish to do equity to all, nevertheless this is not the place to rearrange the salaries of Government employees or to equalize any existing disparities.

The one question before the committee is whether we should adopt a level increase to apply to all classes up to a certain amount that will do equity in a large way. There are many—in my opinion the vast majority—employed in stenographic positions, who are being paid from $900 to $1,200, who have no one dependent upon them, aggregating 15,000, who have come here from all over the country, in some instances receiving threefold what they were receiving in private employment at home, and in many instances twofold, and in all instances 25 per cent more than what they were receiving at home. Study this schedule further and you will find almost without exception that the Government is paying more for similar services than private employers are paying, paying more with less hours of employment, not only less hours of employment but with less work performed, for we all know that in Government employment, like under Government operation of anything, the Government does not get as large a return out of the employment as would a private employer. This committee does not wish to do aught that is wrong to this great army of employees. We have in presenting this resolution to you, speaking in a large way, doubled the allowance that was voted last year. Surely no one will contend that the cost of living in the next fiscal year, to which this applies, will be 100 per cent more than the cost of living during the present fiscal year. Thirteen million dollars is the amount that has been estimated as being paid in increased allowances under the existing system. It is estimated that under this proposal it will be from $25,000,000 to $28,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to perfect the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. There will have to be a paragraph read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I beg the Chair's pardon. I thought a paragraph had been read. I offered an amendment, which was adopted, to the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that yesterday the first paragraph was read and then agreement was made as to general debate. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the words "certification of," insert the words "the person in the legislative branch or."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simply offered to perfect the paragraph. Under this paragraph those who came into the service after June 30, 1917, and those who were in the service prior to that time and who, either during the fiscal year of 1918 or 1919 have received promotion in excess of $200 are not entitled to this sum of $120, unless certified by the head of the department or establishment in which they are serving. Now, this paragraph also applies to the legislative branch, the Congressional Library, the Government Printing Office, which is a part of the legislative branch, and this is simply to perfect it so as to make provision for a proper certifying head in this branch of Government service.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield to answer a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has just spoken of some Government employees having received recently an increase in wages or salary of $200 a year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not make that statement, but there are quite a number of employees, a great many of them, as pointed out by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee is that none of those who have received that $200 of increase shall receive the increase contemplated in the pending amendment without a certification from their superior officer. Is that it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the language of the paragraph.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, I want to ask a question——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield in that particular for one minute, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman's inquiry is whether those who have received a promotion of $200 would not be excluded by reason of this provision. We purposely in the committee provided that they should have received more than $200 in order to exclude them so that those receiving $200 will still be the recipients of the $120 without certification.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes. According to the plain wording of the paragraph it is only those who receive in excess of $200 by way of promotion for whom certification is required.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If that is true, will the gentleman from Tennessee please tell who of the employees it is that will require certification?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are two classes. In the first place, those employees of the Government who were in the service prior to June 30, 1917, and who have, either during the fiscal year 1918 or the fiscal year 1919, received an increase in salary in excess of $200. Now, that is one class. The other class is the employee who has come into the service since June 30, 1917.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, I wish to ask this question: Does the gentleman from Tennessee know, of those employees who receive an increase of $200, what their respective salaries amount to, including that increase of $200—the lowest pay?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The total amount is a matter purely of calculation. Such increases apply largely to the clerical grades.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But that is very important indeed if we are going to the justness of this amendment. A man might be getting $200 increase on a $480 salary, and in these times, with the high cost of living, he would only receive $680, not a living wage in the city of Washington.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the gentleman will notice in such case the question of whether he participates in this fund is left entirely with the administrative head of the department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It ought not to be. A man who receives no more than $680 in the city of Washington ought to receive the increase of $120 above that $680, including a prior increase of $200. So it is exceedingly important before that amendment is passed that we should know what the wages are of those people who did receive the increase of $200. With the $200 increase they might not then be receiving a living wage.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say in reply to the query of my colleague that the purpose of the certification is not to extend to the lower-priced employees of the Government. In rare instances would they have received the $200 increase or more. But it is to apply to that large army of clerks who are being paid out of lump-sum appropriations, who have been brought into the service only recently, where the department heads have been privileged to pay them any salary whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that according to the agreement the debate was to be confined to germane and material amendments. The gentleman can speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise in opposition to—whatever it is. [Laughter.]

I want to say in reply to my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that in voting for or against this amendment it is not a question of what was intended by the amendment, but of what the amendment will permit; what it authorizes to be done. If there is a good, kind man at the head of a bureau, he will not fail to do justice, at least to the best of his ability, to those who are under his charge, but if there be a man—and there are some of them—who is not kind, and is in charge of a bureau, those under him are at his mercy. He will play favorites every time. [Applause.] I absolutely know that to be true in the administration of some of the bureaus right in this city, and so does every other Member of the House who has had much experience in those departments. So that the law which we enact ought by its terms to provide explicitly and with justice what salaries shall be paid to the employees of this Government; and it ought not to be left to the discretion of a bureau chief to say whether he will or will not certify to A, who ought to get the additional $120, and deny it to B, when B may be the better, more efficient clerk.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman asked for information, and I think I can give it to him from this statement:

The law fixes the salaries of the charwomen at $240 a year; of laborers at $660 a year; assistant telephone switchboard operators, $600; telephone switchboard operators, $720; firemen, $720; watchmen, $720; assistant messengers, $720; messengers, $840; copyists, $900; clerks of class 1, $1,200; class 2, $1,400; clerks of class 3, $1,600; and clerks of class 4, $1,800.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What the gentleman has just read is very interesting and highly instructive, but that is not germane to the question raised now here before the committee. There is in this amendment a provision that bureau chiefs or somebody else in authority in these departments shall have the discretion arbitrarily to certify that, in his judgment, certain employees are entitled to receive $120, and that certain other employees are not. We ought to fix the terms under which these increases are to be paid, and not leave it to the discretion of bureau chiefs, who sometimes are very far from being fair. Many of these chiefs are excellent men and do justice to those under them, but I say what is a fact, as every gentleman on the floor knows, that there have been bureau chiefs who deliberately outraged the rights of their subordinates. We should in the law itself say who shall receive these certificates, if certificates are to be required, and under what terms they are to be issued. I am in favor of fixing absolutely by law what employees shall receive increases in salary from the United States Treasury and what the increases shall be.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman explain how he is going to do that when we have appropriated already $10,000,000 to one bureau to spend in a lump sum in its discretion?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent, first, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a parliamenary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I sent an amendment to the desk—an amendment to the first section. Has not my amendment priority?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment has to be offered and read from the desk. The gentleman stated when he submitted his amendment that it was read for the purpose of information. The gentleman will have to get recognition to offer his amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is what I understood I had done. I will ask for recognition after the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will get recognition, but the Chair will not promise him recognition at any particular time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COX: Amend by inserting the following after the word "Columbia," in line 2, page 1: "who are married, having families dependent upon them for support or unmarried employees having a dependent parent, or parents, or dependent brothers and sisters to support," and insert the following, after the words "per annum," in line 7, page 1: "All other employees shall receive an additional compensation of $5 per month."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the plain purport of my amendment is simply this: It allows the $10 per month to every man who is married or the head of a family, or every clerk or employee of the Government who has a dependent father, or mother, or brother, or sister dependent upon him for support. My amendment grants him $10 per month. To the single employee it allows only $5 per month.

I have not had time to read all the hearings of all the clerks who appeared before our committee, but the vast majority of them I heard myself. I do not recall a single employee before our committee that ever said that he was underpaid for the work he was doing. Every one of them laid claim to an increased salary because of the increased cost of living. If anybody is entitled to an increase of compensation, it certainly is the man at the head of a family or the woman, perchance, it may be, at the head of a family, or the man who has an old, decrepit father or mother or sister depending upon him or her for support.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, will take care of the downright needy cases in the Government. There is no question about that. It will save millions of dollars to the Government. I know that men will rise here and argue that this is socialism. This is the French system exactly. We are operating on that same system in our income tax. A married man is entitled to an exemption of $2,000 on his income and $200 for each child. A single person is entitled to an exemption of $1,000, so that the principle has been well established in this country.

Now, it has been said here time and time again that the Government ought to be a model employer. I do not know just what the advocates of that academic phrase mean when they use it. If they mean that the Government ought to pay as high a wage as private employers pay I want to call attention to some very significant figures, and I ask at this point to insert them in my remarks. I hold in my hand a true copy of a sworn report of a trunk-line railroad entering the city of Washington, prepared for the use of the wage board of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which they asked for five typical cases of all the trunk-line railroads that enter the District of Columbia.

Out of 387 clerks, gentleman, 106 of them receive salaries of from $75 to $80 per month; 112 receive salaries of from $80 to $90; 71 receive salaries of from $90 to $100; 37 receive salaries of from $100 to $110; 29 receive salaries of from $110 to $120; 10 receive salaries of from $120 to $130; 8 receive salaries of from $130 to $140; 2 receive salaries of from $140 to $150; 1 receives a salary from $160 to $170; and 1 from $170 to $180.

Of those who receive a salary below $900 per annum, out of a total 616 clerks, 3 receive a salary of less than $30 a month, 9 receive a salary of from $30 to $40 a month, 46 receive a salary of from $40 to $50 a month, 137 receive a salary of $50 to $60 per month, 318 receive a salary of from $60 to $70 per month, and 103 receive a salary of from $70 to $75 per month.

Of those who receive a salary of less than $720 a year, 9 receive a monthly salary of less than $30, 7 receive a salary of from $30 to $40, 8 a salary of from $40 to $50, and 5 receive a salary of from $50 to $60 per month.

This whole proposition is summarized in this little paragraph in this same statement of the railroads:

Two hundred and ninety-nine clerks receive $75 to $100 per month.
Six hundred and sixteen clerks receive $30 to $75 per month.
A total of 915 clerks received $100 and less per month out of a grand total of 1,042 employees covered by the report.

I have written to some of the leading insurance companies in the United States. I am not prepared to put their letters in the RECORD, because, although they have given me the information frankly, they have asked me not to make their letters public. These companies start their employees at an average of $40 a month, and it takes them from 7 to 10 years before they reach $75 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. I append to my remarks the following statistical table and memorandum:

MEMORANDUM.

The attached table represents an analysis of data submitted to the railroad wage commission of the Interstate Commerce Commission by one of the important railroad systems operating through Washington, D. C., showing salaries paid to its clerical employees during the month of December, 1917. The analysis herewith is based on a summary submitted by the company covering five representative divisions of the company's system. The divisions reported on were selected by the railroad company under the following instructions from the commission:

"These divisions must be so selected as to avoid valid criticism as to their not being truly representative."

It may be assumed that the divisions selected are fairly representative of the salaries paid, for the reason that the data transmitted to the wage commission are to be considered in connection with demands for increases in wages during the war, and it would be to the interest of the railroad company to select divisions representing the better conditions of employment as to hours and salaries.

The following comparisons are significant:

Two hundred and ninety-nine clerks receive $75 to $100 per month.

Six hundred and sixteen clerks receive $30 to $75 per month.

A total of 915 clerks received $100 and less per month out of a grand total of 1,042 employees covered by the report.

I also append to my remarks the following, supplied to me by the Library of Congress:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, March 1, 1918.

Hon. W. E. COX,
294 House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In response to the request contained in your letter of the 27th ult., I am inclosing herewith a memorandum on allowances to married Government employees in France, which has been prepared in the Legislative Reference Division under my direction. We are unable to find any similar provisions for Great Britain and Germany.

Very truly, yours,

J. DAVID THOMPSON,
Law Librarian.

ALLOWANCES TO MARRIED GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES IN FRANCE.

By the act of August 4, 1917, Government employees have been granted temporary salary increases on account of the high cost of living, effective from July 1, 1917. The decree of August 18, 1917, determines the nature of these allowances and their mode of payment, as follows:

Under the terms of this decree all Government employees—clerks, laborers, and workmen—who hold permanent positions remunerated according to a regular scale of wages and salaries are entitled to an annual increase of 540 francs when the salary is 3,000 francs or less and of 360 francs when the salary is between 3,000 and 5,000 francs. Employees under 16 years of age or those temporarily employed for the duration of the war are not entitled to this salary increase.

Employees receiving this temporary increase are also entitled to a special allowance on account of dependent children under 16 years of age or unable to work on account of disabilities. This allowance amounts annually to 100 francs for each of the first two children and to 200 francs for each additional child. Employees whose annual salary exceeds 5,000 francs may be granted a reduced allowance so as to receive as much as an employee at a salary of 5,000 francs with the same family charges.

The following are considered as being dependents for the purposes of this law:

1. The children for whom an employer must provide according to the civil code.

2. Brothers, sisters, nephews, and nieces for whom he provides because they are orphans.

3. The children of the husband or wife of the employee by a former marriage.

These allowances on account of dependents are payable monthy.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which has been offered is not claimed to be an ideal solution of the proposition confronting Congress. It would require infinite wisdom to be able to frame an amendment which would do absolute justice in all cases. Necessarily there must be some inequities. I do believe that the committee has presented to the House the very best proposition that can be presented, guarding the Treasury of the United States and at the same time doing some measure of justice to the employees of the Government. It is true, as stated, that the sum allowed may not be sufficient to meet the full amount of the increased cost of living; but, as has been stated, every person is being called upon to make some sacrifices, and in a situation like this it is incumbent upon every person to practice economy. The committee have presented this amendment, feeling that, in responding to the insistent demand in Congress for legislation of this kind, it has treated all employees as fairly and equitably as was possible. The proposition submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] appeals to the sense of justice of everyone, because we all know that a man who has some one dependent upon him is subjected to greater hardship on account of the increased cost of living than one who has no dependents, and personally I would be very glad to see it worked out if it were possible; but I believe it to be wholly impracticable and impossible to work out a proposition of that kind. Why, it would cost in administration nearly as much money as we are appropriating for the increase of clerks. We might have a situation where there was a clerk in one department with a sister or brother in another department, both making claims on account of the same dependents. Again, the question would be put up to the head of the department as to the facts in a particular case. If a person claimed that back in his home State he had a dependent mother, an invalid father, or a dependent sister or brother, it would require investigation of, perhaps, field agents in order to determine the exact facts. The committee felt that, under all the circumstances, it was impracticable and impossible to put into effect the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox.]

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In a moment. I have said that inequities will necessarily result in the administration of this as they do in the administration of other matters; but I do believe that the committee have safeguarded this amendment as best they can.

Mr. COX. If the French Government is able to work it out—and it is—does not the gentleman feel that our Government ought to be able to do the same thing?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know just what method the French Government follows, but I do not believe that it would be feasible or possible to put the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana into effect, because, as I have stated, it would require investigation and considerable administrative work. It might, as a matter of fact, require the establishment of an independent bureau of this Government in order to verify the facts.

Mr. HARDY. Would not the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, if attempted to be put into operation, possibly have the effect of inducing the Government to dismiss those clerks who had dependents and to retain those at lesser pay for the same service who had no dependents?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas is a good one. That would be the result in private employment, and it might be the result in public employment.

Mr. COX. Where is the law that authorizes the Government to discharge any employee except for inefficiency? There is a civil-service regulation which prevents that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It can be done under some circumstances.

Mr. COX. It can not be done unless an employee is inefficient.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I call for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 4, noes 65.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 3 strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert "$1,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Page 1, line 3, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,600."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in my opinion—which may not be worth much, as it was not a moment ago—no one can justify himself in voting to increase salaries in excess of $1,600 a year. The argument has been made here this evening and will be made many times that these employees are not paid enough. I want to call the attention of this committee to the solemn fact that last October we passed what was called the war-risk bill. We took from hundreds of thousands of married women in this country their meal tickets, their husbands, and put those men in the Army. There are thousands of them in the cantonments and other thousands of them in France. Congress gave to these women $25 a month and $5 for each child, and that is all they can get. If a Government employee in this city or elsewhere can not live on $1,000 a year, in the name of God how are those wives and those children at home going to live? [Applause.] Gen. Sherwood said to me this morning that the average pension of the 285,000 old soldiers in this country was only $20 a month. But supposing it is $25 a month. Thousands upon thousands of these old soldiers have their wives yet. Thousands upon thousands of them are living upon their pensions. If these old men and old women, whose earning capacity is entirely gone, are required to live upon a little pension of $20 or $25 a month, do you not believe that the clerks here in the city of Washington can get along on $1,000 per year?

I am not one of those men who believe that all the brain power is concentrated in any one committee. Far from it. I am not one of those men who believe that all the brain power of this House is concentrated in the skull of any one man. Here is what we ought to do: We ought to take this top-heavy timber off of this bill and increase no man's salary above $1,600, but add it to the low-paid fellows before we get done with it. But I know what is coming. The gentleman from Missouri hit me very forcibly the other day. I have heard the argument, and I know what it will be.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. No; I can not yield. I know the argument that is coming. "Stand by the committee." I never have been one of those men that stood by the committee unless I thought it was right. [Applause.] In this instance, in my opinion, the committee is wrong. You can not defend this proposition when you go back home. You can not look men in the face and tell them that you voted to increase the salaries of the clerks in the city of Washington going up as high as $2,000. Tell your laboring men that, tell the farmers that, and see how popular that is going to be. And then when the old soldier asks you how he is going to get along on $25 a month, answer that. When the wives of the boys now in the cantonments ask how you expect them to get along on $25 a month, explain that to them, will you not?

I am not a prophet, but, judging the future by the past, what is known as the Borland amendment will not get anywhere in the Committee of the Whole. When you go back to the district tell them that you voted to increase the compensation of the clerks and by your vote you imposed a tax of $29,000,000 on the taxpayers of the Nation, but look them square in the face and tell them that you refused to make them work eight hours a day. Tell them that, will you not? Ah, do not be driven to the wall like you were the other evening on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN]. Do not get stage-struck here because you have got a few city letter carriers and perchance a few members of organized labor in your district. Do not run to cover on this proposition like you did the other evening when you adopted the amendment of Mr. CANNON and then immediately agreed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN], an amendment that took the very vitals out of the Cannon amendment, took its life away, and strangled it when you deliberately turned round and voted that amendment in. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have been much interested in the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox]. I am glad to hear him announce that he has broken the shackles that bound him and no longer follows the lead of the great Committee on Appropriations, but within 36 hours from this time I appealed to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] in behalf of the old soldier to whom he made reference a few minutes ago, and my recollection is that he refused to listen to my appeal and followed the commands of the committee.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will get a pension bill in here to increase——

Mr. RUCKER. I can not yield to the gentleman for that. When I asked him to vote to supply sufficient employees to conduct the work of the Pension Office——

Mr. COX. I want the old soldiers to get it and not the clerks.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, can not I be protected? [Laughter.] I repeat when I asked the gentleman to help me secure legislation that would supply sufficient employees for the Pension Office, my recollection is that the gentleman followed the committee on that occasion. The committee was not fortified then as it is now. My Lord, they come in here to-day with blue prints to prove they are right. They did not have any blue prints to justify their unjust assault upon the Pension Office. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this bill on its final passage provided it is amended so as to require every clerk in the departments of Government in the District of Columbia to work eight hours each day, but I will not vote for it unless it is so amended. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. I will vote for the amendment if the Borland amendment is put on, and I will not vote for it unless it is.

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad that the gentleman agrees with me, blue print or no blue print. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I have accomplished my purpose and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 31, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "of," strike out "$120" and insert "$180."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have just offered would make a flat increase of $15 a month instead of $10 a month—the committee report being for $10 and my substitute being for $15. The effect would be, in percentages, that under the committee's amendment those who draw $600 would get 20 per cent; under my amendment they would get 30 per cent. If the committee amendment goes through, those who get $1,200 would get a 10 per cent increase, and if my amendment wins they would get 15 per cent increase.

The amendment I have offered is practically the standard adopted by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in dealing with the postal employees. I take it for granted that the Members of the House are desirous of treating all civil-service employees alike; that they want to grant those who are outside of the Postal Service the same percentages of increase that they will grant those in the Postal Service. If you adopt the committee amendment it will be necessary for you, when the Madden bill comes before the House, to either reduce the percentages allowed to the postal employees or vote to grant postal employees more than you do other civil-service employees. I am very earnestly in favor of the Madden bill, and I hope we will not go below the standards set in that measure.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. No; I can not yield. I have not the time. Now, I believe that my amendment is a reasonable one. It is offered for the purpose of taking care of a portion of the increased cost of living. No one has been bold enough to suggest that the Government should meet the entire increase in the cost of living.

The committee presided over by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] conducted elaborate hearings. One of the most interesting witnesses was a Mr. Whitfield, proprietor of the Old Dutch Market here in Washington, a merchant of very wide experience, and he submitted figures which have not been questioned and can not be questioned.

He took 61 staple articles and gave us figures to show that the prices of those 61 staple articles had increased from December, 1915, to December, 1917, 98 per cent. Then he divided his figures so as to show what he said was the increase in pork products, which he said were the most important single item entering into the ordinary family budget. The price of pork products had increased from December 1, 1915, to December, 1917, 115 per cent, and this man sells these articles over his counters in this town. He then took the vegetable list and showed that the cost of vegetables had increased 200 per cent in two years. Then he took the beef division and showed that the increase in beef had been 62.6 per cent.

So I might go on, if the time allowed, citing figures of that kind, and I might support them by reading reports from your Government bureaus which absolutely sustain the figures submitted by Mr. Whitfield.

Gentlemen say these Government employees are so much better paid than others. My friends, I have here another Government publication, issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, showing the percentages of increase of compensation in all lines of endeavor. There is a report here from the Labor Bureau of New York State showing that, taking all classes of wages of all industries, the increase from 1914–15 to 1917 was 39 per cent. This is in private employment.

It gives a great, long list here of various crafts, various business enterprises, showing increases in salaries running all the way from 6 per cent to 105 per cent. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado, if adopted, would add fifteen millions at least to the increases to be paid to the clerks. The gentleman assumes that the way to determine this matter is to determine how much certain products have increased in price and then to make that percentage of increase in the salaries. I submit to the House that that is not a logical position. It starts on an assumption that is not true, namely, that salaries in the Government service represent only enough to barely buy food and keep people alive. I submit to the House that the testimony shows that the salaries being paid, speaking by and large, are higher than those paid in private life for the same character of work.

There is a double obligation upon all of us here, an obligation not only to do justice to the employees of the Government, but an obligation to do justice to the people who support the Government. The Government has no wealth of its own. What it gets and what it pays is paid by virtue of taxes levied on all the people. The committee, however, has brought in here a provision that does not necessarily represent the last word on the subject, but it represents a consensus of judgment after weeks of study by not only the Committee on Appropriations but by the other committees that have appropriating power. We submit to the House that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado is extreme. It is just as extreme, in my judgment, as is the position taken by some gentlemen that no increase ought to be allowed. This is not an easy problem to solve, but somewhere between the extremes of those men who would not grant any increase and those that would grant anything that may be asked by any group of men who come with a request lies the equity of the situation. The proposal we have brought in means an addition of $26,000,000 to $28,000,000 to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The proposal that the gentleman offers means an increase of that amount by from $13,000,000 to $14,000,000 or more. I submit to this House that there has been nothing adduced in the hearings, nothing in the statement of gentlemen here made, to warrant the voting of this amount of money at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to ask if it is clear that this proposed $120 or, as the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado has it, $180, dates back to the time prior to the granting of any percentage advance in salaries?

Mr. SHERLEY. The provision is that the $120 shall be the increase upon the basic salary of employees, excluding the 5 and 10 per cent increase of this year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Where does a man get off who gets exactly $1,200 a year now?

Mr. SHERLEY. Last year he did not get 10 per cent and this year he does get 10 per cent. Last year he got 5 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEATING) there were—ayes 49, noes 77.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. KEATING were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. KEATING) reported that there were—ayes 56, noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "receive" and insert the following: "during the present fiscal year are receiving," and strike out the proviso beginning in line 15, page 1, and ending in line 19, page 1.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the amendment as presented by the committee provides an increase of $120 per annum to those who are receiving $2,000 or less, but under the proviso between lines 15 and 19 the $120 will be added to last year's salary. About a year ago a resolution was passed, as I remember it, providing a 5 and 10 per cent increase—10 per cent increase of all salaries up to $1,200 and 5 per cent increase between $1,200 and $1,800. Those increases are now being received by the clerks who are entitled to them. The pending proposition offered by the committee will not add the $120 to the amount the clerks are now receiving, but will add $120 to the salaries of last year. For instance, if a man received $1,100 last year and 10 per cent were added by the resolution adopted a year ago, he would receive an increase of $110; that is, he would now be receiving salary at the rate of $1,210 per year. When we start with last year's salaries as a basis, as the committee proposes, we would start with $1,100, and the clerk would receive an increase of $120, or an increase of only $10 over what he is now receiving. I think the Committee of the Whole ought to understand that fully, and they ought to approve my amendment to have the increase apply to and be added to the salaries now being paid. And I insist that the increase is reasonable only on the basis which I suggest.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman's amendment obtains, as I understand it, it will eliminate the last year's 5 and 10 per cent increase.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If my amendment is adopted it will strike out the proviso. That proviso is to the effect that this $120 increase shall be made to the salaries of last year, before the 5 and 10 per cent increases were made.

Mr. COX. Then, if the gentleman's amendment carries the basis fixed for the salary of next year would be the salary they are receiving plus the increase of 5 and 10 per cent. Does the gentleman know how much that would cost?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If my amendment is adopted $120 will be added to what the clerks are receiving now.

Mr. COX. And the salaries are based on the 5 and 10 per cent increase——

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will yield now, the gentleman is entirely mistaken about that. That $120 will only be added to the basic salary, but we provide here that in no case shall a person receive an amount of more than 30 per cent of his salary, but in determining what his salary is as a basic salary then we say this 5 and 10 per cent shall be eliminated. That only affects messenger boys and charwomen and a few persons of that kind. It does not affect the great majority of the clerks.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I decline to yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think anyone reading this committee amendment as it is presented to the House, those who wish to see a reasonable, proper increase given to clerks, will put the construction on it that I put on it. The proviso provides that the salary to which the $120 shall be added shall be the old salary—that is, the salary of last year, before the increase by the addition of the 5 and 10 per cent was given. If the committee amendment is adopted, including the proviso which I would strike out, there will be no increase whatever to many salaries, or the increase will be a very insignificant amount. If we are going to give an increase let us give a reasonable one and strike out the proviso and let the increase be applied to the entire compensation that the clerk is now receiving, including the 5 and 10 per cent increases of last year.

I understand that, according to the committee draft, this $120 is to be added to last year's salary, before the 5 or 10 per cent was made. If I am wrong—and I am often wrong—I would ask to have the House follow the line I suggest, so that this bill shall read that the $120 shall be added to what the clerks are receiving now.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] entirely misunderstands the effect of his amendment. The amendment would not have the effect he suggests at all. The proviso to which he refers simply has reference to the salary that shall be considered in determining whether or not the increase amounts to more than 30 per cent. The provision immediately preceding is to the effect that no increase shall be more than 30 per cent of the total compensation; then this proviso to the effect that the basic salary shall be considered and not the basic salary with the addition of the 5 or 10 per cent increases.

The present 5 and 10 per cent increases are for the current year only. They can not be projected over into another year by simply striking out language in this bill. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would simply be to leave no basis of computation explanatory of the 30 per cent limitation immediately preceding it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. But, so far as leaving or placing in force and effect the present current increases of 5 and 10 per cent, it would have no effect whatever.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman will notice that the first part of my amendment says, "If the total compensation received during the present fiscal year shall be increased by $120."

Mr. MONDELL. I did not so understand the gentleman's amendment. I understood his amendment was only to strike out.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That "the amount that the employees is receiving during the present fiscal year."

Mr. MONDELL. In which event the gentleman's amendment—which, I understood, was an amendment to strike out—as to proposed increases would not be equitable, for it would not reach the higher salaries in any event, or would not be in harmony with the provisions of the bill in any way. I did not think the amendment would in any event increase the compensation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There are two parts to my amendment. On line 3, I add words to this effect, that to the total amount of salary or compensation received during the year 1918, $120 shall be added. The proviso would have the $120 added to the salary of last year, paying no attention to the 5 and 10 per cent increase.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield further.

The proviso which the gentleman strikes out has no reference whatever to additional compensation, and therefore striking it out would have no effect in increasing the compensation to the clerks. And any language that he may have added in connection with his motion to strike out would not increase the compensation, but, if I now understand it correctly, only confuses the question as to what clerks are to receive the full additional compensation we are proposing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMAS: At the end of line 15, page 2, insert the following:

"All department stores and all persons selling merchandise in the District of Columbia shall pay each of their employees a wage of not less than $3 per day, and all newspapers published in said District shall pay each of their compositors, pressmen, and reporters a wage of not less than $4 per day, and shall pay all other employees a wage of not less than $3 per day.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not suppose that a gentleman——

Mr. CALDWELL. I make the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS (continuing). Who is willing to give the railroads $500,000,000 would want to deprive these few girls of a raise in wages.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I know it is out of order, but I thought——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAMLIN offers the following amendment: In line 3, page 1, strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert "$1,500." In line 7, same page, after the word "the," insert the word "following." In the same line strike out the word "of," the dollar sign, and the figures "120," and in the same line after the word "annum" insert the following: "Those receiving $840 or less, $200; those receiving more than $840 and not exceeding $1,000, $150; those receiving more than $1,000 and not exceeding $1,500, $100." Then strike out all of the first proviso.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will not meet the objection that the so-called Keating amendment met at the hands of the gentleman from Kentucky, to wit, that it will add several million dollars to the cost of the pay of clerks in the employ of the Government. If this amendment is adopted, it will not increase the amount carried by the committee's proposed amendment, but will actually reduce the total amount somewhat. Less than one-half of all clerks affected by the proposition of the committee are now getting $1,000 and less.

My amendment is based on the following theory: I take off from the high-salaried clerks part of the award of the committee and add it to those lower down the scale of salaries. To be more specific, under my amendment the people in the employ of the Government receiving $480 would get an increase of $200, which would bring their salaries up to $680; those receiving $720 would get $920; those receiving $840 would get $1,040; then those receiving $1,000 would receive an increase of $150, and would get $1,150; those receiving $1,200 would receive $100 increase, and would get $1,300; those receiving $1,400 would get $1,500; and those receiving $1,500 would get $1,600.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will.

Mr. EVANS. What would a man receive under your amendment who now gets $900?

Mr. HAMLIN. A man now receiving $900 would get an increase of $200, and would therefore get $1,100.

Mr. EVANS. What would a man receive who gets $1,000?

Mr. HAMLIN. He would receive an increase of $150, and would get $1,150.

I do not pretend, Mr. Chairman, that this is scientifically worked out. I think that is a physical impossibility. But the purpose is—and I think this approaches it—to take care of those who need taking care of the most.

I have in mind, for instance, an old man, an old Irishman, employed in this Capitol, the most faithful old man I ever knew in my life, a man who has been serving this Government for 35 years, whose hands are drawn with rheumatism, yet he goes about his work each day and smiles cheerfully. I asked him the other day how many years he had been employed here, and he said, "Thirty-five years." He said, "I have raised and educated the boys and girls. I do not complain, and I am not complaining now; but, by George, with the present high cost of living it sets me guessing to meet my bills at the end of a month. That old fellow is receiving $87 per month when you count the 10 per cent increase, which is eliminated, of course, if the first proviso in the committee's proposition, and which I seek to strike out, is left in the bill.

I had a talk the other day with a lady who is very highly educated, so much so that there are few men in this House, I suspect, her equal in that regard, and who is employed in one of the departments in what is known as the foreign service—not in the State Department, however—and she speaks, reads, and writes three different languages fluently. I will not attempt to describe her apparel. She said that on $1,100 she was endeavoring to support two children and an invalid husband. We know that we have other employees of this Government who are receiving salaries so small that they can not provide themselves with the comforts of life.

I am unalterably opposed to increasing at this time the salaries of people who get $1,800 and above that amount; but I am just as much in favor, in the interest of justice and fairness, of doing something for the people who are working for a wage that they can not live on decently, to say nothing about comfort [applause], and it is for those people that I am pleading this evening.

I know that the action of the Committee on Appropriations seems liberal when we consider that their proposition carries an additional appropriation of $28,000,000 for these proposed increases. I am not attempting to increase that amount, but I am seeking to leave it off the $1,600, $1,800, and $2,000 clerks, who can live without the increase, and put it on the salaries of those down the line, who at present can scarcely keep soul and body together. My proposition will not carry as much money as the proposition of the committee.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Does that reduce the salary of any clerk under what it is this year?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; not when you strike out the first proviso.

Mr. SLOAN. And it means an increase of 5 per cent this year?

Mr. HAMLIN. It strikes out the proviso that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] was talking about awhile ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That proviso in the existing law merely increases the compensation for the present fiscal year.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know it.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the present fiscal year is ended, there is no authorization whatever for continuing that percentage increase. Strike that out, and these men above $1,500, up to $1,800, whom the gentleman's amendment would exclude, who are to-day getting the 5 per cent increase, would not receive as much salary as they are receiving at the present time.

Mr. HAMLIN. As I construe that first proviso, it virtually cancels the pretended increase to those who have been receiving the 5 and 10 per cent after you get up to a certain limit. Now, I say this does not add to the sum total of the increase, but it does fix it so as to give the increase to those who need it most, and that is all I am asking for, and I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to oppose the amendment?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. In the annual report of the Postmaster General is found this language:

> It has been the earnest effort of the department to fix the standard rates of pay for the different classes of work at from 15 per cent to 30 per cent above the average rates paid for similar service by the leading commercial institutions of the country. The same rule has been followed throughout the Postal Service in fixing salaries that are not fixed by law. Whenever an employee or a group of employees is found to be receiving salaries below the standard the department will make an effort to secure appropriate increases.

Our investigation developed one fact, that the standard of pay in the Post Office Department was practically the standard of pay throughout the Government service. That is, the Government is paying from 15 per cent to 30 per cent more than private institutions are paying for the same grade of work.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. No; I can not yield. Now, the gentleman would cut off from the operation of this increase every person who receives $1,500 a year or more. In one department of the Government where there are several hundred clerks an investigation was had, and it was found that 15 per cent of the clerks who received $1,200 a year and less were single, while in that same department, of the clerks receiving $1,500 a year or more, 85 per cent were married. The gentleman would take from the head of the family, the man whom we want to help support his family—he would take from that great bulk of Government employees, the men who are married, the increase which they so much need to take care of their families. He would take away any increase to help them support those families, by depriving them of this increased compensation.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman does not claim that there is nobody married and working for the Government unless he is drawing $1,500 a year or more?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman was talking instead of listening when I made my statement or he would not ask that foolish question. Now, what are the facts? We ought to know what we are doing when we legislate here. In the bill before the House where are the positions paying less than $660? They are the messengers, the charwomen, and no one else. The gentleman would give to the charwomen and the junior messengers, the only persons appropriated for in this act receiving salaries of less than $600, an increase. Every time some one says he wants to help the low-paid Government clerks he is unable to put his finger on the low-paid clerks. They are not found in this bill, except the junior messengers and messenger boys and charwomen.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Commissioner of Patents told me only recently—I am betraying no confidence—that he was permitted to pay young lady stenographers only $720 a year, and that he could not get them at that price; that the Civil Service Commission had just a few days before certified to him 23 names, and he had wired every one of them, and only 1 of them would come to Washington.

Mr. GOOD. We authorized a lump sum for the Commissioner of Patents, and gave him every dollar he wanted to make copies of certain patents, which copies are sold.

Mr. HAMLIN. But you did not give him what he wanted to pay these clerks, not a penny.

Mr. GOOD. The testimony before the committee was that private institutions in Washington pay stenographers $60 a month, and that the same stenographers when in Government service get from $1,000 to $1,100 a year. Now, those are the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 1, line 1, after the word "that," insert the word "hereafter"; and after the word "received," on the 5th line, page 1, strike out all down to and including the word "annum," on line 7, and insert the following: "$120 per annum in addition to the basic salary for the fiscal year 1919."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that it is not subject to a point of order. If the gentleman from Tennessee wants to state the ground of his point of order, I will yield to him.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My point of order is based on the ground that the amendment provides for employees of the Government during the fiscal year 1919. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois undertakes to make it permanent law. In addition, I do not think the proposed amendment is germane.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is pending to the legislative bill proposes to change the law and authorize an increased compensation, and it legislates broadly on many other subjects. It is not a question of appropriation at all; it is a question of legislation in which we are seeking to change the basic law, broadening the power of the Appropriations Committee. The committee had no power to present this amendment until the House passed a special rule broadening the powers of the committee. The rule itself provides, and the understanding was and is that any germane amendment would be in order on the committee amendment to the pending bill. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that inasmuch as this amendment is to fix the salary of these employees of the Government, that whether it seeks to fix the salary for the current year or for a series of years makes no difference; that if one is in order the other is in order. I do not seek a change in the policy except to make it permanent; I do not seek to change the language of the amendment further than to say that instead of making this increased compensation for a single year, it shall be made for all time. That is the difference, and I submit that that is in order under the rules. I submit that my amendment is germane to the pending amendment and that it ought not under any circumstances to be ruled out on the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the rule, while it provides for the consideration of this amendment, only provides that it shall be considered under the general rules of the House. But this amendment that the gentleman from Illinois seeks to put on this bill proposes to widen the scope of the amendment and instead of appropriating this increase for one year the gentleman proposes to make it permanent law, which to my mind is not in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. This provision of the amendment presented by the committee does not appropriate at all; it is a basic law authorizing the appropriation to be made at the rate of $120 per annum in addition to the compensation now being paid.

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague will remember that this is only for the next fiscal year; that whatever appropriations are made are to pay the clerks for this next fiscal year and only makes it one year. It does not attempt to make permanent law. Now, if this amendment should be offered next year it would be ruled out of order.

Mr. MADDEN. If my amendment is adopted it would not be necessary to offer an amendment next year, for it would be the law of the land.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I say, which is contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. In the absence of the rule the Appropriations Committee would not be authorized to come before the House with any such amendment as is now pending. They have no power to offer legislation in the absence of the rule. I maintain that it is within the power of the House to offer any germane amendment and to make it permanent law, or make it for five years or two years, or any number of years.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman must remember that he is changing this amendment entirely, because this amendment provides for a certain period, and now the gentleman attempts by his amendment to make this apply until it shall be repealed, so that he is endeavoring to put that kind of an amendment on it that in my mind is against the rules of the House, and should be ruled out of order. He not only makes it for this year, but he makes it permanent.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I want to do.

Mr. FOSTER. But an amendment to do that is not in order.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not?

Mr. FOSTER. It is against the rules of the House to enlarge the scope of this amendment in that way.

Mr. MADDEN. But we are not working under the rules of the House. We are working under a special rule.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, we are working under the general rules of the House. The gentleman has not read the rule.

Mr. MADDEN. Neither has the gentleman, and he is a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that on page 3736 of the RECORD there is to be found a copy of the rule. The rule says that it shall be in order, the general rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, to consider the following amendment, and then recites the amendment. The Chair, on page 3741 of the RECORD, when the amendment was offered as a new section by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], ruled that the amendment would be subject to an amendment just the same as if it were a bill. The whole question for the Chair to decide, in my opinion, humble though it be, is a question as to whether this would be germane to the subject. The subject is whether or not we shall give these employees an increase of pay, and I think, under the circumstances, that it is germane. It is thoroughly within the scheme that has been proposed, and I see no reason in the world why the Chair should not sustain his former ruling and comply with the rule that the House has adopted and overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to sustain his former rulings, and at the same time conform to the rules of the House. This matter stands as follows: The committee might have reported the amendment now under consideration, as a part of the legislative bill. In that event this matter would have been subject to a point of order, and once made, the point of order would have been sustained, and the offending matter stricken from the bill. But suppose this point of order had not been made. Then the paragraph would have remained in the bill, subject to amendment under the rules. One of these rules is that when offending matter is allowed to remain in a bill, it is then in order to perfect that matter, by appropriate, germane amendments. But that rule does not mean, and should never be held to mean that the presence of illegal matter in a paragraph of an appropriation bill, thereby makes in order any amendment to the paragraph, however much that amendment may increase the original illegality or however far it falls short of being a perfecting amendment. On the contrary, the rule is well established, and the Chair referred to the precedents a few days ago, that while it is in order to amend a paragraph and perfect the otherwise illegal matter by germane amendments, these amendments must not add new and additional illegalities.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman indulge me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the Chair then hold that it would be improper to move to strike out the item that I am seeking to amend?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all. Such a motion would be perfectly in order. The Chair was on the point of illustrating the situation, by reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. What does this amendment propose to do? Not to perfect the matter contained in the committee amendment, but to add a new element of illegality. It would be in order for the gentleman to move to strike out the paragraph. It would also be in order for him to move to increase the amounts proposed to be paid to the clerks. The precise respect in which this amendment would be out of order, if the rule had not made it in order, is that for the duration of this appropriation bill it proposes to increase the compensation of certain indicated clerks, beyond the limits fixed by law. It would be entirely in order to deal with that particular illegality, by an amendment to increase, or diminish the amounts proposed to be paid, or by a motion to strike out the paragraph or by some other germane amendment, but that is not what the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois undertakes to do. It proposes to make this increase permanent law, thereby adding a new and large element of illegality to the paragraph. This addition of a new element of illegality in the way of legislation, can not be fairly construed as a germane, perfecting amendment of the paragraph. The precedents appropriate to this ruling have been heretofore cited in another decision.

For the reasons given the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the amendment is out of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "reasons" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ability and qualifications."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am led to offer this amendment to perfect this section, because I am told by members of the committee that there are approximately 41,000 new employees since June 30, 1917, and a very considerable number of them, I suspect, are in the District of Columbia. I want to read an item which I desire the Members here to pay attention to, as appearing in the public press of Washington, which expresses very frankly what seems to be the local attitude. I read from an article from the Washington Post of Thursday, January 3, 1918, as follows:

Many measures of vital importance to the civic and economic welfare of the District are pending before Congress which to-day resumes its deliberations after the holiday recess. Of prime interest, because they promise in the near future to put more money into the pockets of thousands of Washingtonians, are the measures for the increase of the salaries of Government clerks.

I read that in connection with the amendment which I offered because I think this standard should be held, lest these appropriations be awarded without merit. It is very frank of this publication to say that this measure is of prime importance, because it puts more money into the pockets of thousands of Washingtonians; but it is of much more importance that the money remain, if possible, in the possession of those to whom it lawfully should be given. Therefore the amendment I offer relates to the striking out of the word "reasons" and to the substitution therefor of the words "ability and qualifications." The legislation as it now reads provides that any head of a department, by certifying the reasons, may give this increase to a man or woman who came into the service after June 30, 1917. The word "reasons" is there. It is one that may be adapted to almost any sort of meaning. I submit there should be a standard of ability and qualification. It is eminently proper, in many instances, that these men and women who come here should obtain an increase, but if the increase be given it should be given only because of ability and qualification. That should be the test of the employment; it is the test of private employment and it should be the test of public employment, and I submit in all good reason to the membership of this committee that the word "reasons" should be stricken out and that the words I have suggested, "ability and qualifications," as controlling the certification of allowance of the additional amount, should be substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "of," in line 3, strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert the figures "$1,800"; and in line 7, after the word "annum," strike out the rest of the line and all of lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and all of line 12, down to and including the word "annum" in said line 12.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment which I have offered and which has just been read from the Clerk's desk, if adopted, will be to make the bill provide a salary increase only to those employees who receive $1,800 or less per year. The bill as it now stands, if I interpret it correctly, provides for salary increases of $120 per annum to all employees who receive $2,000 or less and for the employees who receive between $2,000 and $2,100 it is provided that they shall also receive enough salary to bring their compensation to $2,120 per annum. Now, what my amendment does is to simply substitute the figures $1,800 for the figures $2,000 on line 3, and then strike out the proviso of the bill that says, "that such employees as receive a total annual compensation at a rate more than $2,000 and less than $2,120 shall receive an additional compensation at such rate per annum as may be necessary to make their salaries, plus their additional compensation, at the rate of $2,120 per annum."

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I just want to explain to the gentleman the reason for that. Unless you have some such provision even in your case you would have a man at $1,800 getting $120, making $1,920, or more money than the man who is ahead of him at $1,900.

Mr. BLACK. I understand perfectly well the reason for the proviso to which I have referred, and if my amendment is adopted, substituting $1,800 for $2,000, then, no doubt, additional language should be inserted so as to cover the case just mentioned by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], and in the event my amendment is adopted I will offer a proviso reading as follows:

Provided, That such employees as receive a total annual compensation at a rate more than $1,800 and less than $1,920 shall receive additional compensation at such a rate per annum as may be necessary to make their salaries, plus their additional compensation, at the rate of $1,920 per annum.

Now, I want to give this additional reason for my amendment. After the consideration of the war finance bill, which we will take up after this bill is finished, I understand a rule will be brought into the House from the Committee on Rules providing for the consideration of the salary increase bill for the postal employees which the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have recently favorably reported, and which is now on the calendar.

Now, in that bill we will find the salary increases which it provides are limited to those who are receiving $1,800 or less per annum, and therefore I think that the same provision ought to be written into this bill.

A while ago the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING], in his argument in support of his amendment to raise the proposed increase from $120 to $180 per annum, referred to the fact that the Post Office bill, which we are soon to take up, contains reclassification provisions by which all of the postal clerks in first and second class offices, all of the letter carriers in first and second class post offices, and all of the railway mail clerks will be reclassified and the pay of each grade advanced $200 over what it now is under existing law. It is true that the bill does contain that provision, but speaking for myself, as one member of the committee, I expect to fight it on the floor of the House. I hope that the House will have the good judgment and sense of justice to the public revenues to strike it from the bill. Now is no time to be undertaking to reclassify Government employees and to be enacting permanent law on the subject. In my opinion, to do so at this particular time, when we are appealing to the people everywhere to be economical, is indefensible, and I will not believe that Congress will pass this so-called reclassification measure.

Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] to the additional charge on the Treasury which will be added if the postal salary-increase bill is enacted into law with the reclassification provision retained. The first year the additional cost of the measure would be $25,686,195, the second year the additional cost would be $36,912,795, the third year it would be $48,338,795, and would reach the peak of additional cost the fourth year, when it would settle upon the revenue of the Postal Department an additional cost of about $54,000,000. And I take it for granted that the House is not going to vote for a proposition of that kind; and if it does vote for it, it will vote for it in the face of a showing of the facts that will be made on the floor of this House at that time.

I take it that the House will want to give the postal employees increases in salaries which will correspond substantially to the increases which we are giving in this bill. That would, it seems to me, be in harmony with the principles of justice and fair play, both to the Government and to the postal employees, and the foundations of justice are that the common weal be served. I hope that my amendment inserting $1,800 instead of $2,000 will be adopted and that the limitation will be adhered to when we come to vote upon the postal salary-increase bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, this paragraph proceeds upon the theory that we are increasing the compensation of Government employees in order to enable them to meet the increased cost of living here in the District of Columbia and throughout the country. If this assumption is true, then there ought to be with each passing year fewer and fewer applicants for these Government positions. I think the Government ought to be a model employer. I think it ought to pay as much, and a little more, than is paid for similar services in private life. Back in 1884, when we commenced to make a record of these examinations and when these salaries prevailed which they say were sufficient then, because the cost of living was not as high then as it is now, according to the reports of the Civil Service Commission 3,542 people took these examinations. Now, as the years have passed, it is said the expense of living has increased and these salaries have not increased in proportion thereto; and, if that is true, fewer people ought to take these examinations.

Now, bearing in mind that in 1884 3,542 people took these examinations, I want to call attention to the fact that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, 154,722 people took the examinations. Always, for each succeeding year, there were as many as four applicants for every Government job. And yet you are going to make these positions still more attractive at the expense of private business in this country. The figures are not available for 1917 and 1918, but it is safe to say that more than 250,000 people per year are now applicants for these Government positions and actually take the examinations.

Now, I want to call attention to a recent article in a Washington morning paper. Here in Washington we have no great national paper discussing, from a national and a dignified standpoint, questions of this character. Here we have only local papers, every one of them always favoring any kind of a charge on the Treasury of the United States, provided the money they get out of the Treasury or a considerable part of it, is to be expended here in Washington. But here is an article appearing in a morning newspaper, discussing the very subjects we are discussing now, and which seems to have escaped the censor.

After reviewing the inconveniences placed upon the banks by the enlistment of their young clerks in the Army, and by their forced service under the draft law, they call attention to the fact that the banks have been educating girls to take their places, and the article, which is a column in length, proceeds to say:

True, they knew nothing about banking, but bank officials were hopeful that they could be trained and would gradually become useful.

This proved true, and the girls rapidly became skilled in check sorting, adding-machine work, typewriting, telephone operating, filing, and even in the lighter work in the tellers' cages.

But just so soon as their training progressed to the point where they were of real value to the banks Uncle Sam came along and offered them double the salaries they were getting and much shorter working hours.

The result has been that scores of young women, many from out of town, have accepted bank positions merely to use them as a stepping stone into the more lucrative and distinctly "softer" Government jobs.

The bankers endeavored to check this by raising salaries, but this proved of little avail, since the Government pays more than double for the same amount of work than the banks can possibly pay.

This presents the matter from the correct standpoint in this country. We are paying these clerks now twice as much as banks can pay, twice as much as railroads can pay, twice as much as public-service companies can pay, but we propose to still further increase the burdens of the taxpayers of the country by paying them still larger salaries. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The provisions of this section shall not apply to the following: Employees paid from the postal revenues and sums which may be advanced from the Treasury to meet deficiencies in the postal revenues; employees of the Panama Canal on the Canal Zone; employees of the Alaskan Engineering Commission in Alaska; employees whose duties require only a portion of their time, except charwomen, who shall be included; employees whose services are utilized for brief periods at intervals; employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangements with the Governments of the United States or the District of Columbia; employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation; and employees who may be provided with special allowances because of their service in foreign countries. The provisions of this section shall not apply to employees of the railroads taken over by the United States, and nothing contained herein shall be deemed a recognition of the employees of such railroads as employees of the United States.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANFORD: Page 2, line 19, after the word "revenues" insert the words "employees of the Senate and House of Representatives."

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair kindly have the amendment read again? We could not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee, except to say this: If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, it will cut out from any participation in this increase a great many persons who draw very small salaries. It is a well-known fact that the salaries are not large, particularly as applied to the House employees. Some of them are very small. The special policemen who are employed, the laborers, and many of the janitors receive very small salaries.

Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman tell the House on whose recommendation the 100 policemen are appointed?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know.

Mr. SANFORD. If the gentleman will look into it, he will find we have got about 30 policemen out of the 100.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that none of them were appointed on my recommendation.

Mr. SANFORD. The chief tells us that he can use about 30 out of the hundred.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As the gentleman knows, these special policemen here draw very small salaries. There is no regular policeman whose salary is more than $100 a month. The largest salary paid to a messenger is $100 a month. Now, all of these employees have been receiving the 5 and 10 per cent increase during the current year. The proposition is up to you gentlemen as to whether or not you are going to take away from them that increase and at the same time deny them that provided in this amendment and put them back upon the salary they drew years ago and before the present increase in cost of living.

The gentleman refers to the fact that the secretaries to Members of Congress are not participating in this increase. Gentlemen know my own position, how anxious I was and how earnestly I endeavored to have the Members' clerks placed on the roll. That was not done by the House. But, notwithstanding that fact, it is true that only a year ago the Members' clerks were given a $500 increase, or at least that sum was added to the amount allowed each Member for clerical help. I assume that the Members' clerks have been taken care of in that increase made by act of Congress. I do not think it is fair, since we are undertaking to increase the pay of the regular Government employees, to deny the employees of the House and Senate, drawing small salaries, the right to participate in it. It seems to me an unfair and unjust discrimination.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SANFORD) there were—ayes 53, noes 61.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. SANFORD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 64, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, after the word "intervals," insert "except temporary employees of the Government Printing Office."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this amendment, or something similar, is not necessary to take care of the employees of the Government Printing Office, a large part of whom must be temporary employees? I understand that the temporary employees receive 5 per cent, but by this amendment of the committee those are excepted and it would leave the regular employees receiving certain wages and the temporary employees at less wages. The gentleman understands that there is a large work going on in the Government Printing Office, and it is necessary to have available at all times men known as substitutes or temporary employees.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no purpose of the committee to exclude employees who are employed for any considerable length of time. The gentleman will note that this reads "for brief periods of time."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. These men are employed for brief periods. A man may work three days in the Government Printing Office and then go to work for three weeks or more in some office down town.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In the case the gentleman cites, I do not see why they should give him an increase of pay.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. He is a printer and the wages are regulated in all these things. The Government may not need one to-night, but when they do need an extra number of substitutes they would have to go in and work at a less price than the regular employees. In other words, this is a skilled class, and if the wages, say, of linotype operators is 60 cents, and under this will be 62 or 65, 65 cents would be the scale, and the substitutes coming in would only get 60 cents. I put it up to the chairman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will understand that the purpose is to provide not merely for the increased cost of living, not for temporary employees——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman will understand that these substitute printers earn their entire living in the business. What I want to get at is, Suppose they get two nights a week from the Government Printing Office and the rest down town in the employ of another printing office.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In the case referred to by the gentleman they earn their living in other employment, and this temporary employment for a night here and a night there is simply what might be called a "pickup." It does not enter into their regular employment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can not agree with the gentleman. Here is a printer that gets perhaps 20 nights' work as an emergency employee, but the Government Printing Office wants to keep him in town, and perhaps after a month he gets 30 days more. I am satisfied that this amendment is needed in there as a matter of necessity to prevent confusion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that this increase which is $10 a month should apply, for instance, to a printer or any other person who works one day or one night for the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. I doubt if it is paid at the rate of $10 a month. I think it will be by the hour. These printers are paid by the hour, probably. The superintendent of the Government Printing Office, with the consent of the auditor, would arrange a rate per hour for the men, whether employed 20 days or 30 days or 2 days. It will be fixed under this law at so much per hour to these regular employees. I am sure that this condition I speak of will arise.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This amendment, of course, does not seek to take care of the class of employees to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Absolutely not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I mean those who work for a brief period of time. This is intended only for those who work for the Government and who make their living by working for the Government. When it comes to a person, for instance, who watches for forest fires or who may be called in for a week——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But I contend that a substitute printer who lies around here and works 20 days per month, filling in at the Government Printing Office, he is to all intents and purposes a regular printer, although he is not employed by the year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If he works for any extended time for the Government, my own idea is that the comptroller would hold he is entitled to the increase, and I think he ought to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were—ayes 18, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected

The Clerk read as follows:

Such employees as are engaged on piecework, by the hour, or at per diem rates, if otherwise entitled to receive the additional compensation shall receive the same at the rate provided in this section when their fixed rate of pay for the regular working hours and on the basis of 313 days in the said fiscal year would amount to $2,000 or less: Provided, That this method of computation shall not apply to any per diem employees regularly paid a per diem for every day in the year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 19, strike out the word "provided" and insert "to which they are entitled."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COX. What effect will that have?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is simply to perfect the paragraph in the matter of form. In other words, it might be held they are entitled to the $120, even though under the preceding paragraph they are not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the words "who otherwise is entitled to receive the same," in lines 14 and 15, should not be transposed so that they should follow the word "anyone," in line 13.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think it is just a question of judgment as to form.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the committee amendment.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask the chairman of the committee what trust funds are referred to here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That relates to Indian trust funds and certain miscellaneous trust funds.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, insert at the end of the amendment as a new paragraph the following:

"No increase herein shall apply to salaries or personal services in any department, bureau, office, or independent establishment of the United States which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand that by agreement there is an hour of general debate upon this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That was the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 10358, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

A bill (S. 3752) to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution 1 A.

Joint resolution relating to the privilege of sending mail without the payment of postage.

Whereas every person who is in the service of his country in the military or naval forces of the United States should be aided in retaining that close touch with the folks at home which means so much to them all; and

Whereas we are eager to give every assistance possible to those who are doing brave work at the front for us all; and

Whereas the cost of postage on mail matter is frequently of serious moment to those whose chief source of income has been taken away when a husband or son or brother has gone into the Army or Navy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin does respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may make it possible for mail matter from any person in the military or naval forces of the United States to be transmitted without the payment of postage thereon, under such reasonable restrictions as may be deemed necessary for protection.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Members from this State in the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

LAWRENCE C. WHITTET,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
EDWARD F. DITTMAR,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution No. 10 A.

Joint resolution relating to excess profits and war revenues.

Whereas industrial conditions in Wisconsin and throughout the United States have been fundamentally disturbed by the great world war; and

Whereas increased revenues must be raised with which to meet expenditures occasioned by the war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That we denounce as unpatriotic any effort to make undue profits out of the necessities of the people or the Government, and we heartily commend those business men who have undertaken Government contracts on a cost basis, asking only those reasonable returns to which they are entitled in times of peace; and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon Congress to impose during the war such an increase in taxes on incomes, inheritances, and excess profits as shall reduce incomes to the amount just necessary to secure the requisite cooperation of the various factors in production—land, labor, capital, and talent; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the presiding officers and to each of the Senators and Representatives of this State in the Congress of the United States.

LAWRENCE C. WHITTET,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
EDWARD F. DITTMAR,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution No. 9 A.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States and Hon. Herbert Hoover to investigate into the situation confronting dairy farmers and to take the necessary steps to remedy such situation.

Whereas the conditions confronting the dairy farmers of this State who are producing milk for sale as commercial milk in cities of this and adjoining States and to condensaries is of a grave and serious nature, due especially to the unusually high cost of feed, labor, and other elements that enter into the cost of producing milk and to the prices that have been fixed for such milk by official commissions created therefor, which prices the farmers themselves and others eminently qualified to testify declare are below the actual cost of production; and

Whereas both the producer and consumer must suffer if these conditions are not remedied; for under the operation of nature's law the producer can not continue as such at a loss, and, if he can not produce, it follows that the supply for consumption must decrease: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States and Hon. Herbert Hoover, National Food Administrator, be, and they are hereby, respectfully memorialized to fully investigate into the situation hereinbefore referred to and to take steps as soon as may be possible to protect Wisconsin's greatest industry, namely, the dairy industry, by adjusting, so far as may be possible, the costs of feeds, the principal element entering into the cost of producing milk, and the prices that have been fixed as above stated, with a view to benefiting both consumer and producer of milk and to protecting Wisconsin's most important industry; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be, and he is hereby, directed to forthwith forward a suitably engrossed copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Hon. Herbert Hoover, at Washington, D. C.

LAWRENCE C. WHITTET.,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
EDWARD F. DITTMAR,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I present a petition of the Children of America Loyalty League, signed by several thousand children, asking that the Star-Spangled Banner be made the national hymn by law. I suppose the petition should be referred to the Committee on the Library, and I move its reference to that committee.

To the Hon. FREDERICK HALE.

We, the attendants at the services of the Warren Baptist Church, Warren, Me., Lord's Day, March 3, 1918, believing that only by the most careful conservation of food, fuel and man power can America and her allies win the present war, and aware of the fact that all of these are being worse than wasted, to an alarming degree, through the manufacture and sale of beer, we therefore urge upon you, honorable sir, as Senator from our district, to use your utmost influence and at the earliest possible date to secure national prohibition of the manufacture and sale of beer for the duration of the war and for the period of reconstruction after the war is over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not see a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the Chamber.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am a member of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he desires to take up the Agricultural appropriation bill at this time?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am not aware of the wishes of the chairman of the committee. If the Senator from Utah has something that he wants to bring up now, I shall not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no particular measure to call up unless it would be Senate bill 3783, but I will say that that is a general pension bill and I know it can not be passed between now and 2 o'clock. Therefore, I shall not move to take up the bill at this time.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then, I ask that the Agricultural appropriation bill be taken up and proceeded with.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just one word. I will ask the Senator from Utah if there is not an omnibus pension bill on the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator the Committee on Pensions has not taken up the House bill, but there are two Senate omnibus pension bills on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we might take them up. I make that suggestion, to fill in a little gap, if agreeable to the Senator from Texas.

EXTENSION OF SPUR TRACK IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state to the Senator from Georgia that I made the request a few moments ago that the Agricultural appropriation bill be taken up, and I now renew my request.

Mr. POMERENE. Before that is done I want to ask the Senate to take up a bill reported by the chairman of the District of Columbia Committee with respect to the hospital switch. I do not believe there is any serious objection to it, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3476) to authorize the extension of a spur track or siding from the existing lines of railroad in the District of Columbia across First Street NE., between L and M Streets, to the buildings occupied by the field medical supply depot of the Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the Senator from Ohio asked a few days ago for the consideration of this bill, I suggested that I had communications from parties connected with Sibley Hospital and some people outside, even outside the District of Columbia, asserting that it would work great injury to the hospital, to the patients in the hospital, and so forth, and for that reason I was not prepared to have the bill considered. I have waited since then, and I have heard nothing from either the hospital or others interested in the hospital, and for that reason I shall not object to the consideration of the bill at present.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say that I was asked to bring this matter up yesterday, but in the absence of the chairman of the committee, who has been indisposed, I did not do so. I, too, I may say, have received protests similar to those suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, and at first I confess I was very greatly prejudiced against the bill. I have since gone out there and visited the place, as I know a number of other Senators who are on the District Committee also went out, and I am quite sure that it is not in the least going to interfere with the hospital. If it would, I would not ask that this bill be passed. I know these protests were presented by the very best people and in the utmost good faith, but I think they are simply mistaken in what they think will be the effect of it.

There is a double street car track which passes right in front of the hospital. It has on both sides of it large warehouses, another warehouse in front of it and between the location of the switch and the hospital, and there is also a large apartment house there. I am satisfied that this extension will not in the least disturb the patients in the hospital.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my thought is that, inasmuch as this was adopted in the Senate—and, of course, the attention of the authorities and others interested in this temporary use must have been called to it—if the opposition continued in any violent form they would have communicated with us on the subject.

Mr. POMERENE. I think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I have not heard from any of them. Am I correct, I will ask the Senator from Ohio, in the thought that this is a temporary matter?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. There has been an amendment prepared which will be presented to the Senate, which leaves the spur during the period of the war, and for a certain length of time thereafter. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3476) to authorize the extension of a spur track or siding from the existing lines of railroad in the District of Columbia across First Street NE., between L and M Streets, to the buildings occupied by the field medical supply depot of the Army.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] asked for the consideration of this bill the other evening, I made the statement that I had received hundreds of letters protesting against the building of this track. They all came from people who are interested in the Sibley Hospital. Since then I have asked the Director of the Bureau of Standards if they had made a direct examination into this subject, and I am in receipt of a communication from Dr. Stratton, the Director of the Bureau of Standards. In that letter he states:

> In reply to your verbal inquiry of to-day as to the effect of your supply buildings upon the sounds and other disturbances made by the operation of rolling stock on the proposed sidetrack, I would state that in view of the fact that the proposed track would be surrounded on the south, north, and east by buildings, they would shield to a great extent adjacent buildings from sound on the proposed track. I am of the opinion that the noise from the main track with which the spur is connected would be greater than that caused by the operation of equipment on the spur itself.
> I am asking one of our experts, Dr. P. H. Edwards, to investigate the situation.

I have a copy of that report of Dr. Edwards, which reads as follows:

> After looking carefully over the ground where it is proposed to build a spur track to the field medical supply depot and the arrangements of surrounding buildings, I am convinced that there would be very little, if any, disturbance at the Sibley Hospital from the operation of cars on this spur. It seems quite evident that the western buildings of the depot would practically cut off the noise almost entirely, especially when two stories more are added to these buildings. In my opinion, the noise reaching the hospital would be insignificant compared with that coming from the street car line which runs directly past the hospital. It would probably also be less likely to cause disturbance at the hospital than that arising from the spur tracks going to several coal yards which are almost as near, and which have practically an uninterrupted passage for sound to the hospital.

This is signed by Preston H. Edwards, chief of acoustic section, Bureau of Standards. That being the case, Mr. President, I shall not object to the present consideration of the bill, because I know that great advantage will accrue from the construction of the track.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio permit an inquiry?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely want to refer to some of the statements in the letters from which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just read.

The first statement, that the noises from this track would be largely cut off on the north, south, and east, is not correct. I have gone down there personally and looked the situation over. The street car tracks over which these cars will pass run along what would be called an alley between two concrete buildings that have been constructed for the use of the Government, but those buildings do not come up above the engines that would carry the cars in there. As a matter of fact, so far as the noise of the whistles and similar noises are concerned, there would not be any obstruction north and south. There is a building to the west.

Then there is another suggestion made in one of the letters which the Senator from Utah has read—that if the building on the west is raised two stories the noise would be cut off. If that is done, why, of course, it would cut off those noises; but there is not any assurance that that will be done. There is some proposal to have it done, but there is no assurance that it will be done.

The conclusions in the letter with reference to the injury to the hospital, and so on, as general conclusions, I do not agree with; but I will say, Mr. President, while I have the floor, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio, that I have been very strongly opposed to this spur track going in there. I have opposed it every time the matter has been heretofore presented. It did not get anywhere in the committee until the war situation came up. Some of us insisted upon certain amendments to the bill, if we were to consent to its passage at all. A substitute has been prepared. I do not know that the substitute has been yet read to the Senate. Under that substitute this track will not be used for traffic generally, but will only be used for the handling of supplies of the medical department. It is also made very definite and very certain that it is purely temporary. The committee, I think, was unanimous that this should be made purely a temporary track and that it should be made certain that it will be removed when the emergency passes.

The committee have also provided that it must be done within six months from the termination of the war. Then, as a further protection to the hospital, we have insisted that the bill be so amended that this track can not be used except between the hours of 6 o'clock in the morning and 9 o'clock at night, unless some extreme emergency requires further use.

Mr. President, with those changes, I have not felt justified in opposing the bill. I am satisfied that there will be a minimum of inconvenience to the hospital. I would not myself measure the suffering that might come to inmates of that institution by money or by any expense to which the Government might be put, but it seems to me that with these limitations and restrictions and with the conditions as they are there, especially with the limitation as to the use of the track between the hours of 6 o'clock in the morning and 9 o'clock at night, there will not be any appreciable interference with the use of the hospital or any inconvenience brought to the patients. For those reasons I have not felt disposed to oppose the passage of the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me a moment, I may say that I would be just as much opposed to making this a permanent switch as is the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], but I think under the present conditions, we shall not be seriously inconveniencing the hospital or its inmates, and, all things considered, I really think that this bill in its modified form ought to pass.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to state that I have been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia for a good many years. In 1903 the legislation was adopted under which the present Union Station was constructed, and the Southern Railroad was brought into it through a tunnel under Capitol Hill, by which all grade crossings in the city were eliminated and by which all the railroads coming in from the North have been kept east of First Street NE. It was then understood, I think, by everybody interested in the improvement of the city of Washington, that such should be the policy of the Government hereafter; that railroads should not be permitted to cross First Street and so invade the territory lying west of it. I have in my mind now three different occasions when the owners of property in the block involved under this bill and owners of other blocks lying immediately west of First Street NE. have sought legislation that would enable them to extend spur tracks from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to connect with proposed warehouses on these lots, but in every instance that legislation has been reported adversely, and until this time it never has been done.

At this time a large concrete storehouse has been erected. It is occupied by the Government, and the easterly end of that building is almost flush with First Street. Immediately across that street is a vacant lot, upon which spurs from the Baltimore & Ohio are located, and from which the Government is asking permission to build a spur over First Street which will immediately enter this concrete building, which, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has described, has heavy walls but no roof.

It is claimed, and it appeared before the committee, that it would save the Government $300 a day in expense if it could have trains run into this building, and not only that, but would enable them to ship goods expeditiously for exportation to our armies in France. For this reason the committee consider that it is a real necessity that such spur be constructed.

The committee thoroughly considered the other questions which have been referred to by the Senator from Washington, and a majority reached the conclusion that by having the trains operated only during daylight the noises would not seriously disturb the patients in Sibley Hospital, yet they did not want to break the precedent which has been established concerning the construction of tracks across First Street into that district, and they only reported this bill upon the understanding that it should not be accepted as a precedent for that kind of legislation. If Senators will examine the report by the committee which accompanies this bill they will see that the committee expressly call attention to the policy I have been discussing, and they end their report by saying:

> The only reason the committee have for recommending the accompanying bill is that a war emergency exists which warrants it, that the structure is of temporary character, and its operation so guarded that it will not seriously disturb the patients in Sibley Hospital, and that the structure is to be removed and the street restored wihin six months after the termination of the war.

And further than that, in order that there may be no mistake about it, they lay the specific duty upon the Surgeon General of the United States Army to construct this track, and they also lay the duty upon him to remove the same and restore the street to its present condition immediately after the termination of the war.

In order that this understanding may go down in history, I will ask to have the report printed with my remarks in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

> Mr. SMITH of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following report:
>
> The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3476) to authorize the extension of a spur track or siding from the existing lines of railroad in the District of Columbia across First Street NE., between L and M Streets, to the buildings occupied by the field medical supply depot of the Army, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass, with the following amendment:
>
> Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:
> "That authority is hereby granted the Surgeon General of the United States Army to construct, maintain, and operate a temporary single-track overhead siding across First Street NE., between L and M Streets, to the building or buildings in square 673, occupied by the field medical supply depot of the Army:
> "Provided, That the siding herein authorized shall not extend westwardly beyond a point 569 feet and 9 inches east of the present site of Sibley Hospital or any of its buildings; and shall be limited to the use of the Medical Department of the United States Army; and within six months following the declaration of peace the Surgeon General shall cause said track to be entirely removed from the limits of said street and shall cause the aforesaid street to be restored to its condition prior to the construction of the siding without cost to the District of Columbia.
> "The Surgeon General of the Army shall provide for the construction, maintenance, and removal of this siding as herein authorized and prescribed, and the costs thereof shall be defrayed from the appropriations for the Medical and Hospital Department of the United States Army:
>
> "Provided further, That said track shall be used only between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 9 o'clock p. m. except in cases of extreme emergency."
> The necessity for this legislation lies in the fact that the Government is occupying a large storehouse, between L and M Streets, and which abuts on First Street, as a depot for medical supplies. And in order to expeditiously ship such supplies to our Army in France the construction of the railroad spur mentioned in the bill seems to be a real necessity. Its construction will not only expedite such shipments, but it is estimated will reduce the cost of transportation from the storehouse to the shipping station about $300 per day.

It will be noticed that the bill is so framed that the railroad spur provided for is to be built and entirely controlled by the Surgeon General of the Army and is to be removed and First Street restored to its former condition within six months after the close of the present war.

In this connection the committee desires to place itself upon record as being unanimously opposed to the extension of railroad tracks across First Street for any permanent purpose. They recognize and approve the policy adopted by the Government in 1903 when all of the railroads of the city were compelled to find a terminal in the Union Station and when it was determined that First Street NE. should thereafter become the western boundary of railway constructions.

Since that time several attempts have been made by owners of land west of First Street to procure permission to construct spur lines across such street to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, but in every instance such demands have been refused, and the committee are of the opinion that all such demands should be refused in the future.

The policy not to permit the construction of railroad spurs across First Street was well known in 1903 and has been maintained ever since. Upon the strength of this the city has had a growth eastward toward First Street which would not otherwise have occurred, and among the buildings constructed have been the Sibley Memorial Hospital, the Lucy Webb Hayes Training School, and the Montgomery Apartment House, all upon North Capitol Street, only a short distance away. The directors of these institutions, and other owners of property in the vicinity, vigorously and justly oppose the invasion of the territory between North Capitol Street and First Street by the railroads, and the committee are of the opinion that the Government is in spirit pledged to them to prevent the same.

The only reason the committee have for recommending the accompanying bill is that a war emergency exists which warrants it; that the structure is of temporary character and its operation so guarded that it will not seriously disturb the patients in Sibley Hospital; and that the structure is to be removed and the street restored within six months after the termination of the war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One remark of the Senator from Vermont recalls to my mind an ancient question which, it seems to me, is worthy of more than passing notice. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] referred to the fact that he was here when the Union Station program was made. I also happened to have been here at the same time. A good many years have gone by; even the Senator from Vermont has grown gray since then, to say nothing of myself, and I should like to inquire either of the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Vermont why it is that the old and dilapidated buildings at the north and west of the Senate Office Building should be permitted to remain in their present unsightly state?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can answer that question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to hear the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. So far as I am concerned, I am quite willing that the Senator from Michigan shall be a committee of one to remove them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Ohio will give me authority—such paramount authority as seems to be so easily bestowed in this time of national distress—I think I might work off some of my surplus zeal and energy to good advantage, perhaps better than here, on some of those old and unsightly buildings. I think it is an outrage that those buildings should be permitted to be a blot upon the landscape around the Senate Office Building.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I can give the Senator from Michigan an answer which I believe will be accurate and will not lead to a discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the Senator mean that I am to be foreclosed by what he is to say?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. I had much to do with the legislation which ended in the construction of the Union Station——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator was the father of that program.

Mr. GALLINGER. And with the elimination of grade crossings in the District of Columbia, which were an abomination, and the removal of which was a great triumph in connection with that legislation.

As I understand the matter, when the Government purchased the land between the Senate Office Building and the Union Station and some land opposite the Senate Office Building, a commission was appointed to appraise it. In fact, most of it was owned by private parties, but a portion of it was owned by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. That commission made a report, putting what I thought was a fair value upon that property, but some overzealous individual carried the matter to the President of the United States, and by some method, with which I am not exactly familiar, the commission was discharged and a new commission was created to again estimate the value of the property. That commission reported a considerably less amount in value than the first commission had done. The private-property holders—that property being held in the air so that they could not rent it and could not sell it under the circumstances—had to take the allowance made by the second commission; but the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., which could afford to go into litigation, resisted it, saying that the amount allowed by the first commission was a fair amount and ought to have been granted without controversy. The matter is still in litigation, as I understand. I do not know why it should remain in litigation so long; the lawyers will know better about that than I do.

I noticed yesterday when coming down the avenue from the Union Station that one old building was being dismantled; and I had hoped that that was the beginning of the end of which the Senator from Michigan complains, because it is in the nature of an outrage that those old buildings should remain.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I saw the building in a dilapidated state, and I noticed the work of its removal ceased; and the probabilities are that in a much less attractive form than it was before it may be permitted to stand there. Now, as I understand, those buildings have already been acquired by the Government and are not concerned in the Baltimore & Ohio contention.

Mr. GALLINGER. If they are not, of course they ought to be immediately removed. There is no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There are many unsightly buildings around the city of Washington, but it is inexcusable for the Government to leave such unsightly buildings right here in the very shadow of the Capitol.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Michigan is seeking information which many of us desire. I think I can give it. That is the visible evidence of Government ownership. It is proceeding as expeditiously as those experts generally do. I understand this new commission—I think I am correct in this—are getting $20 a day as long as this enterprise known as the Plaza here is on foot. I predict it is going to last many years as an offense against the esthetic taste of Senators who look out of a window that way and an offense against landscape gardening. I predict it will be there many years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. At that rate of compensation, I have not any doubt about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That authority is hereby granted the Surgeon General of the United States Army to construct, maintain, and operate a temporary single-track overhead siding across First Street NE. between L and M Streets, to the building or buildings in square 673 occupied by the Field Medical Supply Depot of the Army: Provided, That the siding herein authorized shall not extend westwardly beyond a point 560 feet and 9 inches east of the present site of Sibley Hospital or any of its buildings; and shall be limited to the use of the Medical Department of the United States Army; and within six months following the declaration of peace the Surgeon General shall cause said track to be entirely removed from the limits of said street and shall cause the aforesaid street to be restored to its condition prior to the construction of the siding without cost to the District of Columbia.

The Surgeon General of the Army shall provide for the construction, maintenance, and removal of this siding as herein authorized and prescribed, and the costs thereof shall be defrayed from the appropriations for the Medical and Hospital Department of the United States Army: Provided further, That said track shall be used only between the hours of 6 o'clock antemeridian and 9 o'clock postmeridian except in cases of extreme emergency.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not noticed that any suggestion has been made along the line that I am going to interrogate the Senator from Ohio. Very likely I ought not to ask the question, but I have wondered whether anyone has taken into consideration the advisability of constructing an electric road covering this short distance.

Mr. POMERENE. I can not answer the Senator; I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that that would obviate a great deal of noise, but I have not noticed that anybody has made the suggestion. It just occurred to me that it might have been a better method than to put in a steam railroad.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say I was not able to be present at all the hearings on this subject, and the suggestion was not made in my presence, at least.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I received a great many protests against this legislation. I do not know whether the officers of Sibley Hospital have acquiesced in the legislation or not. May I ask the Senator from Ohio whether there is any objection to the legislation by the officers of Sibley Hospital?

Mr. POMERENE. There was at first by some of the officers. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] could answer more fully as to the extent of those objections. A good many of them have been withdrawn, I understand. I do not mean to say by that that some of the authorities may not still continue their objections, but they were largely based upon the theory that it was going to be a very serious inconvenience to this hospital. If Senators were to visit that site, as I and a number of my colleagues on the committee have done, I am sure they would be firmly of the opinion that, to say the least of it, it would not be very much inconvenience. I am confident that there will not be as much noise from the moving of those cars as there is every few minutes from the passing of street cars in front of the hospital and between the hospital and the end of the spur.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will yield, being a member of the committee I have made some investigation. I want to say to the Senator there are a great many very large trucks being employed now in hauling from the station to this depot the large supplies which the Government daily is bringing into the city. Those trucks, running constantly almost day and night, cause considerable noise. In my opinion, after having examined the subject very carefully, there will be less noise from the operation of the trains than there is now from the operation of the large number of trucks employed by the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand it is suggested by the War Department that this track shall be built, and that it will be a saving to the Government of a great deal of money.

Mr. POMERENE. Three hundred dollars a day.

Mr. GRONNA. It will be only temporary; it will be only during the war. Of course, on the statement of both Senators that it will not seriously disturb this institution, I shall not object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. While I do not think it would have any binding force and be merely a suggestion, I have observed that the men who run railroad trains like to make as much noise as possible and to blow the whistle on every possible occasion. They seem to seek an opportunity to blow the whistle.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And automobiles.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the Senator from Michigan suggests, the men who run automobiles are quite in the habit of letting the general public know that they are in evidence. I will ask the Senator from Ohio if he would have any objection to add at the end of the amendment, on page 3, the words "and the trains shall be operated with the least possible noise"?

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a mere suggestion. It is all it amounts to.

Mr. POMERENE. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment of the committee the following words: "and the trains shall be operated with the least possible noise."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this bill on Saturday in order that the Sibley Hospital staff and every other person who is interested in the matter might have full opportunity to be heard. Some days have intervened, and I suppose everybody who is really interested in it has made such representations as he saw fit; and the Committee on the District of Columbia having investigated the matter, I do not care to assume the responsibility of undertaking to prevent the passage of the bill.

But I should like to make one observation in regard to it. There is a much more important question involved, I think, in the bill than the particular railroad switch that it authorizes or the interests of Sibley Hospital, because it involves all hospitals in all portions of the city—at least, in the section where the switch is to be located. It is just a question as to where you are going to lay the railroad track in that part of the town. There was a more or less well-defined understanding, according to the opinion of the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who, being for so many years on the District Committee, is familiar with these matters, that that line should be First Street NE.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Northwest.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Northeast. I think I am correct in saying northeast. The Army Medical Corps knew that when they located this warehouse on the west side of that street. Somebody else may come along and locate a warehouse a block still farther west, and come in here and say that it costs the Government $400 a day, and it may cost the Government $400 or $500 a day if some one chooses to exercise the same sort of judgment in the location of this warehouse in locating warehouses in the future in the prohibitive area west of that street, where it is not supposed the railroad track is going to go. There is plenty of area east of this street where a warehouse could be located, and that it is a violation of that general understanding and the insidious encroachment, little by little, bit by bit, upon the section of the city that was intended to be protected from noise and activities of railway transportation that constitutes the vice of this bill in my judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL-BANK ACT.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk Senate bill 4099 with a favorable report from the Committee on Banking and Currency, amending section 5200 of the national-bank act in such a way as to add these words:

And provided further, That any note or notes purchased or discounted by any such association to not exceeding one-half of the capital and surplus of such association, secured by the face value of such note or notes in bonds of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificate of indebtedness of the United States, shall not be considered as money borrowed within the meaning of this section.

The effect of this is to permit national banks to lend on notes secured by liberty bonds or Treasury certificates issued during the war up to 50 per cent of their capital. The bill has the approval of the committee unanimously.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire if it is 50 per cent of the capital or 50 per cent of the capital and surplus?

Mr. OWEN. Fifty per cent of the capital and surplus.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 4099) to amend and reenact section 5200, Revised Statutes of the United States, was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5200, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5200. The total liabilities to any association, of any person, or of any company, corporation, or firm for money borrowed, including in the liabilities of a company or firm the liabilities of the several members thereof, shall at no time exceed one-tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such association actually paid in and unimpaired and one-tenth part of its unimpaired surplus fund: Provided, however, That the total of such liabilities shall in no event exceed 30 per cent of the capital stock of the association. But the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values and the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same shall not be considered as money borrowed: And provided further, That any note or notes purchased or discounted by any such association to not exceeding one-half of the capital and surplus of such association, secured by the face value of such note or notes in bonds of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificate of indebtedness of the United States, shall not be considered as money borrowed within the meaning of this section."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If I understood the Senator, this is an amendment to the national bank act?

Mr. OWEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not the Federal reserve bank act?

Mr. OWEN. No, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Therefore it can only deal with national banks?

Mr. OWEN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the Agricultural appropriation bill before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I renew my request that the Agricultural appropriation bill be laid before the Senate and proceeded with. The chairman of the committee is now here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the so-called Borland amendment is under consideration, as I understand it, at the present time. I want to occupy the attention of the Senate a few minutes in submitting some observations concerning that provision.

Mr. President, so far as the public service is concerned, there is an equality of opportunity but not an equality of efficiency, and because of that fact it is a very difficult matter to legislate on the salary of employees of the Government. One clerk has 100 per cent efficiency, another clerk has 50 per cent or less of efficiency, and yet in any legislation that has been adopted or can be adopted we wipe out that difference in efficiency and give the inefficient clerk of necessity the same salary that the efficient clerk gets. It is unfortunate that it is so. I know clerks who in my judgment are underpaid and greatly underpaid. Some of the higher grades, men and women who are getting larger salaries than the mass of the clerks, are greatly underpaid because of their great efficiency as experts or statisticians, being men and women who have made a special study of the subjects that they handle. I know clerks who are vastly overpaid. On the other hand, the mass of clerks who have been brought into the District of Columbia recently are in my judgment paid twice what they are worth. Some of them will become efficient, some of them may reach the point of 90 or 100 per cent efficiency after a while, but some of them never can in the very nature of things earn the salary that is given them at the present moment. But, as I have already said, that is the chief difficulty in legislating on this subject. In an effort to do equal and exact justice to all, it is impossible of accomplishment, so we have got to do the best we can under existing conditions.

I will not stop to discuss the question whether the clerical force in the departments in Washington are paid more or less than is paid in outside establishments and in outside activities. My opinion is that they are paid a little more liberally, but that perhaps might be controverted, and at best it is immaterial.

In the last session of Congress we increased the salaries of the clerks, in some instances 5 per cent and in others 10 per cent. I favored that, and I understand that a proposition is now before the other House—which will doubtless reach the Senate in due time—and which, if enacted, as it probably will be, will still further increase the salaries of clerks who are getting somewhere from $1,000 to $2,000 per annum. I think that ought to be done. The condition surrounding not only the clerks but people in general, so far as the cost of living is concerned, is so abnormal that we ought not to stick in the bark when it comes to taking a little of the money of the taxpayers to see that the employees of the Government are at least provided with the necessaries of life to an extent that will make them comfortable.

But, Mr. President, so far as the Borland amendment is concerned, I confess, after having given it pretty careful study, that it does not appeal to me as a wise way to legislate on this subject; certainly not unless it shall be amended. It provides simply that, so far as the appropriations made in this particular bill are concerned, no part of the money shall be used unless the clerks work eight hours per day. The statute that was read here yesterday, enacted in 1898, in a period of war, provides that they shall work seven hours a day and shall be subject to call on the part of the department heads, when an emergency requires it, to work longer hours, and presumably that system has been pursued from that time to the present.

I do not think that a very large proportion of the clerks have been asked to work unusual hours, but that a few of them are required to work longer than seven hours a day at the present time goes without saying. It is proper that they should do so; and I hope that they are doing so cheerfully, as some of the clerks tell me they are doing.

It seems to me, if we are going to change the hours during which clerks shall work in the various departments and activities of the Government, that we ought to amend the law of 1898; and if it is desirable to make the standard seven-and-a-half hours or eight hours instead of seven hours, we ought to act courageously and settle the matter in that way; but I agree with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that, if we are going to do that, we ought to provide that the clerks shall be allowed for overtime work. The suggestion the Senator from Georgia made yesterday that, if the clerks are required to work over eight hours, there ought to be an accurate account kept of it, and they should be either paid for overtime work or credited with the number of extra hours work and be excused from work a sufficient number of days later on to cover the excess of time they had labored. I think that a better plan than is the overtime-payment plan.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like, while the Senator is on the floor, to read the amendment I intend to offer, so that I may have the benefit of the Senator's views on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Senator read it, because it rather appealed to me when I heard him suggest it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendment I intend to propose reads as follows:

Provided, That hereafter record shall be kept of all hours of daily work in excess of eight hours by each employee, and employees who have worked extra hours shall be allowed an equal number of hours without work, with full pay, and the holiday shall be given as soon as practicable after the work has been performed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if we are to have an eight-hour day, instead of a seven-hour day, that will be, I think, a wise solution, and one that will do justice to the clerks who are called upon to work over eight hours in emergencies or when the work is in arrears. I shall vote for that amendment if offered; but I am not prepared to commit myself to vote against the motion made by the Senator from Texas, because I am not at all sure that we ought to interfere with this matter at the present time, unless we take up the act of 1898 and amend it, if we think it needs amending. I do not like to have that statute standing on the books, and at the same time have the so-called Borland amendment, simply controlling the appropriations for one department of the Government, injected into an appropriation bill in conflict with the law as it stands at the present time.

We want, Mr. President, to do equal and exact justice in this matter—and I feel sure that every Member of this body feels about it precisely as I do—and we do not want to go about it in a blundering sort of way. I think the Borland amendment as it now stands is a blundering piece of legislation. It has little in it that is scientific or that is calculated to go to the root of the difficulty and correct any evils that may exist at the present time.

As a rule, I have no doubt the clerks in the departments are faithful and honest and are discharging their duties conscientiously. It is true that as to a great many of them seven hours a day is all that they ought to work. We are face to face with an unfortunate situation so far as our departmental employees are concerned. We have no law that retires them after they become inefficient, and they are kept in the service long after efficiency comes to an end. I went into a room in a certain department of the Government not long ago and it looked to me very much like an old ladies' home; there were women there who ought not to be required to sit at desks even one-half of eight hours a day, and I can not conceive that they are of very much service to the Government. Men over 80 years of age are being employed in clerical work in some of the departments of the Government, and, while there may be cases where they can still continue to do good service, the fact is that most of them are not capable of performing the service that is expected of them.

Now, Mr. President, I think I have stated my position, which in a sense is somewhat contradictory, perhaps, but my desire to do the right thing is so intense that I do not want to make any mistake in the attitude I shall take or in the vote I shall cast. For that reason I shall vote for the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia to amend the bill so that if the Borland amendment shall receive the support of a majority of the Senate it will be greatly improved by that amendment of the Senator from Georgia; but whether the amendment shall be agreed to or not, I shall hold in reserve my vote on the motion made by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator yield to me, that I may offer the amendment?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I offer the amendment that I send to the desk, to follow the Borland amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, line 16, after the word "day," it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That hereafter record shall be kept of all hours of daily work in excess of eight hours by each employee, and employees who have worked extra hours shall be allowed an equal number of hours without work, with full pay, and the holiday shall be given as soon as practicable after the extra work has been performed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I assume that that amendment is being read now for information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is formally offered now.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The motion pending is a motion to strike out the clause in the bill known as the Borland amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is in order first to perfect the text of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, but we have a right to perfect the text of the bill before the motion to strike out is put, and the proviso that I propose to add is to perfect it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall also offer the following amendment:

Provided, That work required in excess of eight hours shall be paid for at the rate of one and one-half times the regular compensation of the employee, computed on an hourly basis.

If we are going to have the eight-hour day, let us have the standard eight-hour regulation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I beg pardon of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has any increase in the salaries been allowed these employees?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There has not been.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the remarks submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] disclose the evils of legislation effected by riders to general appropriation bills. There is a statute upon the law books of the United States, enacted about 20 years ago, which has been read to the Senate and which will be affected by this rider, yet the rider ignores it entirely, inasmuch as it does not purport to repeal that statute. If the amendment shall be adopted, however, it will in effect deprive the beneficiaries of the statutory provision. I do not approve of such legislation, and yet it is an established method of congressional procedure. I shall nevertheless vote against the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. President, I sometimes think that the Democratic Party should change one of its slogans by reversing it, and declare itself for special privileges to all and equal rights to none. Since my entrance into this body, and especially since the 4th of March, 1913, we have probably enacted more class legislation than can be found in the acts of preceding Congresses. It is not necessary to enumerate them. Suffice it to say, I have tried to be consistent by voting against all of them. The act to be affected by this amendment, however, was not one placed upon the statute books by a Democratic Congress. Consistency would require that we remove it if we sincerely oppose class legislation, not because of the class which it affects, but because it is class legislation.

Moreover, Mr. President, I have been for nearly half a century an advocate of the eight-hour law. It has been accepted by the common verdict of nearly all civilized countries as a proper standard for a day's work, and exceptions to it by lowering the scale necessarily become examples that will be fruitful of similar legislation. Take, for instance, the present conditions. I know of no reason why one class of employees should be privileged to work but seven hours while all other classes are required to work at least eight hours. Of course I am aware that the law carries with it the power to the heads of departments or of bureaus to require longer hours of labor; but, Mr. President, we always follow the lines of least resistance, and it is much easier to make no exception to the general operation of the law than to make one or many exceptions. Necessarily they breed discontent between those who are required to work longer hours and those who are permitted to enjoy the benefits of the statute. Moreover, I am surprised that it has not long ago prompted other branches of the service to insist upon the same privilege. That it will now come, I make no doubt.

Mr. President, why should not every employee of the Government work eight hours? I know it has been argued here, and it will be argued again, that eight hours is too long for certain people—women, for example—and that the constant employment of one's energies for an unbroken period of seven hours is apt to result in nervous breakdown. If that is true, then the statute should be changed, not by increasing the hours of labor but by diminishing them. And I am surprised if the statement be true that employees of other countries working for more than eight hours have survived so serious an affliction.

Mr. President, I can not assent to the proposition that eight hours' work—intelligent work—carried on under and amid surroundings such as exist in the city of Washington can hurt anybody. On the contrary, it should be a stimulus to every normal individual. The only real happiness in this world is enjoyed by the man or woman who is in love with his or her work, who takes pride in its proper performance and joy in the production resulting from it.

One of the great evils of the day is the constant effort, organized and unorganized, to escape from labor and to live without resort to it. This Nation was never so vigorous and never so prosperous as when there was work for all and men and women worked for love of it, for the incentive which inspired it, and for the fruits which it produced.

Of course, after our great factories were established and the lines became more and more closely drawn and greed, selfishness, and avarice manifested themselves in the reduction of wages, in carelessness or indifference to sanitary surroundings, and to the risks consequent upon these pursuits, organizations of workingmen became absolutely essential. They naturally sprang from the conditions requiring collective action and collective bargaining. But, Mr. President, I think that the employees of the United States, taken by and large, in normal times are among the best-paid people in the world. I know, Mr. President, that fixed salaries in times of expansion of currency always result in hardship to their recipients; and such may be the case now, when men and women working for the Government at ordinary salaries contrast them with the wages of ordinary unorganized laborers, the demand for which at this time is unparalleled. But there is this difference—and it is to my mind a fundamental one—that in the case of the average laborer the present conditions are abnormal, while in the case of the vast civil service of the United States conditions, while out of adjustment now, are permanent in their character and should be legislated for accordingly.

If I understand this amendment, it is merely designed to equalize hours of labor; and I do not understand why so much feeling, so much resentment, should be manifested against what seems to be a fair proposition and one which should have been considered many years ago. I see no signs upon the streets or in the departments, the bureaus, or the commissions of those nervous breakdowns, those unfortunate physical consequences which are said to result from a close application of this law.

I happened to be in the War Department yesterday when the hour for ceasing work arrived. I never saw a more buoyant set of men and women of all ages, and I wondered, if these were a fair sample of the physical condition of our employees, how it could be possible that more than seven hours of labor would result in reducing these people to a condition of complete or semi-invalidism, thus interfering with their well-being in life. I have no fear, Mr. President, of any such consequences. They are imaginary.

We have permitted the employees of the Government to organize. They are a compact organization, or series of organizations, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. Now, Mr. President, I think that is unfortunate. I do not believe that those who serve their Government, who receive their salaries from it, whose positions are therefore public or semi-public, should be included in the list of wage earners affiliating with the American Federation of Labor. Embarrassments, and very serious ones, may result from such industrial conditions.

For example, Mr. President, suppose we should be so unfortunate as to encounter the miseries of a widespread strike called, if you please, by the main federation. That would present to the organized Government employee the alternative of doing his duty by his Government or by his organization—an alternative to which no right-minded man or woman should be subjected. There is another reason, Mr. President, which is that the organization having succeeded the individual, the needs which they think they require and believe they require are not asked for but are demanded.

I was sorry, Mr. President, while this bill was pending in the House to receive an advertisement entitled "The Borland Amendment," which makes reflections upon a most useful Member of Congress, which, to say the least of it, is subject to adverse criticism. If the independence of the Representatives of the Nation finding expression in what they conceive to be the line of their duty is to be subject to such exhibitions of resentment and criticisms as are embodied in this and similar statements, if a man in the performance of his duty as he sees it is to be subjected to such attacks, then surely the result must be a serious interference with the performance of that duty; for no man, I care not how courageous he may be in legislation of this kind, which we must admit is political in one of its phases, can act with the same freedom, with the same devotion, and with the same energy he can exercise under other circumstances; and if there were no other reason for my voting for the Borland amendment than this campaign systematically waged against him, that would determine my course. That is to say, if I had any doubt as to my duty in the premises I would solve the doubt in the direction of the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is dealing now with a very important phase of this bill, one which I think should be considered by every Senator who desires to do his duty and is not afraid to do his duty against the organization of employees of the Government. I think all the Senators ought to hear what the Senator from Colorado says; and if he will pardon me——

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. KING (continuing). I was about to suggest, and desired to suggest, the absence of a quorum.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, no benefit can come from the suggestion. Senators will come in and answer to their names and leave.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are eating their lunch.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, whether they are eating their lunch or not, they will come and answer and leave; and so far as I am concerned, I do not want to inflict my remarks upon any unwilling auditor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I know several Senators, anyway, who would be very glad to hear this phase of the subject discussed by the able Senator from Colorado; and I hope he will pardon me while I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Nelson	Smoot
Baird	Henderson	New	Stone
Beckham	Hollis	Norris	Sutherland
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Thomas
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Tillman
Cummins	Kellogg	Penrose	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Underwood
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Vardaman
Fletcher	Kirby	Ransdell	Wadsworth
France	Knox	Reed	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Shafroth	Warren
Gallinger	McCumber	Sheppard	Watson
Gronna	McKellar	Shields	Weeks
Hale	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Harding	McNary	Smith, Ga.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are detained on official business.

Mr. LEWIS. At this juncture permit me to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] occasioned by personal illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the quorum has been called. I think it has resulted in the physical presence of two more Senators than were in the Chamber when the Senator from Utah made his suggestion, so the result is as I anticipated.

Mr. President, these employees' organizations, like all others, have their legislative delegates, walking and otherwise. They have their legislative committees, just as the other organizations of the country do. That is perhaps permissible if the organizations are to be; but it is something of a travesty upon our civil service that there should be committees on legislation paying attention to bills before Congress and drawing salaries from the Government or, if not drawing salaries during that time, compensated by other employees from their salaries while engaged in influencing legislation. Prior to the time of these organizations such things were unheard of. Now, the pressure brought or sought to be brought to bear for or against legislation is precisely the pressure of other similar committees and delegates, and it includes, among other things, its political feature. These men vote, a great many of the women vote, and very soon all of them will vote.

I do not know of a greater coward on earth than a Member of Congress who wants to succeed himself, unless it is the ordinary American business man; and of course pressure, semipolitical in its character, exerted by organizations can only be resisted at the risk of possible or probable defeat. I want to protest here and now against the extension of that practice to the men and women in the employ of the Government, drawing their pay from the United States Treasury. I want to be perfectly fair in my criticism, Mr. President. I do not mean to make a statement which can be interpreted to mean that these particular organizations differ in their methods, are more unfair, more unjust, or more exacting, than the others. Quite the contrary; but the others are outside organizations, not protected by a Civil Service Commission, which gives a tenure of life in practically all cases, and upon which, of course, absolute reliance can be placed so long as the employee does his or her duty. They must organize to protect themselves, a condition wholly absent from the public employees.

This amendment, Mr. President, as it passed the House, does not effect the wages or salaries of employees. As amended by the Senator from Georgia, it does, and I think reference was made to the pendency in the House now of a bill which is designed to provide for a horizontal raise of from $120 to $180 per year as the House shall finally determine after discussion.

Mr. President, if that bill becomes law—and I have no doubt that it will—its only effect upon the employees will be to use them as a conduit to transfer that amount of money from the Treasury of the United States to their landlords and their boarding-house keepers and merchants, because as the salaries are raised the price of the necessities of life will be raised also. That is why every merchant and every landlord and every newspaper in town is for it.

It will not solve the problem, because we may legislate as we may with regard to salaries; the purveyors will "beat us to it," as the saying is, in so adjusting their prices as to absorb the increase; and next year these people will be in the same predicament as they are now, with the difference that something like fifty or sixty million dollars of money will have been transferred through their agency from the Treasury to the people of the District.

If I lived here, perhaps I might for that reason join in the hue and cry to increase wages. I recognize as fully as anyone can that at present it is very difficult for the salaried employee to make both ends meet. I should like to see Congress tackle the problem at the other end, and I think perhaps we will do it. The Johnson bill is a good start in that direction, although we may not agree with all of its provisions. Some may consider it too drastic, and others not drastic enough; but that, Mr. President, is the only way in which we can legislate for the benefit of those who need relief at this time, because of the conditions I have discussed.

The argument, perhaps, will not appeal to this Congress; it did not appeal to any of the Congresses of which I have been a Member, because the easiest thing in the world to do in Congress is to pass an appropriation bill. It makes no difference what the purpose of the bill may be; it would seem that its passage is certain if it takes money out of the Treasury; and in this time of national peril the tendency to appropriate money from the Treasury of the United States is increasing, instead of decreasing, in every direction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will agree with me in the added suggestion that it becomes easier the larger the appropriation bill is.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I used to think so; but I have observed lately that when specific appropriations have been attacked they have been defended upon the ground that they are so small as to be wholly inconsequential. Why should we object, for instance, to a miserable little appropriation of $250,000 for something, or of two millions, or of five millions? Why take up the time of the Senate and of the House in the discussion of the small appropriations which will not sensibly affect the aggregate? Mr. President, the Treasury of the United States is bleeding from every pore, and, instead of stanching it, I sometimes think that every other man and woman in the country are out with their knives looking for some unsevered, hidden artery to cut in twain.

We passed two pension bills this morning, taking only 15 or 20 minutes of time, increasing the amount of pensions. We did not concern ourselves enough about it to run down the list and see whether they were all meritorious cases and whether some might be undesirable. When the Senator from Florida, Mr. Bryan, was here he and I used to attempt, vainly attempt, to modify the pension bills in some respect. We got nowhere, and we never will. I have given it up, for, Mr. President, that practice will continue just as long as the price of living rises, because the idea of a pension now is not a contribution for service so much as a good living due from the Government to the pensionary.

Take the situation, Mr. President, of the country generally with regard to our expenditures. The word profiteer has become as common on American lips as the word camouflage to a Frenchman. We have so far called the attention of the country to a number of shocking instances of huge profits, extortionate profits—I almost said treasonable profits—that some people calling themselves patriots are drawing from the Treasury of the United States in the performance of contracts for the production of many goods and articles absolutely essential to the salvation of the Republic; yet the work goes on, with no indication of diminution or of cessation.

On the other hand, Mr. President, we find similar deplorable conditions disfiguring the industrial situation all over the United States. Labor is discontented, and the higher the wage it gets the more discontented it becomes. The newspapers announced two or three days ago that 185 men, forming the calkers' union, receiving more wages than they ever dreamed of two years ago, had struck for higher pay, and as a consequence had paralyzed the entire shipping program in the Northwest. I do not know whether it has been settled or not. Shortly before then the carpenters' union struck and suspended work in the great shipyards of the Atlantic seacoast. The president of the union, when appealed to, said that he could not control his men. When a union reaches such an extremity as that its chosen and elected officers can not control it, then it would seem to a man of ordinary common sense that in such a crisis some authority should do so.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] the other day in one of the ablest addresses that ever fell from the lips of a Senator in this body demonstrated the awful condition of the labor market and its sinister effect upon our shipping program. He spoke to about as many Senators as do me the honor of their presence. About the only immediate effect of his speech was to provoke a remonstrance from this side of the Chamber. Yet, Mr. President, he told the Nation the truth, a truth so ghastly in its possible consequences that I sometimes shudder to think of it.

Here is a telegram from Boston, March 12:

From April 6 to October 6, 1917, there were strikes at 2,521 establishments, the existence of which was definitely verified by the board. Each establishment was asked to report on causes, but complete information was received from only 1,156.

These plants showed 283,402 men idle and 6,285,519 days of production lost. Opinions were asked also of labor commissioners and mediators, etc.

More than six and a quarter million working days lost forever and the country in the midst of the greatest war ever known, or that ever will be known in history, whose outcome is wholly dependent upon the active development of our program, long ago outlined.

Let me refer to one or two other manifestations of a prevailing desire for money which rises superior to love of country. A distinguished general was ordered to France the other day and is on the water now. Whether he lands or not depends largely upon the accident of fortune. Within two days of his sailing his wife's landlord demanded $250 a month rent from her in place of $100 that she had been paying. I know another gallant officer whose wife has suffered from similar conditions.

The program lags, Mr. President, while we make appropriations, while some people work only seven hours a day, while others work fitfully or do not work at all, no matter what their wages, and others profiteer upon a larger scale.

Mr. President, I sometimes wonder if there is in America the true spirit of patriotism. I sometimes wonder whether this Nation must not be confronted with a mighty disaster before its various parts shall be knit together to create the spirit which manifested itself in the people and the armies of the North and the South during the Rebellion. I sometimes wonder whether the charge of our enemies that we have become so devoted to money making that our national virtues have been submerged may not be true.

Mr. President, we have a large Army in France. We shall have a larger one as soon as we can get it there. It all depends on ships whether we get them there or whether we can care for them after we have transported them there. Some of us realize the serious side of this mighty problem, and fear that the Imperial Government of Germany may make good the threats it announced when the submarine warfare was declared. I wonder, Mr. President, what may be the thoughts, the reflections, and reproaches of those may be who are charged—the rich and the poor—with the awful responsibility of supplying our means of transportation if after landing a huge army we shall be unable to supply it the provision and equipment essential, not to victory alone but to their very existence.

We all have boys in this war, our own boys and the boys of our friends. We have sent and are sending them across the sea. They are giving, as Mr. Lincoln said, to the cause of liberty the highest test of devotion. Their hopes, their ambitions, are lofty. They believe in democracy; they are willing to die for it, but with their faces to the enemy.

But, Mr. President, if because of our attention to trivial things, if because of the delays due to demands for the increase of wages rises above the immediate and terrible needs of the hour, the time shall come when these soldiers of freedom bearing the American flag, confronted on one side by the most brutal and most powerful and inexorable foe that ever existed and on the other by starvation through lack of supplies, with no guns, with no food, with nothing but the alternative of sacrifice or surrender, what shall become of the great Republic, the last hope of freedom? What will posterity say of this generation, so miserably failing in such a crisis?

I do not like to paint a picture like this, Mr. President. Sometimes it keeps me awake at nights. I must contemplate it, Mr. President, for it is not wholly improbable. I would to God that some genius could rise upon whose lips both cherubim and seraphim have breathed the fires of eloquence to sound a trumpet call to this Nation, arouse it from its dormant state and awaken it to a vivid sense of its imperious duty.

Mr. President, this has but little to do with the amendment I am considering, but it is quite appropriate in view of the fact that it, too, calls for appropriations, more appropriations, and more money; as we now propose to amend it, and it is appropriate to call attention to the fact that it is the practice everywhere, that we do not seem fully alive to its probable consequences in this time of universal warfare.

Mr. President, this generation of Americans do not understand the meaning of sacrifice. Would they might recall what their fathers and mothers endured 50 years ago in this country, those of us who lived in the South during the last two years of that awful conflict. Would they might reflect more deeply upon what has occurred in the desolated regions of France and Italy. Then they would have some slight appreciation of sacrifice.

Automobiles whirling through the streets of this and other cities with their drivers and their footmen, occupied by fashion and pleasure. Women are doing all in their power to help the cause, and that is comforting. Many have devoted themselves unreservedly to the cause of the soldier. I do not know of a hotel in this city that has not its lackeys at the door, its bands of music, and its appointments of luxury just as in times of peace. The lights upon Broadway and other great centers of amusement in the various metropolises of the Nation are just as bright and their habitues as active and free from care as though no world tragedy were in progress beyond the sea.

Over us all, Mr. President, stalks the specter of possible defeat. May it never come; if it does it will be due to our indifference to our duty and our failure to meet a world crisis fraught with terrible consequences to humanity and to civilization.

Mr. SMOOT. It is unfortunate, Mr. President, that a speech such as has just been delivered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] could not be heard by all the people of the United States. If it were possible for such a thing, no man could count the advantage to our country. I sometimes feel, as the Senator said he feels, that it is almost a waste of time to stand on the floor of the Senate and call attention to the wicked extravagances in the appropriations of sums of money that are so vast that the mind of man can not comprehend them.

I am in favor of doing everything in reason for the clerks of the Government. A year ago I offered the amendment to the first appropriation bill that carried the increases to those clerks. I recognized at the time the amendment was offered that there were injustices in it and did not do justice to all cases. I have been interested in the past in studying the conditions under which the clerks in the different departments of our Government labor, and I admit there are many, many cases where wrongs should be righted. There are clerks who are underpaid; there are more of them who are overpaid; and a more just action could not be consummated by Congress nor one that would be of greater advantage to the Government and to the employees of the Government than to have the question of salary investigated by a joint committee of Congress—one having an interest in seeing that the evils now in force in all the departments of our Government are rectified.

Mr. President, I know the law fixes a certain salary for a certain class of clerks. We have class 1, class 2, class 3, and class 4. We have the laborers, we have the watchmen, we have the charwomen, and others. The salary of all these different classes of employees is fixed by law, and no Senator who has ever taken an interest in this question and visited the departments long enough to make a casual examination but what knows that there are clerks in class 1 who are underpaid, and there are clerks in class 1 who are overpaid, and there ought to be some system put in force by Congress to see that a man or a woman receives all that his or her labor is worth, no more and no less.

I recognize, Mr. President, that under the present war conditions such evils have been multiplied manyfold, and necessarily so, on account of the influx into this city of tens of thousands of additional clerks taken from all parts of the United States, many not required to pass the civil-service examinations, others passing them, but totally unfit to do the work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that the Senator knows no way that a differentiation could be made between the efficiency of one clerk and another as long as they are classified.

Mr. SMOOT. That can not be done under present practices, Mr. President, and that is why I am calling the matter to the attention of the Senate. I think there ought to be, and I want to say to the Senator there will be a change before many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope so.

Mr. SMOOT. It can not go on the way it is at present.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is another matter that I meant to touch upon in the few words I uttered upon this subject, and that was that the larger amount paid to some clerks of less efficiency than others comes to some extent from favoritism in the department on the part of the man at the head of a division or the chief clerk, where favorites are promoted and others are demoted because of the great variety of so-called reasons.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is absolutely correct, and no Senator who has served in this body for a year has not discovered that to be the case.

Mr. KING. Will my colleague yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. While speaking about the inequality existing and the evils which prevail now in the departments, I want to call attention to one evil that I have found, namely, that in promotions there is a disposition to disregard what I understand ought to be the rule and promote with reference to efficiency, but the promotions are based almost exclusively in some departments upon seniority of service.

Mr. SMOOT. I know there are some departments that adhere to that strictly. In fact, I have had heads of departments come to me and say that under the practice of the department in the past he was compelled to promote Mr. So-and-so, and if promoted he knew he can not do the work. This practice ought to be stopped and some time or other it will be stopped.

Mr. President, we passed this week an urgent deficiency bill adding millions to the amount that the House provided. I can not remember just the amount of the increase, but millions of dollars; and there is no need to mention the matter if less than $100,000,000, for $100,000,000 to-day is considered a very small amount. But, Senators, do you know that if that bill had remained in the Senate unacted upon another 24 hours we would have been asked to increase it $500,000,000 more, and would have been told the amount was vitally necessary and must be provided at once.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator is right in saying we escaped being asked to add $500,000,000 to that bill by passing it the day we did. That was a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. No doubt of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What was the other $500,000,000 for?

Mr. SMOOT. The most of the estimates came from the War Department, I will say to the Senator.

The amount asked for will be included in the next urgent deficiency bill, which will follow in a very little while.

Beginning the 6th of April a drive for the third liberty loan will be commenced and the people will be asked to subscribe to it. Not only will they be expected to subscribe to the liberty loan amounting to billions of dollars, but the American people before June 30 of this year will be called upon to pay $4,500,000,000 of taxes into the Treasury.

Mr. President, I have absolute confidence in the loyalty of all classes of the American people, and I do not believe that the coming liberty loan is going to fail, but I do know that the question of its absolute necessity must be presented to the people of the United States in such a way that they will feel its necessity to such an extent that they will be willing to sacrifice some of the usual necessities of life and all the luxuries. I think it is going to be a real task to place the coming bond issue, much harder than it was for the first or the second issues, and perhaps the next one will be still harder. This being the case, we ought to be able to go to the people with clean hands, as far as the accounting for the money appropriated by Congress is concerned. We ought to be able to say to the people of the United States that every dollar collected through taxation, every dollar that you have advanced to the Government in return for Government bonds, has been spent wisely, judiciously, and without graft.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator would have great difficulty, would he not, in convincing the American people that what they have already raised has been spent judiciously and carefully? All we may hope for is that we may convince them that that which we will raise in the future will be so expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am fearful from the rumblings that I hear from all parts of the United States that it is leaking out, and the American people are beginning to believe that the money they have subscribed in the past for our bonds and the taxes that they are paying has not been spent to the best advantage. I want now to say that if we do not begin to scrutinize all the appropriations made and require evidence that the amounts that are asked for by all the departments of the Government are absolutely necessary for the economic maintenance of the Government we are going to get into trouble.

I am in favor of the Borland provision, with the modification that I expect will be offered to it. I am in favor of an eight-hour day. When the clerks came to me and asked me if I would not oppose the Borland amendment—the clerks for whom I worked for an increase wage last year, the clerks for whom I am willing to work this year—I told them I could not do so. I also stated I would gladly vote for an increase in their salaries even greater than they were allowed last year. I do not believe it is fair to the clerks as a whole to place them in the position before the American people of being unwilling to work eight hours for the Government of the United States, particularly so, Mr. President, during the crisis we are passing through.

How can we explain such an attitude to the farmer, who is asked to work not eight hours but, as everybody knows, 10, 12, and 14 hours a day? He is pleaded with to work longer and faster in order to raise sufficient food to feed the American people, to feed our allies, and even feed the clerks employed by our Government. I believe that if we could take a vote of the clerks themselves a great majority of them would say that they were perfectly willing to work eight hours a day during the continuance of the war. The Borland amendment says that the day shall not be less than eight hours, and that is the only change from the present law, which is seven hours.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that the clerks have 30 days leave of absence every year, with full pay. They are entitled to 30 days sick leave, with full pay; and, as far as I am concerned, I want the clerks of the Government to be paid as well as any other laborers in all the world doing the same class of work.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Do I understand the Senator to say that they have 30 days sick leave as well as 30 days annual leave?

Mr. SMOOT. They are entitled to 30 days sick leave in case they are sick.

Mr. STERLING. With pay?

Mr. SMOOT. With pay; and if, for any reason, they are sick longer than 30 days, then an extension of 30 days can be granted them; but that is without pay.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator state, on the average, what percentage of the 30 days in our departments is taken up each year by sick leave, if the Senator knows?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that in some of the departments the clerks take a greater percentage than in others. I have not the figures here with me, but I have them in my office, and I think it runs all the way from an average of 5 days in some of the departments up to over 20 days in others.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would be safe to say that taking the departments as a whole there is one month and two-thirds, or 20 days, in which this pay is granted although no service is given to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Less than 20 days, I will say.

President, it has been said that the clerks are now working over seven hours a day, without pay.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARDING. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. HARDING. Does the Senator include in the time unemployed the half holidays in summer?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I forgot to call attention to that.

Mr. HARDING. Will the Senator say how many half holidays are allowed the Government employees with pay?

Mr. SMOOT. That only happens in the summer time—in the real hot days of summer—when they get a half holiday every Saturday.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. REED. Is it not the Senator's opinion that if this bill is passed as it came from the House, no pay can be received by any clerk who has a half holiday on Saturday?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, no, Mr. President; because this amendment—the so-called Borland amendment—does not change the law from what it is to-day, with the exception of making it eight hours instead of seven.

Mr. REED. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. If the Senator will read the language of this amendment, I think he will change his opinion; and I will ask him to read it now, if he has it before him.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I have it. I will say to the Senator that that is the position taken not only by the author of the amendment but by other speakers in the House of Representatives. I will read it, however, now.

Mr. REED. The opinion of the author of the amendment would not have any effect on my judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, that may be.

The amendment, Mr. President, reads as follows:

No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau, or office in the District of Columbia which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read, in that connection, section 7 of the legislative appropriation bill referred to.

SEC. 7. That section 5 of the act making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, approved March 3, 1893, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employees, of whatever grade or class, in their respective departments, not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order."

Mr. President, the amendment does not change that situation at all, and an Executive order could be issued, if this amendment is passed, giving half holidays on Saturdays during the summer months and pay for them just as they have been paid for in the past.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is the Senator in favor of that?

Mr. SMOOT. Of the half holidays?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. Then I should like to know the logic of standing and in one breath declaring that the employees ought to be made to work eight hours a day and in the next breath saying that they ought to be let off on Saturday afternoon by Executive order.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, I can see the soundest of logic in the position that I take. Everyone during the heated summer term in Washington is almost compelled to take some sort of rest. The half holidays are generally granted at a time when Congress is not in session, when there is very little to be done in the departments, and it is left entirely with the Executive to issue the order. If the Executive says that every employee of this Government shall only work a half day on Saturdays during the summer, he has that power and that right, and he has exercised it in the past, and I think exercised it wisely. I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that it is not a question of dollars and cents that influences me in my action.

Mr. REED. What is it, then?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a question of having the employees of the Government, when the requirements caused by this war are so great, to work eight hours a day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that the head of any department can call upon the employees to-day to work 8 hours or 9 hours or 10 hours or 12 hours a day without a penny of extra pay, and that, if the work is behind, the heads of departments will do it, and that they have done it, and that the clerks have uncomplainingly performed the labor?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what the Senator says is right; but the Senator knows that the head of every department has accepted our suggestion in the law that the workday will be seven hours, and that the heads of departments are not going to change it until Congress acts.

Mr. REED. But, Mr. President, they have done it. They are doing it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will come to that, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. Many persons have made the statement just made by the Senator from Missouri that the heads of the departments are requiring the employees of the Government to work eight hours and even more without extra pay. Senators, I ask you to go down to any of the departments of this Government and, when the clock reaches 4.30, stand at the door that the employees come out of and see if 99 per cent of all who are inside do not leave the building. I am not denying the fact that there are a few special clerks that are working 10 hours and 12 hours, and I think, in some cases, perhaps 14 hours a day; but it is generally the clerks to the chief of the bureau or the head of the division or of the department who work extra hours.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I have observed that very thing, and the evil of that is that the man who has proved his efficiency is the man who has to do the extra work. The inefficient are never kept.

Mr. SMOOT. Necessarily so.

I have a good deal of sympathy with the heads of the departments under the conditions existing today. You can visit some of these departments, crowded with employees, the hallways crowded, and just spend a little time, and see if the work is being done as it would be done if it were a private concern. I have spoken to officials of departments about it, and they tell me it is the best help that they can get. They recognize that there is inefficiency. Why, Mr. President, I have seen typists with copy before them writing about like this: "H." (a pause), "R." (a pause). And so it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. These typists are expected to copy, and the way some of them copy is exactly as the Senator from Utah describes; but they do not follow an "h" with an "r." They really are more intelligent than that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there is a good deal in the charge made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that there are so many employees in some of the bureaus standing around that at times they are actually in the way of each other. That comes about in this way: In the case of some of the commissions that we have created, just as soon as the man is selected as the head of the commission his thought has been to make it the greatest commission created by Congress; and the same thing applies to a number of our bureaus. If there is one commission that has 1,500 employees, the head of the next one created looks upon the 1,500 employees as not the limit that he intends to reach, but he is to exceed it and have more employees under his charge.

Mr. President, I do not know that it is worth while to take the time of the Senate further to discuss this question. I think the Senators have made up their minds pretty well now as to what they are going to do.

I do not believe that in voting for the motion which has been made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] we shall be doing any favor to the clerks of the Government. I do not believe that if the clerks themselves had the question to decide they would ask Congress to vote for his amendment. I believe they are just as loyal as are other working people in the United States; I believe that they are willing to make sacrifices, if necessary, the same as are other laboring people in the United States, and I do not believe if their Government asks them during this war to work eight hours that generally they are going to complain, though some may do so. I believe that the great bulk of them will be only too glad to work eight hours for the Government while we are passing through this crisis.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. NELSON. What is the amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will state the amendment in a moment. The Borland amendment establishes an eight-hour day, and the amendment to the Borland amendment, which I have offered, provides that any hours that the employees work beyond eight hours on any day shall be made of record and that they shall be allowed the hours covered by the extra work as a deduction from eight-hour days as soon as practicable, so that their actual work shall be only eight hours a day continuously, the extra work to be credited to them as holidays later on.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the action which has heretofore been taken by Congress in reference to persons who are engaged in work covered by contracts with the United States. On March 4, 1917, Congress enacted the following:

That in case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend provisions of law prohibiting more than eight hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts with the United States: Provided further, That the wages of persons employed upon such contracts shall be computed on a basic day rate of eight hours' work, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours worked in excess of eight hours.

The President has put that authority into operation on more than one occasion. On the 22d of March, 1917, the following Executive order was issued:

Law of March 4, 1917.

In order to enable the Navy Department to meet the requirements of law to secure the more expeditious construction of ships and procurement of munitions authorized, and by virtue of the authority vested in me by the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," whereby it is provided "That in case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend provisions of law prohibiting more than eight hours' labor in any one day of persons engaged upon work covered by contracts with the United States: Provided further, That the wages of persons employed upon such contracts shall be computed on a basic day rate of eight hours' work, with overtime rates to be paid for at not less than time and one-half for all hours work in excess of eight hours," I do hereby authorize the suspension of the provisions of law prohibiting more than eight hours of labor in any one day of persons engaged in such work under contract with the Navy Department in all navy yards and private establishments where such suspension of the provisions of the law will result in hastening preparation to meet present emergency conditions.

A similar order was issued in reference to contracts for buildings under construction or to be constructed at arsenals, and for fortification work. The President also issued the same order as to laborers working under contract with the Department of Agriculture and on a number of other occasions.

Why should we be less considerate of persons who are employed by the Department of Agriculture than Congress has already been as to laborers who were working under contract with the Government? Why should not department employees also, who work more than eight hours, have time and one-half for overtime? Now, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] wants to give them the poor boon of an hour's vacation for each hour's extra work. They may not be in position to take a vacation; they may be compelled from dire necessity to work every day in order to earn their daily bread. If we are going to work them more than eight hours, let us put in a provision for time and a half for overtime and adopt the standard eight-hour principle.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia shall be voted down, I propose to offer an amendment that for all work over eight hours employees shall be paid time and a half for such overtime, in order that we may treat them with at least the same consideration that has been accorded to laborers who are working under contract with the Government and with the departments of the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has a great, large farming population in his State, the same as we have in the State of North Dakota. Every dollar in my State that goes into liberty bonds or that goes into taxes has first to be lured out of the ground bosom of old Mother Earth; none of it comes from anywhere else. The men who lure that out of the earth with ardent hearts and strong arms labor more than eight hours a day. Now, would the Senator support a proposition that for every hour expended upon those farms more than eight hours, the Government in fixing the price of wheat and other products should add a higher price because the hours are longer upon the farm?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly. The Senator from North Dakota made a speech some months ago in the Senate based upon that exact proposition, saying that the price of farm products ought to be based on farm-labor hours in the same way that wages in the cities are based on labor hours in the factory.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I took the position that like classes of labor should draw the same compensation practically all over the United States. I also asserted that that was not the case, and I could see no possibility in the near future of it being made the case.

Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that in 1912 the Secretary of Agriculture made a statement as to what constituted the net earnings of each farm in the United States. Those net earnings, as I now remember, were $312 per farm. The average number of persons upon every farm, including the husband, the wife, and the children who performed manual labor equivalent to adult labor, approximate five persons. Dividing that $312 per year among them it amounts to 20 cents net per day each. Therefore, you have got the real actual earnings of the agricultural people in the United States as being 20 cents per day net. Now, you ask those people, who work from 10 to 16 hours a day for 20 cents a day, to go down into their pockets and to pay $3 and $4 a day for clerks, and then to give them an additional sum if they work more than 8 hours a day. Mr. President, I can not see any justice in that, and I for one would never vote for such a proposition.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Did the Senator vote for the law which was passed March 4, 1917, and which I quoted a short while ago?

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to increase their pay to what is reasonable, and then I want them for that pay to perform an honest day's service. If eight hours a day is an honest day's service I want them to perform it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any law in North Dakota limiting the hours which farmers and the farmers' boys and daughters shall work?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is not a single law limiting those hours; there is no such law in the United States, and neither is there any law, let me say to the Senator, that children under 14 or 15 years of age may not work on the farm; but every child that is able to hunt an egg does his part upon the farm. The 12-year-old boy will perform as much labor upon the farm as your 25-year-old boy will in your departments here; and the 12-year-old girl will perform just as much labor upon the farm as will her mother.

Mr. KENYON. And about the time that the clerks are coming down to work the farmer and his family have already performed about four hours' service, have they not?

Mr. McCUMBER. They have. Out in Iowa and North Dakota the sun is pretty high at half past 4 o'clock in the afternoon and the farmer is out in his field, but the bricklayer and the carpenter drop the trowel and the hammer the moment the first stroke of the bell announces that it is half past 4 o'clock. The farmer, however, then has still a quarter of a day's or a half day's work left on his hands to perform.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the difficulty about the amendment of the Senator from Texas is in part that our employees here in Washington are paid salaries by the month; their pay runs by the month and by the year. We make appropriations of so much money for such a place. Now, that entire system would be broken up if there were to be one and a half time extra pay when a clerk works a couple of hours extra. If we are going to give the clerks a credit for extra work beyond the eight hours, the only way to do it is in extra freedom from work; that is to say, they being required to work 10 hours to-day, at the earliest day practicable the day shall be reduced to 6 hours, and the 8-hour average be given as the standard of work. I do not think the 8-hour rule was intended as one of compensation or to increase wages. It has been agreed upon by those who have studied the question as a measure in conservation of human life and human health, and discouragement should be had against more than the 8 hours' labor on any day. The best we can do, if the work extends beyond 8 hours on a particular day, is to give an equivalent in additional rest on a later day, to make up in strength and in health, conserving both for the overstrain of the overworked day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am impressed with the thought that this is a very unfortunate time to discuss seriously the proposition of shortening the hours of labor which should be required of the people who are working on a salary from the Government. There are hundreds of thousands of these employees, and their number is increasing hourly. The shorter their hours of labor, the more people that can be employed, and the greater the cost to the Government, with no greater amount of work performed. The question of a shorter day, which might be in order in time of peace, might not be in order at this time. I do not think that anyone will claim that the Government clerks as a class in the city of Washington are working overtime or doing too much labor for the Government in its war emergency. It is possible that they may not be receiving enough pay for what they are doing, and if such is the case and the Government can afford it, their pay should be increased. There is a proposition, which is likely to become a law, which will grant them more pay; but what the Government needs at this time is service; and every patriotic employee of the Government, from President down to the humblest clerk, ought to be willing not to watch the clock, but to determine to do as much as he can possibly do for his Government in this crucial hour. That is a duty which every citizen owes to his country. The soldier at the front is not limited by law to service for seven hours a day, and his pay is $30 a month. The heads of departments are governed by the task to be performed, and not by the clock.

No one pretends, however, that the House provision will impose an unreasonable amount of labor upon the Government clerk. Eight hours a day in time of war does not seem too long for those people to work who are flocking here from every quarter of the United States. No one has a right to expect, and the Government has no right to pay, a dollar except a full equivalent is rendered. And this applies with equal force to the furnisher of supplies and the furnisher of labor. I know of employees who are in the service of the Government who are working longer hours than their health would permit if continued for a long period, and they are not complaining. This amendment will not affect them.

Eight hours a day has been the desideratum of the laboring people of this country for some time; but now it is claimed that that is too long, and that seven hours only should be required. That is now all that is required, as a rule, of the Government clerks in Washington, as has been already stated. If anyone will go into almost anyone of the departments when the hour of half-past 4 strikes, he will discover that everything is dropped and a rush is made for the cloakroom and from thence to the street. I admit that this is not the fault of the clerk. Indeed, I do not know that the clerks are objecting to a workday of 8 hours. I do not believe that the Borland amendment is a reflection upon Government employees. If it is a reflection upon anyone, it is upon the heads of departments, who have not taken advantage of existing law. Of course, so long as more clerks are employed than can be used, there will be no incentive to obtain proper service from the individual clerk. Incompetent numbers supplant efficiency.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is not claimed here that eight hours is too much, but the present law provides for a minimum working day of seven hours, with the right in the head of a department to call for any additional number of hours that may be required. It is practically an unlimited hour day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is true in theory, but the fact is that on the average seven hours is a working day here. There would be no opposition to the provision under discussion if the fact were not true that it is intended to establish an eight-hour day and to provide by law that men and women will be expected to work eight hours a day for their Government in time of war, for which they are receiving and will continue to receive eight hours' pay.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does the Senator propose to raise the wages if the time of labor is extended? He has just stated that the clerks are receiving eight hours' pay. They are receiving salaries under a law which for 20 years has been upon the statute books and has only required seven hours a day, unless the head of a department orders a longer day; or, rather, the law is that they shall work a minimum of seven hours, and they have, as a general proposition, worked seven hours. That has been the rule for 20 years. Now, the Senator states that the clerks are receiving eight hours' pay and they ought to do eight hours' work. Does the Senator propose to pay them one-eighth more wages if they are required to work one-eighth more time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not because the clerks are required to work one-eighth more time. The Senator made that point on yesterday. Eight hours is the standard day. It is true clerks have been working seven hours, but they can not complain if they are made to work eight hours.

Mr. REED. Or 12 hours?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Or 12 hours; but no one would think of working them 12 hours, except in an extreme emergency, which the clerks themselves would recognize as necessary. They can not complain if they are required to work eight hours; and it is proposed to increase their wages whether the present seven-hour day is retained or eight hours a day are required.

Mr. REED. That has nothing whatever to do with the question I put to the Senator. Would the Senator say that the standard day for these clerks is eight hours, when they have for 20 years been working seven hours?

Mr. TOWNSEND. As to some of the clerks that is true, but others of the clerks have worked eight hours, and some of them have worked more than eight hours during the 20 years.

Mr. REED. But the standard is a seven-hour day?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, in practice; but it is too short; there is no question in my mind that it is too short. If the clerks of this Government were compelled to work eight hours a day, there could be accomplished the same amount of work that is now being done in the city of Washington with at least 5,000 fewer clerks. The people are paying the bills; the Government is put to it for money; it is raking the whole country to raise the cash necessary to carry on this war; and every citizen of the country ought to be interested in doing his "bit," especially when he is compensated for it.

I repeat what I said to the Senator from Missouri, that the question of increasing wages is not based upon the question as to whether or not we shall increase the number of hours to eight, because the increase will be made anyway, and it ought to be done, in my judgment; but what I want is to have the work done. That is what the country needs to-day—the accomplishment of work to carry on war preparations; and instead of some of our people trying to devise ways and means for avoiding responsibility, they ought to devote themselves to the work that is in hand, and which they are hired to perform; and now that this question has arisen Congress must insist that a fair day's pay must command a fair day's work. Personally I do not believe that the conscientious, reliable clerks are opposing this House provision. I have had but one request to vote against it. The man or woman, of whatever rank or station, who is fit to serve this Government is not asking for an opportunity to shirk his duty. For the other kind I have no sympathy, and the sooner some effective weeding-out process is employed the better it will be for the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. STERLING. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "holiday," and insert in lieu thereof the words "credit for overtime," so as to read—and employees who have worked extra hours shall be allowed an equal number of hours without work, with full pay, and the credit for overtime shall be given as soon as practicable after the extra work has been performed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I accept the amendment to my amendment.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota who has offered the amendment to the amendment if the word "overtime" means additional pay?

Mr. STERLING. No; it means the time over eight hours, eight hours being fixed as the standard.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not contemplate, then, paying additional compensation?

Mr. STERLING. No; not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It really does not change the meaning at all, but expresses it, I think, in a little better language.

Mr. STERLING. The word "holiday," as written in the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, I hardly thought expressed the idea; it is not a holiday strictly speaking, but it is really overtime for which the clerk is entitled to credit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia as modified.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to have the amendment read, as I have not been able to be present during all of the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, at the end of line 16, after the word "day," it is proposed to insert the following proviso.

Provided, That hereafter record shall be kept of all hours of daily labor in excess of eight hours by each employee, and employees who have worked extra hours shall be allowed an equal number of hours without work, with full pay, and the credit for overtime shall be given as soon as practicable after the extra work has been performed.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether the word "employee" would cover all in the service of the Government in the various departments, including chiefs of bureaus?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, the chief of a bureau really has no regular hours of work; he controls his own time. It covers all that class who report by the hour and work by the hour. I think it covers them practically all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether his amendment is intended to apply to any of the employees of the Government outside of those covered by the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It applies only to those covered by the Borland amendment to this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Borland amendment only covers those in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is as far as we can go at this time. I think the principle, though, if we adopt it, should be extended at once over other employees of the Government in Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So that the Senator's amendment is not intended to apply to anything except what the Borland amendment applies to?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not think any Senator will doubt for a moment, if we put this amendment in the first general appropriation bill—and I understand this is the first of the general appropriation bills—that it will be followed in the same terms in every other appropriation bill, so that it will finally cover all the departments.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say in this connection that I am supporting the Borland amendment on the assumption that it will be applied to all other departments of the Government. I should not be willing to see the Agricultural Department isolated and treated differently from any and all other departments. I think the rule ought to be made universal; but, since the question has been raised, I think that we ought to adopt the Borland amendment. I think the reaction on the psychology of labor throughout this country would be most unfortunate, if not disastrous, if we should limit to seven the working hours for people who have, I may say, liberal compensation, excellent working conditions, and an indefinite tenure, with no uncertainty as to payment. We should not legislate to allow them to labor only 7 hours a day when people on the farms are required to work from 10 to 16 hours a day and the boys in the trenches as long as 30 hours a day, if I may use the word "day" in that connection. I think it would be most unfortunate for us to say to people of that class that those who are most favored, a selected class, shall be given more favorable conditions than the average laboring man throughout this country must submit to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we have discussed almost every governmental proposition in the consideration of the Borland amendment. In a great many of the suggestions that have been made I can heartily concur.

I heard just the closing part of the address made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. It impressed me very greatly. It was in line with what I have been thinking for some little time. I hope it will be read by all the people of the country.

I can not help but feel that the people of the country do not realize what confronts them—that the people of the country do not realize the necessity for sacrifice in this country—and I can not help but believe that those in authority who know the real situation are making a great mistake in not letting the people of this country know what it is.

I am not going into details now. I have about reached the conclusion, however, that in the very near future, if nobody else does, I shall state some things that have come to my attention. If the people of this country knew the lack of ships that are absolutely essential for the successful prosecution of this war that exists to-day and is likely to exist for many months in the future, they would be appalled; and yet I do not believe they will realize it until they are told the facts by those who know what the conditions are.

I am one of those who believe that the people of this country, when they do know what they must do, will do it. I am one of those who believe that this country will not be discouraged by the magnitude of the task that may confront it. I am one of those who believe that the people of this country will not give up because of the tremendous sacrifice that the actual conditions may impose upon them. I believe that a knowledge of the facts, a knowledge of what is necessary, a knowledge of the power that they must exert, a knowledge of the sacrifice that they must make in men and money, will nerve the people to make the sacrifice, and that they are not doing what must be done simply because they do not realize the needs of this country in this tremendous contest in which it is engaged.

I know that there seems to be a policy, and seems to have been, not only with reference to our own country but with reference to those who are fighting as we are fighting, to conceal from the people the real situation. I may be mistaken. I do not want to do anything that will discourage our people; I do not want to do anything or say anything that will lend comfort and aid to the enemy; but it seems to me that that policy should not be longer continued. I have not any doubt but that the enemy know the situation better than our own people know it. They know where our armies are better than the people of this country know it. They know the number of those armies better than the people of this country know it. They know the lack of ships better than the people of this country know it. They know of the destruction of the world's shipping better than our people know it, and they know how long it is going to take for our shipbuilding program to catch up with the destruction of the world's shipping better than our own people know it.

We need not deceive ourselves into thinking that they do not know these things; but I believe that we are deceiving ourselves in it, and I believe that we are weakening our armies and lessening our strength by failing to know these things and let the people know them.

Mr. President, I want the employees of this Government to do a good day's work for the Government, just as other people are expected to do a good day's work for their employers; and as I have listened to this debate it has seemed to me that we have really lost sight of the question involved in the provision known as the Borland amendment. We have allowed ourselves to be influenced by the situation that everybody seems to admit with reference to the multitude of employees here and the fact that they probably are not doing a good day's work, and we have allowed that to control our ideas with reference to this particular amendment.

I admit that it looks like there are too many employees here. It is true that when you go about many of the buildings where the departments and bureaus are housed you can hardly get through for the employees that are there, and I admit that they appear to be doing very little work; but, Mr. President, this is not the fault of the employees. They are here, but they are here at the invitation of the Government, and they are here to work, and if work is not furnished them or is not made available for them it is not their fault. Much of the apparent criticism that has been made here, if it is a just criticism against anybody, is a criticism against the heads of the departments and against the administrative officials who are in control, and not against the clerks. If the Secretary of one of the departments has brought too many employees here, that is not any reason why we should reflect upon the employees. If he has brought more men into his different bureaus than can work there efficiently, the employees should not be condemned for that.

Mr. President, one of the main reasons why I object to the Borland amendment is that, presented as it is and coming as it does, it is a reflection, and in my judgment an unjust reflection, upon the employees of the Government. It seems to be assumed that these Government employees are working undertime. There is not any showing to that effect. There was not any showing to any committee. As I understand, the committee of the Senate gave no hearing, although a hearing was asked. I understand that the committee denied the request of the representatives of these employees to have an opportunity to be heard. I am not criticizing the committee, but it seems to me that the committee should have welcomed the opportunity to interrogate these employees and their representatives and find out from them the very basis of their objection to the Borland amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will.

Mr. KING. I am listening with a great deal of interest to what the Senator says; but I do not quite see the logic of his position when he avers that the adoption of the amendment requiring the employees of the Government working in the Agricultural Department to perform at least eight hours a day service is a reflection upon them or their integrity.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why, it assumes that they are refusing to do it, and they are not refusing to do it.

Mr. KING. Is it not merely a recognition of a state of facts which exists, namely, that for a large number of years, notwithstanding the fact that the work of most of the departments has been in arrears, the heads of the departments have not called upon the employees to work in excess of seven hours a day, and that this custom has crystallized into a habit which can only be broken by legislative enactment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is not any showing that that is the case. There is not any testimony to that effect. There is not any showing that the employees of the Government object to an eight-hour law. I have not had any objection presented. The main proposition here is that they object to a provision that does not treat everybody alike, treat everybody fairly, and treat all of the employees alike, whether they are in Washington City or outside of Washington City.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, has not the Senator been importuned by various employees of the Government, and has he not seen literature which has been disseminated to a great extent in the city, protesting against any change in the law which would require them to work more than seven hours a day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not.

Mr. KING. The Senator's experience is different from mine, then.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I expect I have received what the Senator has in mind. That does not protest against a general eight-hour law at all. It is complaining of the Borland amendment, because it is not fair, because it discriminates. They say, "We do not object to a universal eight-hour law, with a provision for overtime."

Mr. KING. Oh, yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In fact, they do not say that they object to an eight-hour law at all; and this is not an eight-hour law. The Borland amendment is not an eight-hour law—not a bit of it. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] argues for an eight-hour law. I am in favor of an eight-hour law. This does not fix an eight-hour law. This simply takes the law as we have it, and for the employees in the Agricultural Department, and no others, and for this one year, and no longer, says that they must work not less than eight hours. An eight-hour law, as it is generally understood, at any rate, is a law that says, "You shall not work longer than eight hours."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the amendment I have offered is adopted, will not that entirely limit their average work to eight hours a day? Has the Senator noticed that amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; and that amendment struck me as very peculiar.

I do not know of any eight-hour law anywhere, whether applying to governmental or State work or whether applying to private work, that has a provision like that in it. As I heard it read, it simply provides that if the employees are required to work over eight hours you are to keep an account of the overtime and when they have a credit of eight hours they can lay off for a day with pay.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not necessarily that. They average the eight hours. If they work 10 hours to-day and the work to-morrow does not especially require a longer time, they are allowed two hours at once, and work six hours to-morrow; and as soon as possible they get credit for the two hours of extra work by two hours of reduced work, so as to average the actual tax upon the man or the woman at eight hours.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it seems to me that the machinery necessary to keep the books that would be required to keep account of all that sort of thing would necessitate the employment of a lot more clerks down here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it be greater than would be required to keep the record so as to make the extra pay?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, Mr. President, the employees do not ask for extra pay.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not inquiring what the employees ask. I am seeking to find out what I think is best.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is not the basis upon which this legislation is being framed, and that has not been the basis upon which this argument has been presented here. It has been presented upon the theory that the employees want this and that; and the impression, at any rate, that has been given to my mind is unjust to the employees. The argument has been based upon the theory that the employees are objecting to working eight hours a day, when the fact is that there is not any objection found anywhere to their working eight hours a day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask the Senator to pardon me for just a moment.

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to read from one of these statements to which the Senator from Utah has referred.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator must not state that I am referring to one of the statements that he holds in his hand and which he is reading, because what I refer to may be entirely different from the statement which the Senator is about to read to the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it is, I hope the Senator will correct me, because I assume that we have all received about the same things. I do not think these employees have brought to me anything different from what they have brought to the Senator from Utah.

Here is what they say:

> Federal employees are desirous of rendering their full measure of patriotic service in the present war emergency. They have no objection to working, in accordance with existing law, any number of hours considered necessary by the President and the heads of the executive departments without any compensation for overtime.

Mr. President, that is the attitude of these Government employees. What they do object to is being singled out by legislation as slackers and nonpatriotic when the facts are just to the contrary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me for suggesting that the House of Representatives to-day has passed——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, I make the point of order that, under the rules of this body, the Senator is not permitted to refer to what has taken place in the other House.

Mr. KING. I did not know but that the Senator——

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would not influence me at all.

Mr. KING. I know that it would not influence the Senator; but I also know that the Senator would not say that one class of employees has been singled out and discriminated against, when the Senator, as a just man, knows that another branch of the Government has enacted a provision requiring the employees provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to work eight hours a day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we are not considering that proposition. That proposition, wherever it is and whatever it is is not here.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, if we pass the Borland amendment we pass it as it applies to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and it goes into effect in the Agricultural Department. Now, if the knowledge comes to us from the other branch of Congress that they are applying the same rule as proposed here in the Borland amendment, and that a similar provision will be placed in other bills just as it is in this bill, then, if we fail to agree to the Borland amendment here, will not the Senator be in a position to say that inasmuclf as we did not enact it in this bill we must not enact it in the next House bill that comes over? Then there would be the same distinction that the Senator is arguing now. He refers to the fact that this is separate, and applies only to one set of employees. The same argument can be made if the Borland amendment is not adopted here, but is put on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that is not an argument that ought to have weight here. The Senate is considering one proposition, and one alone.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that the House has just applied the same rule to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I thought we had a rule in this body that made it out of order to refer to what has taken place in another body.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think it does—not in that way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But Senators have overlooked it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that is information that it is entirely proper to give.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] just made the same suggestion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was called out for a second, and I regret that I repeated it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled on that question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not making that point. I am just suggesting it, that is all.

Mr. President, this simply illustrates the imperfections of this way of trying to legislate. If the hours of labor of these employees ought to be changed they ought to be changed in a logical, straightforward, legislative kind of a way. We have a general statute controlling their hours of labor, and how the compensation of our employees shall be computed, and all that sort of thing. If it is desired to change that law, let us change it in a legislative way. Let us not do in a roundabout way what we seem to be unable to do directly.

The Borland amendment does not pretend to be legislation. It is simply a limitation upon how the money appropriated in this bill shall be spent. Well, Mr. President, if we want to do what most of the Senators have argued, let us do it, and do it squarely. I will not make a point of order against a legislative provision to this bill that will govern, in a proper sort of way, all of the employees of the Government. If it is deemed best to have such legislation, I would welcome it; and, Mr. President, I venture to say that the Government employees will not object to legislation that is deemed wise by Congress if it is put in such a way as to affect everybody alike. But as I see it, one of the main objections to having this legislation come up in this sort of way at this time is that it is an unjustifiable reflection upon the employees of the Government. It comes here without any suggestion from a departmental head that any of his employees are refusing to perform the duties that are required of them. No suggestion has been made by anybody that the employees are refusing to comply with the needs of the service. There is no suggestion from anybody that they are refusing to work overtime. Then why should we reflect upon them?

I think they have a right to resent it. I would feel exactly the same way myself, and I think I would have a right to feel that way. When I knew that I was doing my duty, when I knew that I was working overtime and was glad to do it, and that I was ready at the request of my chief to work as many hours as he might require, I would resent having it suggested that it was necessary, by means of legislation, to compel me to work overtime. I think they have a right to resent it.

Right here I want to put into the RECORD what has already been put in—the existing law—so that the RECORD may show what it is. I thought I had my papers in the book at that point.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator reads that, will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. The Senator probably will have time. I have not found where it is.

Mr. KING. I will wait until the Senator finds the reference that he desires to put into the RECORD.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I had my papers at that point in the book a while ago, but they seem to have gotten misplaced. I have here the provisions that were read yesterday, but there are one or two other provisions in that law that I wanted to read. I will yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wanted to ask the Senator if he knew why it was that in the face of that specific and unambiguous statute, requiring the chiefs of the various departments to require the employees under them to work eight hours a day when the departments were in arrears, they do not exercise that authority? The statute seems to be mandatory, and it is a matter known to all of us who have had anything to do with the departments that the departments for years have been in arrears. If the chiefs refuse to enforce the statute or, because of the pressure of the employees under them, or the pressure of labor organizations, or pressure from any other source, they refuse to carry out the provisions of that statute, could there be any impropriety for Congress now to legislate upon that matter? Indeed, is it not the duty of Congress to deal with the subject if Congress believes that there ought to be a change in the hours of employment by those who are in Government service?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not know that the heads of the departments have not insisted upon their employees working overtime. Apparently Congress has not made any investigation, and Congress has not tried to find out, but if the heads of the departments have not been doing it, that can not be charged up to the clerks. There is not any showing anywhere that the departmental heads have failed or refused to comply with the law because of pressure either on the part of the clerks or upon the part of outside organizations. If they have they have shown themselves to be unfit for the jobs that they hold. But that ought not to be charged even by intimation unless some showing is made that that has occurred, and that pressure has been brought upon the heads of departments to prevent them from requiring the clerks to work all the time that is necessary.

I am going to reread the provision of the law, so that it may appear here:

> Hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employees, of whatever grade or class, in their respective departments, not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order.

Now, that limits the minimum day to seven hours and makes it the duty of the departmental heads to require them to work seven hours. The further provision in the law that I take it was to meet or at any rate would meet the emergency that confronts us now and that may have confronted us for some time, and that meets very largely the argument of those who urge the necessity of this legislation at this time, is as follows:

> Hereafter it shall be the duty of the head of each executive department to require monthly reports to be made to him as to the condition of the public business in the several bureaus or offices of his department at Washington, and in each case where such reports disclose that the public business is in arrears, the head of the department in which such arrears exist shall require, as provided herein, an extension of the hours of service to such clerks or employees as may be necessary to bring up such arrears of public business.

Mr. President, I think that is a section of the law that can not by any stress of construction be held to leave it really discretionary with the head of the department. I do not think by any rule of construction the word "shall" can be construed to "may," so that it imposes upon the heads of the departments the duty of requiring monthly reports to show how the business is. Then, if they find business is in arrears they are required to compel the clerks to work overtime, and there is no limit. The clerks are willing to do it. Their representatives say they are willing to work as many hours as the heads of the departments may require them to work and as they may deem necessary for the public service, and there has been no suggestion from any source that they are refusing to do it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KING. I was wondering if the heads of the departments had not placed a construction upon the section to which the Senator has just invited our attention which restricted its meaning very much more than the interpretation placed upon it by the distinguished Senator. If he will pardon me, I will just invite his attention to the words I have in mind, namely:

> Provided, That the heads of the departments may, by special order, stating the reason, further extend the hours of any clerk or employee in their departments, respectively.

Has not that language been so construed by the heads of the departments as to require that a special reason should be given to each individual employee or clerk whenever that employee was required to work in excess of 7 hours per day; that they have not felt they could make a general order sweeping in character and covering all the employees under them but relied upon the application of some individual and felt that the order must extend only to the individual?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he knows that the department has done that?

Mr. KING. All I know is from my observation and from current rumor and the statement made that the heads of the departments have not required them to work in excess of seven hours.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But has the Senator had any statement as to why they have not done it?

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not either.

Mr. KING. But in view of the fact that the Senator was construing this act in the way that his language implied, I was wondering if he had investigated to determine whether the department had placed a narrower construction upon the section than that placed upon it by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I have not made any investigation of that kind. It has not seemed necessary to me to do it. I do not believe that any Senator will construe that paragraph any differently from what I have construed it, and from the way it reads, and if any department head has construed it differently we ought to get after that department head and not after the clerks. The clerks are not responsible for any such construction as that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Washington said a few moments ago that he favors a general eight-hour day for the departments in Washington. Am I correct in that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am in favor of an eight-hour day generally.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator mean a minimum eight-hour day of a maximum eight-hour day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am in favor of an eight-hour day, and when I say that my idea of an eight-hour day is that they will work eight hours and no more except under some extraordinary emergency or demand.

Mr. CUMMINS. The point that is made by the Senator from Washington is one that has bothered me more than any other in considering this subject, namely, that we are legislating here for the employees of a single department. There is an element of injustice about that which must appeal to everyone. I take it the difficulty the Senator from Washington finds in making a general provision of law in this respect is the rule that forbids amendments to appropriation bills unless they are germane.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that will be the difficulty in legislating on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I can point out to the Senator how that difficulty can be avoided. I am with him in this respect: I believe in an eight-hour day. I would rather see a maximum eight-hour day than a minimum eight-hour day, but I think all the employees in the departments in Washington ought to work eight hours. If an amendment were offered now to this provision to the effect that it should not take effect until the President certified that a similar provision had been enacted in regard to all the departments in Washington, we could reach the result that seems to be very desirable, notwithstanding the rule that an amendment specifically extending this provision to all departments might be vulnerable to objection.

I desire to suggest that to the Senator from Washington, because I think it is a thing we ought to do. I think we ought to amend the so-called Borland amendment by providing that it shall not take effect until the President shall certify that a similar provision is effective with regard to all the departments in Washington. It is within our power to pass a law which shall become effective upon the happening of a certain event in the future, and in this instance the event would be similar legislation with regard to all departments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That would make it very much more acceptable, of course.

Mr. BORAH. May I make a suggestion?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the House has already passed the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and in it has incorporated a provision providing for an eight-hour day. It seems to me that in all probability all the appropriation bills will have been passed by the House and sent to this body before we get through with this debate.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that the legislative appropriation bill which has just passed the House covers practically all the employees of the Government outside the Agricultural Department?

Mr. BORAH. I understand it is a general provision.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has just called attention to the same fact the Senator from Utah called attention to a while ago and that the Senator from Georgia called attention to a little later, and that probably another Senator will call attention to later on. I thought I might find the rule that prohibits our reference to what has taken place in another body. I am not familiar with the rules, and I am not able to find it. I understand, however, that we have such a rule, and I have the authority of my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to that effect.

Mr. McCUMBER. I heard the Senator also state that there is some rule against a reference to what was done in the House. I assert there is no such rule whatever.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is a controversy between the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Utah on that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is with the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will show it to me, I will be convinced.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I said I understood there was such a rule. I confess my lack of familiarity with the rules.

Mr. BORAH. I think the suggestion is found alone in Jefferson's Manual——

Mr. GALLINGER. That is where it is.

Mr. BORAH. Which has long since been superseded, as well as all the other teachings of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We lay the blame on Thomas Jefferson, while we relieve our own rules from that censure. I will not question the right of any Senator when he comes in later on to call my attention to what it is said has occurred in another body to-day.

Mr. President, if we pass this legislation as it is proposed it will only last for a year, and we will have this same thing to thrash over again. So why not take it up in the right kind of a way? If we want to legislate, let us legislate.

Why does not some one propose a legislative provision that will be law not only for this year but for next year, and why leave to the heads of the departments the discretion that we have left in the other law that some Senators do not seem to think the departments are going to exercise? Why tempt them further to violate their oath of office and neglect their duty and then come in here and try to lay all the blame upon the clerks?

Mr. REED. Do I understand that on the legislative appropriation bill the House has adopted an amendment similar to the provision in the bill now pending?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

Mr. REED. I think it ought to be understood that the parliamentary situation there is such that a separate vote must be had upon that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As there is no restriction, apparently, against stating what has taken place in the other House there certainly is not any restriction against prophesying what will take place in the House when a separate vote is had on this amendment. From the vote upon a division there, which I saw, I am inclined to think that the Borland amendment would carry on the legislative appropriation bill by a larger majority than it had before.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the reason why the heads of the departments do not require the reports that are mentioned in the statute the Senator has read, and thus require extra hours from the clerks, arises from the fact that it is the fashion now whenever the head of a department or bureau thinks he wants more clerks they simply advertise in the newspapers and they come here in droves. Hence they do not need to require clerks to perform more labor; they have so many of them now that they really do not know what to do with them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It looks like that is the course of procedure.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the procedure. They advertise for them now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But that does not justify legislating in this way in reference to the clerks.

Now, just a word or two about the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah with reference to the 30 days' leave. It seems to be advanced as an argument here in favor of this legislation that they have 30 days' leave with pay and 30 days' sick leave. Here is the law with reference to that in this same section:

Provided, further, That the head of any department may grant 30 days' annual leave with pay in any one year to each clerk or employee.

That does not say that they shall do it; and the department has not construed it as meaning that they shall give the employees 30 days' leave. The Senator from Utah says they have. Here is what the Agricultural Department, the department we are now specifically considering, has done according to a statement that is given to me, of course by the representatives of the employees, but they give the quotation and I have not any doubt that they quote it correctly. They say "the following regulation of the Department of Agriculture has been made." Now I quote:

Leave of absence not a right but a favor: Leave of absence may be granted to employees of the Department of Agriculture in accordance with these regulations when such leave can be taken without detriment to the service. Leave of absence is a privilege and not a legal right.

Leave revocable: Leave of absence may be revoked at any time and the employee ordered to return to duty before its expiration should the exigencies of the service require it.

The whole matter rests in the discretion of the department. If the departments have not wisely exercised the discretion we have given to them then the departmental heads are to blame and not the clerks.

Now, what are the facts with reference to these leaves? I have a statement here which was prepared on behalf of these employees, but they say it has been prepared by the authority of the department in which they give the amount of annual leave. They say:

The records of the Department of Agriculture show that the employees of that department in one year gave to the Government 20,181 days of service which it was their privilege to take as annual leave. This is an average of 5.2 days per person per year. That is to say, the 3,881 employees in Washington who were privileged to take 30 days' annual leave used on an average only 24.8 days each.

I venture to say if the exigencies of the service require it and the departmental heads require it of these employees they will cheerfully work practically all the days that the department under the law may grant them leave.

Then, under the sick leave:

The amount of sick leave used by these employees is also worth noting, in view of the representations of Mr. BORLAND that the sick leave privilege is abused. The maximum allowance for sick leave is 15 days, which, only in the discretion of the Secretary, may be extended to 30 days. But the 3,881 employees of the Department of Agriculture in Washington used on an average only 5.5 days each.

I think that is a splendid record when it shows that these employees only used in a year five and one-half days sick leave.

Mr. President, there are very few employees from the State of Washington down here. I am not interested in this matter on account of them. I have a letter here, however, from one of them, a part of which I am going to read. The writer states that he does not belong to the union; he states that he does not care particularly about the union; but he does object to the reflection that is cast upon his patriotism and upon his willingness to serve his country by legislation proposed in this way. He says:

I personally know of any number of employees in the Department of Agriculture who work over that number of hours half of the time, but I can only swear as to what I do myself.

I have never been asked to work overtime, but when I have certain monthly work to do I have been working overtime each day for periods of about 12 days each month. During the week and a half before Christmas I averaged about 13 hours per day, and that includes Sundays, too. My work, as you know, is operating a multigraph—setting type, etc.—the hardest office work possible for the eyes. I would be willing to keep that up but for the order I received from an eye specialist to the contrary.

He does not object to doing this extra work if necessary. He has been doing it. He has been doing it half the month, and is doing it even without request from the departmental head, but he is doing it simply because the work of the office required it and demanded it.

I want to say, Mr. President, in my judgment, that is largely the spirit of the great mass of Government employees.

Mr. President, I am not opposing this Borland amendment because I want the employees of the Government to work less. I want them to do their work just as every other Senator wants them to do their work. I sympathize with very many of the suggestions with reference to the wearing character of some of the work made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yesterday, but I believe they could very well under the circumstances work eight hours a day. Yet as I said, and as the Senator from Missouri said yesterday, there are certain classes of work that if a person works eight hours day after day and day after day will make him a physical wreck much sooner than it would to work 10, 12, or 14 hours out of doors.

Mr. President, I have worked on a farm. We hear a great deal here with reference to the farmer. The farmer has to bear lots of burdens, and he is made the excuse for a whole lot of argument and all that sort of thing. The farmer does not seek that. He does not ask us to base our action upon legislation here entirely upon his condition. We want to treat him justly and fairly, and he does not ask us to treat others unjustly or unfairly because we may treat him unjustly and unfairly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I make a suggestion there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Under the law as it now stands the head of any department may require an employee to work as long as a farmer works.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was just going to give a little personal experience as far as I am concerned. I have worked on a farm. I have worked from 4 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night, and I have run a typewriter from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. I want to say I will take the work on the farm from 4 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night for a week or a month or a summer in preference to running a typewriter from 8 or 9 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, six days out of the week, and I will come through the summer in a great deal better condition by working on a farm than in the other work.

Mr. President, when I say that I do not say that the farmer ought to have to work from 4 o'clock until 9 o'clock at night. I wish he did not; but one thing is certain, that a farmer can not make very much out of his farm unless he does it. Now, that is true. Of course farm labor is much different now from what it was a few years ago. You do not go on farms now and find farm laborers working from 4 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night. You hire a man to work on a farm and he works 10 hours a day, and that is all.

Mr. REED. When the Senator was working from 4 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock at night, of course, that did not apply on rainy days and it did not apply——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; when it was raining I had to get in the barn and shell corn and do things of that sort.

Mr. REED. It did not apply all through the winter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I went to school in the winter.

Mr. REED. There is a time when farm work lets up in its hours. I know that because I have done a little of it myself. The Senator is talking about the farmer. To-day the farm laborer gets, as I understand it, approximately $60 a month, his board, his room, and his washing, and then gets a horse to go to town on Sunday. Is there any $100 a month clerk in Washington who gets $60 a month net out of his salary?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not contending that the clerks here are not paid well compared with laborers on a farm; but I am contending much in line with what the Senator from Missouri said yesterday that when you consider the character of work a great many of these people do I would a great deal rather do the work on a farm than do what they do and be held to it the hours that under the law they should be held to it.

But the main objection I have to legislating in this way is the injustice of it, the discriminatory character of it, and the reflection, in my judgment the unjust reflection, coming as it does, upon the employees of the Government. In my judgment, they are just as faithful employees as can be found anywhere, and if there is any censure to be imposed upon anybody it should be imposed upon the heads of departments who have not done what the law gives them the right to do and makes it their duty to do. When you say that the farmer has to work 10, 16, and 18 hours and that others have to work that time, you can point to the law and say that the department heads may require these people to work all the time that is necessary to do the Government's work, but if we want to legislate, and ought to legislate, in reference to this matter let us do it in a regular way. Let us make it permanent legislation, not year for year and year for year and piecemeal and piecemeal. Let the committee investigate the matter and ascertain what the defects are and the reason for them and frame the law in a way that will not only be just to the Government but just to these employees.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the heads of the departments concerned have authority to require more hours of work from the employees in the classification named if they wish. I think it is an effort to pass up to Congress the burden of requiring the actual work to be performed instead of the heads of departments doing it. It is not the first time that a disagreeable task has been passed to Congress by the executive departments, but I decline, for myself, to become a party to the transaction.

I am not going to discuss the question whether these clerks are working overtime now or undertime. That is not my problem. The white man's burden in the Senate here is not to relieve the heads of departments from their difficulties. They have power; let them exercise that power. If they do not want to exercise it they ought not to ask Congress to compel them to do it, and that is in effect what this provision would do.

There is a provision, however, in addition to that. On one occasion the Council of National Defense announced the principle on which we were to be guided while we were in the war. The Council of National Defense is the vocal expression of the Government on this question. I have heard considerable criticism every time there has been a strike at some place of a number of employees, some of whom probably are not informed as to their patriotic duties, as well as others, that they were breaking this general principle that was laid down, and I think they were. It is just as reprehensible for the employer to break this announced principle as it is for the Government or for Congress to announce a new rule.

The Council of National Defense has deemed this subject of such consequence that it created a committee on labor, substantially directed and controlled by representatives of the largest national unions, which, after due deliberation, issued, through its executive committee, a statement apparently intended to declare certain fundamental policies of industrial relationship which should apply during the period of the war. Perhaps the most important sentence of this statement was the declaration that "neither employers nor employees shall endeavor to take advantage of the country's necessities to change existing standards." Differences of interpretation and opinion led to a further amplification and explanation and accompanying declarations, which were indorsed by the Council of National Defense.

These were to the effect that standards of safety and service established by State or Federal law should remain in effect.

It is proposed now by this amendment, which is known as the Borland amendment, to change the hours of service of a certain class of employees who are embraced in the terms of the amendment. That is a violation of this general principle laid down by the Council of National Defense. It applies, it is true, more particularly to private industrial relations, but there is no difference in the good faith that would be required between the private industrial relations existing between the employees in the departments and the Government. If it is a good rule for a shipyard or for a steel mill having industrial employees, it is equally a good rule, and it should apply, to employees in the departments of the Government. Good faith would require that we adhere to it. We have laid it down.

We have heard many just criticisms here and elsewhere upon industrial employees who struck and refused to abide by this wholesome principle. It is said they ought not to tender the war as an excuse to change existing standards of service. I think that is true. If criticism is to be meted out to these striking employees, how will Congress escape the same criticism when we establish another rule here to govern these employees from that of existing law? We can not meet it. We can not announce this principle when a strike is employed in an industrial establishment if we ourselves violate the principle. We shall be estopped to urge that as an equitable rule to be followed during the continuance of the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], as modified, to the text of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, line 16, after the word "day," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter record shall be kept of all hours of daily work in excess of eight hours by each employee; and employees who have worked extra hours shall be allowed an equal number of hours without work with full pay, and the credit for overtime shall be given as soon as practicable after the extra work has been performed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to state this case with reference to the eight-hour question. The eight-hour contest was a fight to reduce the hours of labor, with extra pay for overtime. The Borland amendment is an effort to increase the hours of labor without pay of any kind for overtime. It is absolutely the antithesis of the eight-hour day contest. The eight-hour day contest was started inside labor ranks to shorten its hours and get pay for overtime. This is a fight from the outside to extend the hours of labor without anything whatsoever for the extended time or for any time in excess of eight hours. It is a mockery to compare such a proposal with what is usually called the eight-hour movement.

A great many economists here and at the other end of the Capitol are pretending that they are supporting this bill in the interest of the Treasury. They have singled out the old clerks in the old departments, most of whom have been here many years, to make them the object of legislative economy. They have undertaken to prove that there is a lack of economy by calling to our attention a vast influx of clerks into Washington who, they say, "toil not, neither do they spin." If there be any such clerks you will not find them in the old departments. You will find them in the new-fangled bureaus. I object to cutting down the pay of the old clerk who has been in Washington doing the business of the Government because there may be too many new clerks employed in the new bureaus that this Congress has recently set up and has recklessly and wantonly refused to regulate.

Mr. President, we are strange creatures in this world, and especially in this Senate. We have spent two or three days here declaiming about the necessity of compelling these clerks to work eight hours and about their wages being too high for a seven-hour day. Statesmen have worked themselves into a frenzy; they have gone charging up and down the aisles talking about clerks who work only seven hours and who get $100 a month; and yet only a few days ago we voted some salaries of $12,000 a year, and expressly provided that those who were drawing the salaries should not be even required to give all of their time to the Government!

Moreover, we have set up bureaus here without any regulation whatever as to wages or hours of labor. Salaries are being paid and money is being appropriated absolutely without regard to the question of economy.

Mr. President, while we are complaining about the salaries of the $100-a-month clerks, and while we are complaining because they are not compelled to work as a minimum more than seven hours a day, there are gentleman traveling up and down the country, with huge expense accounts at their command, who are drawing four and five and six thousand dollars a year, and the Senate has never even paused to inquire into the facts. The other day when the Food Administration came here asking for $1,750,000 of additional money, and it was disclosed that it proposed to increase its expenses 200 per cent between now and the month of June, there was not a whimper from any of the economists in the Senate. Every one of them sat mum, and you could not get an inquiry into what was to be done with the money, although that Food Administration had cost the Government in less than 10 months of time over $8,250,000, and was asking an increase, which I have included in the $10,000,000 estimate, of $1,750,000, upon the express claim that it proposed to increase its expenses 200 per cent. According to that estimate, we may expect to pay 20 or 30 million dollars during the next 12 months. We go about complaining here and declaiming there because some woman who may be supporting an invalid husband or an invalid child or an old father or an old mother, only being required to work seven hours a day; we insist that for her $100 a month she shall work eight hours as a minimum, with no pay for overtime; but we say nothing about the enormous salaries men receive who have been appointed by the Food Administration or Fuel Administration without regulation by law and without confirmation by the Senate. Here are a few gentlemen who hold offices unknown to the law. We do not even know what their titles indicate. All we know is that they hold their authority of office by grace of Mr. Hoover, who selects the men, prescribes their duties, assigns their titles, arranges their expenses, and mayhap pays their rents. The latter I can not affirm with certainty.

In the Food Administration grain-corporation's force appears the following holders of what may be justly denominated Hoover plums:

William Beatty, comptroller	$6,000
G. Roy Hall, traffic expert	6,000
F. S. Staley, general auditor	6,000
John D. Shanahan, grain expert	5,000
Walter I. Bean, chief accountant	4,000
Claude N. Hitchcock, office manager	4,000
A. W. Frick, correspondent	4,000
C. H. McLaughlin, chief clerk, export department	3,900

That is at Washington. Then, at Baltimore, Md.—

Herbert Sheridan, assistant to second vice president	$5,000

What is an assistant to a second vice president?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. REED. I will.

Mr. KING. I was going to ask what organization has a vice president, a first vice president, and a second vice president.

Mr. REED. They appear to be in some way attached to the grain corporation of the Food Administration. Further than that I do not know; the Senator from Utah does not knew; the Senate does not know; and the Senate does not care. These salaries are being paid out by the sacred Food Administration. Inquiry is insolent. [Laughter.] I continue reading—

John J. Frederick, assistant office manager [over at Baltimore]	$2,400

Then at Philadelphia, Pa.—I wonder if any part of this patronage fell to the Senator from Pennsylvania—we find—

J. C. Morris	$3,300
Filson Graff	2,700
L. M. Eichman	2,500
Fred S. Griffin	2,400

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has that anything to do with Hog Island? [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. No; the methods may be similiar, but the locations are different. [Laughter.]

The statement which I am reading only embraces a small part of the Food Administration's pay roll. I read:

Buffalo, N. Y.:
Edgar B. Black, assistant to second vice president	$3,600

That is the second assistant this vice president has got. His first assistant gets $5,000 a year and the second assistant gets $3,600 a year. It seems to me that is class legislation. I think that Buffalo, N. Y., has a right to complain that it is being discriminated against in favor of Baltimore, Md. Then at Buffalo, N. Y., we also find—

James A. Stevenson, cashier	$3,000
Portland, Oreg.:
Otto Kettenbach, assistant to second vice president	5,100
S. A. Turner, cashier	3,600
A. M. Scott, assistant cashier	2,700

Mr. VARDAMAN. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. REED. I am reading a list taken from the official report of Mr. Hoover?

Mr. KIRBY. Who fixes the salaries?

Mr. REED. Mr. Hoover fixes them, or I suppose he fixes them, for he is fixing everything else; he is fixing the price of the farmer's wheat, and in so doing is willfully violating the law of the land; he is fixing the price of the farmer's pork, and in so doing is willfully violating the law of the land; he is fixing the size of the farmer's potatoes, and in so doing is violating the law of the land; he is fixing America to lose this war by cutting down the production of the farmers, and in so doing is violating the law of common sense; he is, in his capacity as an American officer, fixing the prices of American farm products, which he then buys in his capacity as purchasing agent for foreign countries, and in so doing violated the precept "No man can serve two masters." Likewise he violates the laws which forbid an agent to act for parties having antagonistic interests. Secretary McAdoo recently charged Hoover with being the sole purchasing agent of the allies. The statement remains undenied.

A protest is growing among the farmers. They are coming here from across the continent to protest before the Committee on Agriculture. They are telling us serious facts, that must be heeded at an early day or next winter we will have bread tickets and meat tickets where we might have plenty. As bad as was the Garfield closing order, the activities of the Food Administration are even worse, for the Garfield closing order was limited to 14 days, while the Food Administration is imposing restrictive measures that are going to cut down farm production throughout the year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the Senator has just mentioned the activities of Mr. Hoover and his department, I am interested in knowing whether or not the investigation before the committee supports the statement which is now being put out in the newspapers that the Hoover administration has increased the production of meat and of pork; that some 6,000,000 or more of cattle have been reared because of the activities of this department, and I do not remember the number of millions more of hogs, as the result of the work of this administration. According to the testimony, is there anything in support of those statements?

Mr. REED. The Senator can not ask that question with a straight face. A Senator coming from the great West knows that that statement is utterly silly. The beef cattle of this country increased how many head?

Mr. KING. Six million and some odd thousand.

Mr. REED. Six million head since August 10, when Mr. Hoover took office! It takes three years to grow a steer, and Bob Ingersoll once irreverently said that there was one thing God Almighty could not do, and that was to make a four-year-old steer in five minutes. [Laughter.] I am not ready to believe Mr. Hoover could produce 6,000,000 in six months, although I am reminded he has referred to himself as the "miracle man."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the authorities got it mixed up with a healthy shote. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, I also saw the statement made that the hogs had all grown bigger; that they were bigger now than they were ever before in the world. [Laughter.] This is the fact about the hog business: They are not any bigger than they ever were before in the world, but the hogs that are just now being marketed are pitiably small. Brood sows are being hauled to market to butcher because the farmer can not afford to feed $1.80 corn into $15 a hundred hogs; but there was a short time back a few days when the hog run to the market was very heavy—not unprecedented, but heavy—the average being about 230 pounds. The reason for that was—not Hoover, but the railroad embargo—transportation could not be readily obtained for hogs, and hogs had to be held on the farm for some two or three weeks longer than usual and they had to be fed corn, and so increased somewhat in weight.

What is there about Mr. Hoover's beneficent influence that will make a hog grow? [Laughter.] It is a good deal like that story we heard about the fuelless days releasing 480 ships and sending them across the ocean. As a matter of fact, that number was arrived at by claiming credit for every ship that sailed from every port of America, except from three southern ports, when, as everybody knows, nearly all the ships would have sailed if the order for the fuelless days had never been issued. The truth is that there was a net reduction in the number of ships in the ports of the whole of the United States of just 56. Somebody said that figures will not lie, but it must be conceded they become beautifully confused.

I am digressing; but mark what I am telling you. Though you may say I am "harping on my daughter," unless there is a reversal of the policy which fixes the price of coal at the mines so that the mines can not run at top speed, unless there is a reversal of the kind of policy that is about to close the mines of Colorado, according to the statement of the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. THOMAS. That has closed them.

Mr. REED. "That has closed them," the Senator tells me; there will be suffering in our homes; there will be a shutting down of our great industries next winter; there will be more fuelless days and more brainless days. Unless there is a reversal of the policy that interferes with production and penalizes the farmer, and, to use a slang expression, "makes the farmer the goat," there will be a crop deficiency next summer that will next winter bring the most serious consequences.

If we expect to win this war, we must win it by production. The energy of these boards and these individuals apparently has been directed to restrict production by endeavoring to restrict the prices of the men who produce. It is a mistaken policy; it is a foolish policy; it is a policy that, if not abandoned, will lose us this war. Whatever else we do, we ought to produce an abundance of foodstuffs and we ought to produce an abundance of coal. These two great products are essential to the winning of this war.

If I may further claim the attention of the economists of Congress who want to cut down the salary of the pale-faced woman who is working over a set of books in one of the departments or who is working on an adding machine or a comptometer, I beg to call attention to some more of these salaries of the food and fuel departments:

New Orleans, La.:
H. L. Dannoy, assistant to the second vice president	$4,800
Minneapolis, Minn.:
C. L. Bostwick, general officer manager	5,000
F. G. Holbrook, head of the wheat distribution	3,600
E. H. Conkey, chief inspector	3,000
Duluth, Minn.:
E. A. Forsyth	5,000

I do not know what he does, but he is stationed at Duluth, the town that Proctor Knott discovered and at the same time immortalized. [Laughter.]

J. E. McGregor	$5,000
Kansas City, Mo.:
H. J. Smith	5,000
E. F. Beyer	5,000

I do not know what he does, but I think he must be another assistant to the second vice president. [Laughter.] There are seven names of persons in the list who, I have discovered, are assistants to the second vice president.

Now let us go to the pay roll at the national headquarters:

Ben S. Allen	$4,800

Who is Ben S. Allen? Probably a very nice gentleman. He was a representative of the Associated Press, at London, England; became the private secretary of Mr. Hoover; accompanied Mr. Hoover to the United States; and is now drawing $4,800 a year. I do not know what his duties are—whether he is still representing the Associated Press, or whether he is assistant to the second vice president, or whether he is just Mr. Hoover's private secretary; but his salary is $4,800.

Alice C. Boughton	$2,400

Here is a lady drawing twice the salary that the clerks in the departments draw. Which one of the economists in the Senate rose up to protest against that? [Laughter.] Why, when I asked that there go out of the deficiency appropriation bill the other day $1,750,000 to be used in addition to the seven and a half million dollars that has already been squandered, you did not vote then for economy, that was not economy day. That was Hoover day. Now, there is nothing to oppose this rare bit of economy but a few poor clerks, and there are plenty of gallant gentlemen willing to charge the breastworks that are defended by the helpless. [Laughter.]

I continue reading:

Marion E. Bradbury	$3,000

I wonder if she is doing any more difficult labor than some of the women who have grown gray-haired working in the departments. There is not a protest, though, on account of her salary.

W. H. Buck	$2,700

I do not know what Buck does, except that he is at the national headquarters.

Dallas S. Burch	$2,592

Just why they add that $2 I do not know; perhaps it is for overtime. I do not know; but there it is in the report.

Alexander Cairns	$5,184

It does not tell what Alexander does. I only know that he has got his arm in the Government Treasury down to the $5,000 notch, and then $184 farther in.

Julian S. Carr	$2,880
Stephen Chase	3,000
E. F. Cullen	5,004
Leonard Dawson	2,760
E. Dana Durand—

A man that parts his name in that way ought to get a very liberal salary. I blush to say that E. Dana gets only $3,000. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. From the Government.

Mr. REED. From the Government. I accept the amendment.

B. F. Durr	$2,808
Thomas Ellis	3,600
J. W. DuB. Gould	4,200
Frank F. Jenks	4,800

Observe Frank F. draws just exactly four times as much as one of these $1,200 clerks. Of course, he has only one-fourth the necessary expenses in proportion to his salary, but there is not a protest. The economists of the Senate, who bravely reach out to take a few shekels from a lot of poor girls and old ladies, and men with families who can scarcely live on their meager salaries in the departments, hesitated and fell back appalled when asked to stop the raids of Hoover on the Treasury.

Brave boys, brave boys, brave boys all;
And yet, and yet, I can not forget,
That many are brave not at all—

If I may doggerelize an old bit of verse.

Why, these men, as has been suggested to me, are drawing more pay than many officers of the Army who have served 20 years and are now on the firing line; but, then, this is Hoover's. [Laughter.] These are the people that work for the "miracle man." [Laughter.] Perhaps one of them made himself solid by sending out from Hoover's headquarters the circular I once exhibited to the Senate, advising the people that a letter addressed to "The Miracle Man" would be promptly delivered to Mr. Hoover.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I want to suggest to the Senator that the example of the department to which he is just referring seems to have impregnated some of the other departments. For instance, I observed a short time ago in the newspaper an advertisement put out by the Civil Service Commission in which they stated that they must have immediately 250 accountants for one small branch of the War Department, which already had a large number, and that the compensation was to be from $3,000 a year to $6,000 a year. I do not know where they got the authority to pay such salaries, or the authority to advertise for such a large number of employees.

Mr. REED. It is in the air, except when you come to the question of a few pale-faced, and sometimes aged, clerks. Them we are proposing to trim, and do it properly, to adopt the slang expression of the day. But at other places it is a matter of reckless expansion.

"Woe unto the scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites."

Notice I am maintaining a strictly parliamentary position. I speak in the impersonal sense. I employ the article "the" instead of the pronoun. [Laughter.] There is something else in near context, that about straining at gnats and swallowing camels. So you strain at a $1,200 clerk's salary and swallow a $5,000-a-year salary, drawn by a gentleman with undisclosed and mysterious duties, which are rendered at some indefinite place for an undetermined period. I read on:

Frank F. Jenks	$4,800
William E. Kellicott	3,600
Russell M. MacLennan	3,000
William A. McKenzie	3,000
Maj. James Miles	2,700
Irwin S. Osborn	4,800
John S. Pardee	3,600
Raymond Pearl	6,600

Pearls come a little higher than the other——

Mr. KING. Jewels.

Mr. REED. Jewels—I thank the Senator—that we find in the Hoover casket. [Laughter.]

B. Harold Powell	$4,200
Charles E. Raymond	3,000
Edward F. Trefz	5,400
Bestor R. Walters	3,000
Clinton R. Whitney	3,120

Now we come to a pay roll for the field service. I do not know what is done in this field.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. Yes; certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it proposed in this bill to make these employees of the Government work also eight hours per day?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; these be immune. [Laughter.]

These in the Hoover department are as sacred as cats were in Egypt [laughter], and whosoever ventures to shy a brick in their direction has at once turned upon him as bitter vials of wrath as the priests of Rameses poured upon the impious who disturbed the felines of ancient Thebes.

I read the pay roll in the field service:

Iowa:
Julianne Doane	$4,800

Now, I do not know what Julianne does, and I do not know what his or her sex may be, but she or he is drawing a very liberal salary, is drawing as much as four of these old clerks that are working down here trying to support themselves and pay Washington rents and Washington grocery bills; but, of course, there will be no effort to interfere with Julianne. Is not he or she employed in the sacred place? I resume reading:

Nebraska:
E. V. Parrish	$3,999.96

Marked down from $4,000. [Laughter.]

New York:
Augustin McNally	$3,189.28
North Carolina:
John Paul Lucas	3,000.00
Pennsylvania:
James A. Finley	3,000.00
Rhode Island—

Here is a female field agent now. There is no doubt about the sex here—

Mrs. Ida S. Harrington	$3,000
Texas:
J. R. Babcock	3,000
H. Wirt Steele	5,004

Will the Senator from Texas tell me why he had that extra $4 added on to his man, or does the Senator from Texas know the gentleman?

Vermont:
James P. Taylor	$3,600
West Virginia:
William Hill	3,000

Now I come to the pay roll in the Fuel Administration. I do not know where these gentlemen work, but somewhere. At least they draw this salary here in Washington—

James B. Edmunds	$3,600
Cyrus D. Foss, jr	3,900
Herbert G. Hopkins	3,600
Richard W. Kirtley	3,600
E. R. Sartwell	3,900

Here is the field pay roll, now, for the Fuel Administration:

New York:
Ellery B. Gordon	$5,004
Utah:
Ledyard M. Bailey	3,000

I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah if he knew he had a constituent drawing $3,000?

Mr. KING. I certainly did not. Having heard his name, I will say, however, that he is a very worthy man, a good Republican, a good man.

Mr. REED. A good Republican and a good man. What was his business? Which particular college did he attend? [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. I have to plead ignorance on that point.

Mr. REED (reading)—

Car Service Bureau:
John S. Spellman	$4,200

Now, you may think I have taken a lot of your time in reading this; but here is a list of the employees in a book [exhibiting], principally made up of employees and expense items. I have read you a few out of thousands—out of thousands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean to state that the Food Department in the city of Washington is employing thousands of persons?

Mr. REED. The Food and Fuel Departments together, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, I think I am safe in saying, are employing thousands. Some months ago the Food Administrator stated that he had, I think it was, eleven or twelve hundred clerks here in Washington alone. Why, Mr. President, they rented the entire Gordon Hotel for headquarters, and I put in the RECORD the other day—and it will be found in one of my speeches—a list of the places where they pay rent in the city of Washington. I have not counted them, but I think there are some 15 or 20. As my colleague suggests, they now have a very large new building. I do not know how many hundreds of thousands of dollars it cost. It is a temporary building. They cut down a lot of beautiful trees in the Mall and put up a temporary shack. Of course it will have to be soon removed.

Not a word is said about these things; but, oh, how we will convince our constituents that we are looking after their interests if we can just go back and say, "Look at what we did to the clerks. See how we have guarded your interests. We have made them work an extra hour every day." [Laughter.] How about these others?

Mr. President, the thing is sickening to me. If we want to economize, let us begin right. Let us begin by placing some restrictions upon the wild extravagance of men who spend money as though it were leaves upon the trees, and as though, to borrow the expression of another, we owned the forests of the world.

Let me state the eight-hour-a-day question once more. I repeat, the eight-hour-a-day fight was a contest to reduce the hours to eight, with extra pay for overtime. The Borland amendment is a fight to increase the hours of labor to eight, with no pay for overtime. They are as different as heat and cold, as light and darkness, as kindliness and brutality.

Mr. President, let us permit the heads of the departments to run the departments. Under the present law they must require seven hours; they can require eight hours', or nine hours', or ten hours' work; and the clerks are responding to every demand that is made. Let well enough alone. Not the head of a department has asked for this law—not one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is lost.

Mr. GORE. I call for a division.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is not here. I suppose it would not be in order to suggest the absence of a quorum. I should be glad to do so if it is not too late. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is asked for. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is lost.

Mr. GORE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are asked for.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, a point of order. It seems to me the Chair has decided the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The Chair has decided it twice.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I made an effort to call for the yeas and nays before the Chair made the announcement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that the Senator from Oklahoma sought to do so, and if there is a mistake about it the roll will be called. That is the only fair way in which the Chair can decide the matter.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, at the end of line 16, after the word "day," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter records shall be kept of all hours of daily work in excess of eight hours by each employee, and employees who have worked extra hours shall be allowed an equal number of hours without work with full pay, and the credit for overtime shall be given as soon as practicable after the extra work has been performed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, was the demand for a roll call seconded?

Mr. REED. There has been no chance yet. It has not been put to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks for a yea-and-nay vote. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. He tells me that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore feel free to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer it to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague [Mr. PAGE], who is absent, and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. In view of his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with that Senator. In his absence, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MYERS. Has the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. MYERS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted without announcing my general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, but because of the transfer announced by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] I am at liberty to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Beckham	Harding	Nelson	Tillman
Borah	Hardwick	Pomerene	Vardaman

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to offer an amendment. In line 12, after the words "District of Columbia," I move to insert the words "or elsewhere," so that it will apply to all the employees of the departments whether in Washington City or anywhere else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. In line 11, page 91, after the word "used," and before the word "to," I move to insert the words "during the existing war."

I know that the war probably may not be over before this money is expended, and yet it may be. This will sustain the principle which I contended for earlier in the discussion of having the provision stand during the existing war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, line 11, after the word "used," the first word in the line, insert the words "during the existing war"; so that if amended it will read:

No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used during the existing war to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to strike out lines 10 to 16, inclusive, on page 91.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] to strike out the paragraph.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair as on the former vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], but as he would vote, if present, as I intend to vote I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is temporarily absent from the Chamber on official business.

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). Making the same transfer of my pair that I did on the last vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted, but I neglected to announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I also have voted, and I neglected to announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to ask if the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with that Senator, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CALDER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. I find he is not present, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORE. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. OVERMAN. My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is absent on important business.

Mr. KNOX. I am paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX. I am informed that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], if present, would vote "yea." So I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent due to illness in his family.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—28.

So Mr. SHEPPARD's motion was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to move to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "day," in line 16, page 91, a comma and the words "with pay at time and a half time for extra hours." The object of the amendment is simply to put these people upon a common footing with all the laboring men and upon a common footing with what the laboring men have demanded, to wit, an eight-hour day, with time and a half pay for overtime. I might spend three hours talking about it and it would not enlighten the Senate a particle. I just announce what my purpose is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, line 16, after the word "day," insert a comma and the words "with pay at time and a half time for extra hours."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment. I think it is general legislation. You will observe, Mr. President, that the provision in the bill was drawn according to the House rule so as to avoid a point of order. I think the proposition offered by the Senator from Mississippi is legislation and is subject to a point of order. I therefore make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this whole proposition in the bill is new legislation, requiring only eight hours a day of work. My amendment is a limitation of the eight hours, prescribing that if they work over eight hours they shall be paid time and a half for overtime. Unless the entire provision is subject to a point of order my amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. GORE. The Senator, I think, is mistaken. If he will observe the language of the House provision, he will see that it was drawn in order to avoid a point of order in the House. It is a limitation or a direction upon the expenditure of the money appropriated in the bill and is not new legislation in any sense.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not care about the technicalities of the draftsman who drew the bill. The actual fact is that these people can be summoned if the head of the bureau chooses to do it. The only trouble is that the head of the bureau never does choose to require them to work 8 hours, or to work 9 hours, or to work 10 hours, or to work 16 hours; but that is the present law. This provision, from line 10 down to line 16, inclusive, provides that they shall not be summoned to work over eight hours. I have put in an amendment to that which is that they shall be paid time and a half for overtime if they are worked over eight hours.

Mr. President, there can be no honest and sincere objection on parliamentary grounds to the amendment which I have offered to the amendment, if the original amendment itself is in order and the original phraseology of the provision in the bill, no matter who intended something else, is susceptible to an interpretation different from the present practice of the departments. That being the case, my proposition is to provide that while the clerks are being required to work eight hours they shall be paid time and a half for overtime. It is clearly in order if the original provision of the House bill is in order.

Outside of that, Mr. President, what do you want to do with these people? I heard a Senator here the other day talking about them as if they were working in a sweatshop. Now, you and I know better than that. There is no sweatshop about these departments. You can go down to the War Department right now—the most overworked department of the Government—and find three men out of ten in nearly every room rolling cigarettes and two or three more reading newspapers. I have nothing against them; I have many friends in the departments who are working all the time, and working their best; but this absurd, fool talk about sweatshops—Government sweatshops—in the city of Washington is a disgrace to the American people and a disgrace to the Senate of the United States ever to have been uttered upon this floor. You know and I know that these employees of the Government are not being overworked.

Now, all I want to do is to put them upon the footing that labor throughout the country seeks. What is labor seeking? An eight-hour-day law with time and a half for overtime, and my amendment will simply give them that—nothing more and nothing less. It does not burden them with extra burdens in comparison with other labor; it does not make a Prætorian home guard in "Rome" of them, as does the present system; and it will do exact justice by all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Mississippi desires to put these employees on the same basis as the labor of the country, generally speaking, would he not have to repeal that provision of the law which gives them 30 days' leave at full pay?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from New York mentioned that, for I temporarily forgot it. Even if this amendment is adopted, they will still not be on a level with the balance of the labor of the country. Mr. President, you know and I know and the Senator from New York knows that these employees have, in the first place, 30 days leave each year, regardless—30 days vacation, 30 days recess. I am not opposed to that. I wish that every laboring man in the United States had it. Labor would be very much more efficient if every man who is hard at work had 30 days at some time to go home or to go somewhere else and fish or hunt or rest or do something else; but the ordinary laborer has not got it, and this Prætorian cohort has it.

That is not all. They have 30 days sick leave; and you know you can go around here in the departments and not bankrupt yourself by offering a ten-dollar prize for every employee who does not take his full sick leave. Even I would not be bankrupted if I made that proposition, and the Senator from New York would have his private fortune hardly touched.

There are 60 days that these people have off, and they take the sick leave whether they are sick or not. A man will come around to your office to beg you for a transfer or promotion or something, and you will say to him, "Can you not come back to-morrow?" He will say, "No; I took this off my sick leave," he being as well a man as ever you saw since you were born. So my proposition does not even put them down to the level of ordinary labor. We can leave that to operate upon later.

One of the things that we ought to do is to provide that a man shall not have sick leave unless he is sick. He ought to have the 30 days, and every other laborer in the United States ought to have it. I hope to God to live to see the time when every man who works with his hands or his head inside of four walls shall work only eight hours a day and shall have at least 30 days of vacation during which to rest up and come back to work again. That, however, is not embodied in my amendment and has nothing to do with it. What I am providing for is that these men, while they are working eight hours, shall have time and a half pay for work in excess of eight hours. That is my amendment; it is only fair, and I hope it will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the point of order is to be discussed, let us get to the point of order. The point of order is made against the amendment. The situation is that this bill contains an appropriation for certain clerks and certain employees at so much a year—not by the hour or by the day, but so much a year. The general law is that the heads of departments may require them to work the number of hours they please. It has been the custom to avoid the general law in the past—and it has been sustained by both the House of Representatives and the Senate as not being general legislation—by inserting a clause to the effect that the money shall not be used save under certain conditions. So the rule of the House and the rule of the Senate in reference to general legislation was avoided in this bill by saying that this money should only be paid when the head of the department required the clerk to work eight hours a day on a yearly salary. Now, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] wants to add to that that the clerks shall be paid a wage and a half for time that is over eight hours. That can not be done unless you change the law by which you pay these clerks, because they get so much a year, and no more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Can the original provision in the bill be passed without changing the original law?

The VICE PRESIDENT. You can provide salaries for everybody under the sun, but if you do not make an appropriation to pay them they can not get them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, Mr. President, the bill makes the limitation upon the payment of the salaries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. True; but the head of the department——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely modify the limitation to another degree.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The head of a department under the law now has the right to require men to work 7, 8, 9, 10, or 11 hours a day. This bill as it now stands says that this money shall be paid to men who are required to work eight hours, and to none other. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not like to bore the Chair——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator could not do that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, according to the Chair's statement, the head of a department now has a right to call on a clerk to work 8 hours or 10 hours or 16 hours, or whatever number of hours he chooses. The provision in this bill is that—

No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau, or office in the District of Columbia which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day.

The present law does not require eight hours of labor each day. The Chair must recognize the fact that that provision now in the bill is a change of existing law, because the present law, while it permits the chief of a bureau to make an employee work 16 hours, does not require him to work eight hours. This proposed new law in fact does require him to work eight hours; and to the provision requiring him and compelling him to work eight hours, which is new legislation, I have offered a further modification of the new legislation, to wit, a provision that when he is required to work eight hours he shall be paid time and a half for the overtime. I repeat that at present he can not be required to work eight hours without a special order of the head of the bureau; the law does not require him to work eight hours. If the law right now did require him to work eight hours, this provision would be utterly worthless and purposeless and foolish. To this new provision that he shall be required to work eight hours, I propose an amendment that when he does work over eight hours he shall have time and a half pay for the excess work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He is not required under this bill to work eight hours.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under this provision of the bill he is required to work eight hours, because it says, if the Chair will excuse me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; he is not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says:

No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any department, bureau or office in the District of Columbia which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day.

The Chair must recognize, as a matter of common sense, as a matter of purpose, and as a matter of intent, that that provision is intended to make these employees work eight hours, or else not receive any pay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no doubt about what the law is or what the precedents of the Senate are, or what the rulings are, and there have been a dozen of them strictly in accordance with the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to give notice that I shall, when the bill is reported to the Senate, renew my motion to strike out the so-called Borland amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to be permitted to say that it seems to me that the soundness of the Chair's decision can not be drawn in question. I do not mean to discuss its soundness, but apart from the fact that this is new legislation, and obviously so, there are two other grounds on which the point of order could have been founded. One is that to meet the proposed change in the law it would require an increased appropriation, which has not been estimated for, and which has not been reported by any standing committee of the Senate. This is entirely apart from the merits of the proposition to pay wages on behalf of overtime. There is a great deal of merit in that contention as affecting the trades and industries, where the tenure is uncertain and there is no vacation provided by law. There may be some foundation for proposing it in connection with the departments, but the amendment was clearly out of order in this instance.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I give notice of that appeal now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 16, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 15, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, praying for that grace, which makes for an exemplary life, a clean home, and a pure Government, since righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a reproach to any people. Hear our petition, O Father, and answer our prayer, in the name of Him who is the world's great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will stand approved.

RATIFICATION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of Maryland, transmitting joint resolution No. 1, of the House of Delegates and the Senate of Maryland, ratifying an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, proposed by Congress to the legislatures of the several States, which was read and ordered filed in the archives of the House.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9867, the urgent deficiency bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9867, with the Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object if we can have the proper understanding. I wish to call attention to the fact that there are some very important Senate amendments on this bill. If the business of the House was not as pressing as it is, I think it would be very well to have this bill go to the committee and have it considered by the committee, but it is tremendously important that the bill be disposed of and enacted into law at the earliest possible moment.

There are many appropriations—many items of urgent necessity—carried in the bill, and it is very important that they should be disposed of. As one Member of the House, I am willing to leave it to the good judgment of the conferees of the House to pass on these very important amendments, providing we may be assured that if any question should arise with regard to the Senate amendments that seem doubtful to the House conferees and on which they can not agree the House may have an opportunity to pass upon the matter before the conference report is finally presented.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say in reply to the gentleman simply this, that touching any amendments of importance there would be no such attempt to forestall the judgment of the House. Unless there was complete accord between all the conferees as to any important amendment, the bill would come back to the House with full information to the House of the situation.

Mr. MONDELL. With that assurance, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill going to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON.

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules, I am informed, has reported a resolution making the daylight-saving bill (S. 1854) in order when the rule is adopted. Now, thinking possibly there may be sufficient time left to-day after the disposition of the present bill to consider that measure, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the bill now before the House, the appropriation bill, it shall be in order to take up and consider the daylight-saving bill, but not so as to go over to-morrow and interfere with to-morrow's business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent that immediately after the conclusion of the discussion and the disposition of this legislative bill he be permitted to take up the daylight-saving bill for the rest of this day. Now, did the Chair get that right?

Mr. SIMS. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not that practically give the daylight-saving bill a privileged status on this day?

The SPEAKER. It does not. It is privileged for the rest of the day, but not privileged——

Mr. WINGO. That is what I say. It is privileged for this day after the present bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the question as the gentleman stated it.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest to the gentleman that he wait until we get to the bridge before we cross it.

Mr. SIMS. It will take no more time to pass the bill than to consider and adopt a rule, and I think this would be a time-saving as well as a daylight-saving request.

Mr. WINGO. It does not appeal to my sense of seriousness to agree even to a rule on that bill. Therefore I object.

MARY M. SAVOY.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia offers a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 250 (H. Rept. No. 383).

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Mary M. Savoy, widow of James Savoy, late an employee on the roll of the House, a sum equal to six months' compensation as a cloakroom man, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said James Savoy.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I will state that this employee was on the roll for a number of years, and this is the customary and usual resolution.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman reporting the resolution a question. Which cloakroom was that gentleman in?

Mr. PARK. The resolution was introduced by Mr. CANNON. I think he was employed on the other side. He was in the barber shop.

Mr. CANNON. Is this for the widow of James Savoy?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that when I came to Congress, in 1873, James Savoy was a barber and employed over here, and he has been on the roll from that time to this. His situation was in the barber shop on the west side.

I want to say, briefly, he was a colored man, and possibly because he had longer service than I have had I entertain pleasant recollections about him, as I think most of the membership does. He was courteous, square, and honest, and he performed his duties well and has crossed over. I think this is the ordinary resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MRS. ANNIE BAILEY.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I have one other small resolution to submit of the same character.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 259 (H. Rept. No. 387).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Annie Bailey, widow of Pinkey Bailey, late an employee on the rolls of the House of Representatives, a sum equivalent to six months' salary, at the rate he was drawing at the time of his death, and an additional sum, not exceeding $250, to defray funeral expenses.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

POSTAL FACILITIES FOR AMERICAN FORCES IN FRANCE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 280.

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the House to what extent there is intelligent and efficient cooperation between the military forces in France and the postal agencies established therein for a prompt delivery of mail matter to the Expeditionary Forces.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ENSIGN WALKER WEED.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, on day before yesterday I asked unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I did that for the purpose of printing an account of the circumstances in which Ensign Walker Weed, of the American Navy, from the town of Glen Ridge, N. J., met his death. I did this because I deemed the circumstances under which he met his death were entitled to public recognition. He was burned in an endeavor to save the life of a comrade who was enmeshed in a flaming aeroplane.

I was asked at that time to withhold my request. Since then I understand this matter has been a subject of consideration by various Members of the House. There have been many acts of conspicuous bravery already performed, and there will doubtless be thousands of others during the continuance of this war. It will be manifestly impossible to print a record of all of them. To print a record of some would occasion discrimination, which would inevitably entail, in some cases, injustice. Therefore it has been intimated that it would be the policy of the House not to print a record of any such occurrences at all, in order to avoid discrimination and injustice. With the understanding that that is to be the policy of the House, I shall not renew my request. [Applause.]

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. On the day before yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I made some remarks on the floor of the House relative to the Washington Market Co. in connection with profiteering from the United States Government. In the Washington Star of yesterday afternoon the president of the Washington Market Co. is quoted in such way as questions my veracity. Concerning that I wish to make some remarks.

I stated day before yesterday that the Government was paying $8,000 a year rental for a portion of the space owned by the United States Government down on Pennsylvania Avenue, and that the United States Government was receiving from that company only $7,500 a year for all of it. The president of that company is quoted in the article to which I just referred, as follows:

> The Washington Market Co. has not rented any of this property to the Government since about the middle of 1915, when the District of Columbia Militia vacated the premises.

The statement which I made, which was to the effect that the Government was now paying $8,000 a year for only a part of that space, was based upon a statement made to me by Mr. Myer, chief clerk of the Treasury Building. I called up Mr. Myer this morning for the purpose of having him verify the statement which I had made. Over the telephone he told me less than an hour ago that he had gone more fully into the subject and had found that the Treasury Department of the Government is now renting 16,000 square feet of space in the Washington Market Co., and that it is paying not $8,000 a year, as I said, but $14,000 a year. He said, however, that the contract of lease was not directly with the Washington Market Co., but that it is with the Mammoth Amusement Co. I asked him who the Mammoth Amusement Co. is, and he said it was A. F. Fox & Co., real estate agents.

The president of the Washington Market Co. is quoted as saying that they have not rented any of that particular property to the United States Government since about the middle of 1915. Bear in mind, please, that the United States Government is getting only $7,500 a year rent for the land alone, which is valued by the assessor at $1,200,000. I took up that question with the auditor of the District of Columbia, and this morning he writes me as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 15, 1918.

Hon. BEN JOHNSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have to advise that lease was entered into by the militia authorities, with the Washington Market Co., July 1, 1914, for the rental of armory in the Center Market, at the rate of $8,000 per annum. These premises were vacated in 1915, for the reason that the Market Co. wanted to raise the rent to $12,000 per annum.

Very respectfully,

S. ROCHE,
Acting Auditor District of Columbia.

Then the president of the Washington Market Co., if he is quoted correctly, goes into the tax question as to these premises. However, the United States Government has nothing to do with the tax question. The taxes are not paid to the United States Government but are paid to the District of Columbia, and for every dollar that the District of Columbia collects in taxes from the Washington Market Co. under the half-and-half plan the United States Government duplicates it by adding another dollar.

The president of the Washington Market Co., after speaking of the taxes, is quoted thus:

> This makes the total of rental, taxes, etc., on Center Market in excess of $44,000.

The assessor for the District of Columbia writes me this morning, and in his letter he says that their total taxes are $19,565.42. But, according to his letter, where the real estate alone is valued at $1,200,662, the tax on that would be only $12,006. Then the assessor further says that the Washington Market Co. pay taxes on their fixtures of $163.88, the full value of the fixtures being $10,925, and he says they also pay 4 per cent on $12,383.09, or a tax of $495.32 on account of gross receipts on a conduit laid under public space. In other words, several years ago Congress granted to the Washington Market Co. the right to lay a conduit under the street for the purpose of furnishing cold air for a cold-storage place across the street, and they pay 4 per cent tax for that privilege, but with that the United States Government has nothing to do.

The assessor in his letter says that the market company pays a total real estate tax of $22,353.86, but of this amount $3,447.63 is upon a square in South Washington, far removed from the property on Pennsylvania Avenue.

So that in order to undertake to make their charge appear more reasonable they include the tax paid upon property far removed from the Washington Market Co. I can not but repeat that the Government has nothing whatever to do with the tax that is collected. If the market company owned the property outright, still they would have to pay taxes. The charter granted by Congress requires the company to pay the taxes, and the company took that as a part of the charter.

In the article where the president of this company is quoted as saying that upon the "land alone" upon which the Washington Market stands they pay a tax of $33,000, that is disputed by the letter of the auditor, which shows that it is only $12,000.

But I am not so much interested in the tax as I am in the fact that in this indirect way he has undertaken to put me in the attitude of having made a false statement when I stated that the Treasury Department was paying $8,000 a year for a part of the space for which the market company pays the Government only $7,500 a year. It turns out to be worse than I was first informed by Mr. Myers. So it seems quite clear now that the United States gets $7,500 a year for all of the property and, in turn, is paying $14,000 a year for part of it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The Government does not own any of the improvements on the land it rents to the market company?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Government owns nothing except the land, and that land is valued, as I said, at $1,200,000, and is getting only $7,500 a year rental for it.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the value of the improvements?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. About $900,000; but the Government is getting an upstairs floor space which was used for a while by the District Militia at $8,000 a year. The rental was raised to $12,000 a year, and they would not pay it and moved out. Then, I am informed, it was used as a dance hall, I do not know at what price, but it turns up now, rented to the United States Government by the Mammoth Amusement Co., for $14,000 a year.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it the gentleman's view that the Government is not receiving a sufficient amount of ground rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not only of that opinion, but I am absolutely certain that it is not.

Mr. MONDELL. Who is responsible for the fixing of the ground rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A former Congress, and I will give the gentleman an insight into it.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the Congress authority to change that ground rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Let me answer the gentleman's question by telling him in a few moments the history of it. Forty-eight years ago Congress leased the land to the market company for 99 years at $25,000 a year. During the first year of that lease, by a piece of legislative legerdemain, the rent was reduced to $7,500 a year. If the lessors of that property were willing to pay $25,000 a year 48 years ago, everybody knows that $7,500 a year for it now is too cheap.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How much longer has this lease to run?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It has 52 years yet to run.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman means the original lease was for 99 years?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The original lease was for 99 years and has 52 years yet to run.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The total rent is only $7,500 a year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that is owned by this market company?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The property is owned by the United States, but the lease is owned by the market company.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And there is no way for the Government to get more than $7,500?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; there is. The lease provides that Congress can take back this property any time it chooses to do so by paying for the value of the buildings; and that is exactly what Congress ought to do. It ought to pay for the value of these buildings and take back the property. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has jurisdiction over these matters. Has the gentleman introduced a bill for the purpose of taking over that property, or to increase the rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I introduced a bill two or three years ago to take back the property, but I could never get it before the House. I am going to reintroduce the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. What did the gentleman say was the value of these buildings?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The assessor reports the value of the buildings at about $900,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Kentucky think the rent the Government is now paying for space in the Center Market Building is excessive?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly I do.

Mr. MONDELL. Who is responsible for the arrangement whereby the Government is paying this excessive rent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think the market company and its profiteering tenants are responsible for it, because Mr. Myers tells me that he searched the town to find other places where clerks might be put to work, but could not find any except that, and had to take it at that price.

Mr. MONDELL. Then any rent the Government may pay is to be excused on the ground that the Government needs the space? Is that the idea?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I am not excusing it at all; but I do mean to say that if I had been the authority which was called upon to rent it, I would first have asked Congress to commandeer it for the use of the Government rather than pay that amount. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. COX. How much would be the total floor space which the Government would get if it took possession of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have not those figures at hand.

Mr. COX. I am just wondering whether or not, if the Government commandeered it and took charge of it, it would not get rid of buying the old Arlington Hotel site at a cost of $4,250,000, and if that would not furnish enough floor space? Does the gentleman know about what proportion of the floor space in the market the Government pays this rent for?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not. The lease was made on May 20, 1870, to the Washington Market Co., and the lease provided that all of that square bounded on the north by Louisiana Avenue and Pennsylvania Avenue, and on the south by the next street behind it. In other words, it takes in a whole square, if I am correctly informed; and not only the whole square but half way out into the street in the rear of the market.

In other words, every time a country fellow comes there with a wagon and backs up and attempts to sell anything from the wagon he has to pay the Washington Market Co. for the privilege.

Mr. HARDY. Does the building cover nearly the whole of the lot?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman know how much rent this amusement company pays the Washington Market Co. for that same space?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no idea at all, as I never heard of the amusement company until about an hour before I came on the floor of the House to-day. I do not know what they are paying. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHBROOK] has just suggested that instead of its being named the "Mammoth Amusement Co." it ought to be named the "Mammoth Graft Co."

Mr. LONGWORTH. And do I understand the original lease was for forty thousand dollars and odd?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The original lease was for $25,000 a year.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And was reduced to $7,500 a year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Less than a year after the charter was granted there was an item in an appropriation bill which was practically meaningless, and Boss Shephard at that time and some other local authorities of the old city of Washington took the question into the courts, and the courts held that the local legislative body and not the Congress had the right to reduce the rent, and they did reduce it, when they themselves were among the largest stockholders of the Washington Market Co.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. In view of the wonderful business sagacity of the Mammoth Amusement Co. and its great successes, does not the gentleman think it ought to be merged with the Bureau of Efficiency?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no opinion as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is dying hard. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like now to read a letter, if the House will indulge me, which I just received from the widow of an ex-Congressman. The letter is dated March 14, 1918, and is written from 1022 Vermont Avenue, this city. It is as follows:

1022 VERMONT AVENUE, CITY, March 14, 1918.

Hon. BEN JOHNSON:

During this great graft of real estate profiteering I have, through force of an unscrupulous landlord, fallen victim, as many others at this present time. I am the widow of the late Jeremiah H. Murphy, of Iowa, who represented that State some few years ago in Congress, and I, through financial reverses, took this house of Col. M. M. Parker, who lives next door to me, as a livelihood in the rooming business. I have been here two years, and all the guests in the house are Government clerks. When the call for clerks to do the Government work was issued, Col. Parker raised my rent from $75 per month to $100 per month; in a couple months later he raised it to $125 per month, and, not satisfied with that, he later demanded $150 per month, till I got tired of such outrageous treatment. I refused to pay the $150. He sold this house about 10 days ago to a real estate firm, the business man of the firm, a Leonard Nicholson, 1617 H Street NW., who now demands $208.50 per month. Is this not outrageous? And, to make matters worse, he has notified me to leave within 30 days, and I have an ill lady here who can not be moved, and these Government clerks—women mostly—have not a place to go. Under these conditions, surely the law can force me out, unless you, through the noble work you are doing, can befriend me in such a dilemma.

I understand the man who has rented this house—a man by the name of Peck; he runs a rooming house at the corner of Vermont Avenue and K Street—intends putting six people in one room—young girls—and men in other rooms, six and seven, charging $37.50 per month each person; he expects to make money under these insanitary, not saying anything of the moral effect of packing people in such quarters. What is there for me to do, and whom must I appeal to to advise me on this matter? I am,

Very respectfully, MARY W. MURPHY.

I wish to say, further, that I have in my hand a lease which the wife of a man who is now in France with the Aviation Corps executed with a real estate firm of this city only a few days ago. This morning she went to that real estate firm and was told that they would not accept the lease from her, she having already signed it, because they had sold the property and that the rent had been increased from $32.50 a month, unfurnished, to $150 a month, furnished.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman believe that a great many of these so-called sales are fictitious?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am satisfied they are.

Mr. RUCKER. In an effort to oppress some helpless tenants; and does not the gentleman believe that as long as the whole world is at war it would be well to introduce a bill to suspend criminal punishments in this town to the extent of giving exemption and immunity to any man who will slaughter one of these profiteers? [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would not go that far, but I do not believe tar and feathers would be out of the way.

Mr. LOBECK. But we have no rails to ride them on nowadays.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I notice by the newspapers that the gentleman has introduced a bill to commandeer on the part of the Government a certain house in this town that has been occupied for some time by Gen. Black.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I introduced such a resolution.

Mr. KEARNS. But his wife refuses to longer live in the property, and I understand the gentleman has abandoned the idea of prosecuting the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Gen. Chamberlain called me up and told me that Mrs. Black would not continue to occupy the house under any circumstances, and that she would not live in it if they were to give it to her.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman has given a great deal of thought to matters of this character, and why would it not be well to introduce a bill which would include the families of all soldiers, officers and privates, who are living in rented property in the United States, providing that the rent of that property during the progress of this war shall not be raised?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This matter has many angles to it. I have taken up the consideration of one of them and have been quite busy, as the gentleman knows.

The newspaper interview with Mr. Whitford to which I referred is as follows:

[From the Evening Star, March 14, 1918.]

PRESIDENT OF MARKET COMPANY DENIES CHARGE—SAYS COMPANY DIDN'T PAY $7,500 RENT AND THEN CHARGE UNITED STATES $8,000 FOR FLOOR SPACE.

Edward O. Whitford, president of the Washington Market Co., took issue to-day with the statement of Representative JOHNSON of Kentucky yesterday that his company pays $7,500 a year rental for property owned by the Government, but demands of the United States $8,000 for the rent of certain floor space.

"The Washington Market Co. has not rented any of this property to the Government since about the middle of 1915, when the District of Columbia Militia vacated the premises," said Mr. Whitford. "The company is paying an annual rental of $7,500 ground rent to the District of Columbia, about $15,000 assessment, and other taxes of more than $12,000 assessed by the District of Columbia, making the total amount now received annually from the market company for the use and occupancy of the land alone on which the Center Market stands of more than $33,000. The additional taxes to the above are added taxes paid on the market buildings and improvements, owned by the company, of more than $11,000. This makes a total amount of rental, taxes, etc., on Center Market in excess of $44,000."

Mr. Whitford called attention that during the 17 years the District Militia occupied 50 rooms and 3 halls, of 54,009 square feet of floor space, the annual rental was but $8,000, while the market company furnished heat, light, and did repairing at an estimated cost of about $4,000 annually.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. FLOOD, Mr. LINTHICUM, and Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10358, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one hour of general debate on the Borland amendment, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment as offered last night and offer the substitute in modified form as it is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. Let us hear the modified form read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 6 the following:

"No increase herein shall apply to salaries or compensation for personal services in any of the executive departments or independent establishments of the Government or of the District of Columbia, or any bureau or office therein, which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the addition of that to the original amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question under consideration is the original amendment with this addition.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, of course I can not fully discuss this matter in the time allotted to me, inasmuch as it involves so much more than at first appears on the mere statement of the resolution.

But, in a word, the statement has been made that this will cost the Government $28,000,000. In my judgment, taking those people outside of the city of Washington, by careful computation it will be found it will amount to more than $30,000,000. In addition to that, the bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, applying to postal employees, all of whom, outside of the District, will work eight hours, will make an addition of about $30,000,000, making, in all, $60,000,000 increase in salary to the employees of the Federal Government under these two amendments.

Now, I would not under any consideration support this amendment for increased salaries at this time unless the employees are required to perform eight hours' service in the District of Columbia. [Applause.] All over the United States, men have been clamoring to get an eight-hour day. They have been granted by the Federal Government, on all Government work, eight hours as a day's labor. Now, in time of war, when you gentlemen must go back to your constituents and ask them to contribute of their means, to economize in their living, you can not in fairness, it seems to me, ask this unless you are willing to say that the clerks in the District of Columbia shall work eight hours a day. I certainly would not ask the people of the United States to contribute of their means unless the Congress and the Government officials shall demand that this money is spent, not for private snaps, but to win the war, and we should be willing to say that these much-sought-for clerks' places must put in eight hours of work a day.

But it goes further than that. There is more involved in this proposition, more than the mere question of dollars and cents. When the people back home shall begin to lag in their interest in winning this war which is overshadowing the whole world, when princes and kings are changed in a day, when the maps of the world may be changed almost in an hour, the most serious moment in the history of the world, in my judgment, in centuries is now before the people, we Members of Congress should be true to those we represent and demand an honest day's work for a day's pay.

We are far removed from the scene of carnage and the scene of action, but if you will carefully study the situation that is presented now to thoughtful minds, we ought to let the people throughout the United States know that right here at the heart of the Government, where all their money is being spent, that it is wisely and justly spent, and especially when the administration is contemplating asking all of the Congressmen to go out and sell liberty bonds, that there is in every heart of those people getting this money that patriotic zeal that prompts every man, from the President down, that is getting this money, taken from the taxpayers, a desire to do his utmost to help to win the war by saving every dollar that he can and making it go as far as possible. [Applause.]

You let the people at home begin to lag in their interest, you let that part of this Government that holds no office, the private citizen, begin to be doubtful, and we have lost the war. Government clerks can not win the war; the men who are offering their lives on the field of battle can not win the war; it will be won by people back home. Our officials and Government clerks should not assume the mental attitude that they will do just as little as possible and will watch the clock and not give more than seven hours of reluctant work to the Government a day. The mental attitude of the Government clerks should be that they will work eight hours a day or nine hours a day, if necessary, and save every dollar they can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, while I am in favor of the present bill as it came from the committee, I am strongly opposed to the adoption of the Borland amendment, so called, which seeks to punish the working girl in Washington for the purpose of making political capital for the benefit of certain politicians.

Twenty years ago Congress enacted the following legislation in the matter of clerical help in the several departments of the Government at Washington:

Hereafter it shall be the duty of the heads of the several executive departments, in the interest of the public service, to require of all clerks and other employees of whatever grade or class in their respective departments not less than seven hours of labor each day, except Sundays and the days declared public holidays by law or Executive order: Provided, That the heads of the departments may, by special order, stating the reason, further extend the hours of any clerks or employees in their departments, respectively, but in the case of any extension it shall be without additional compensation.

Since the enactment of this law the clerks in the several departments have performed their duties in a very efficient and satisfactory manner. No complaints have been made. There have been no strikes among the employees; they have on every occasion rendered extra service without extra pay or additional compensation, and there has been no faultfinding either from the clerks or the heads of the departments.

The present great war emergency has not only called upon the past force of clerks for patriotic and faithful duty but it has expanded and enlarged all the departments, bureaus, and commissions to an alarming extent and has called to the service of the Government a great army of additional clerks and employees, while those who speak for the administration state that before July 1st of this year there will be an additional 20,000 more clerks called to Washington for the war work of the administration.

Greed and avarice have always taken advantage of the necessities and misfortunes of the race. Here in Washington the price of food and rent and every necessity of life has greatly to give them the ordinary and proper necessities of life, and yet the author of this amendment, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], shouts himself hoarse by crying economy and that we should save and thus win the war by grinding the poorly paid clerk and requiring of them longer hours and no additional compensation, and in cases where they are not required by their chiefs to remain at their post after the day's work is done fully the eight hours then they shall be punished by receiving no compensation whatever.

It may be well at the present time to consider the actual condition of the Government employees in Washington. Up to the time of the declaration of war a great many men had been employed in the Government service doing clerical work, but the war has called to the service in the field the young men of the departments, while many other male employees have found more lucrative employment elsewhere, and of necessity the clerical help is now being performed almost exclusively by women from all over the Nation who have passed the civil-service examinations.

This is not true, however, as to the heads of the departments, commissions, and bureaus of this city. War has made a radical change in that particular. The clerk has not been promoted except in rare instances and only where he had a political pull, but there has been appointed at the heads of these great bureaus, departments, and commissions a vast army of well-known politicians, largely from the Southland, who know scarcely anything about the duties of their offices and who are now drawing salaries ranging from $2,000 to $12,000.

This army of officeholders has taken possession of all the public buildings, desirable business apartments, and well-lighted rooms in this city, and they have swarmed and overflowed into the annexes and extra buildings erected recently by the Government. No one but those who are in the secret conclave and at the council table understand the duties and responsibilities of these new chiefs, commissioners, and managers. The departments have all been enlarged to make a vast and colossal war machine. There has been no abolishment of any old department, bureau, or commission, but new war organizations composed of so-called war cabinets, food and fuel commissioners, Navy shipping boards, aircraft boards, Army departments without end, new bureaus of Government, extra commissions without number have a multitude of subdivisions almost endless. At the head of these many departments, bureaus, and commissions are found these fat fellows drawing big salaries, calling themselves heads of departments, chiefs of bureaus, and managers of commissions. They are distinguished from the clerks under them by having upon their person the uniform of the Army or the Navy. They have never earned any rank or commission on the battle field or on the sea in peace or war. They are, however, wearing the Army and Navy bars and insignia and rank according to the size of their salaries, no doubt. They must be called by those under them generals, majors, captains, and chiefs. Some of them wear spurs, which no doubt were won by valiant service in suppressing the negro vote of the South. They have not been required to pass any civil-service examination, and no examination whatever of a mental nature except proof of loyal and patriotic services rendered for their party in the past and their ability, power, and influence to deliver votes to that party in the future.

We all understand the cry of economy on the part of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr BORLAND], and we also understand the violent denunciation of the clerks by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], who says that we should think of the people at home who will be dissatisfied with us if we do not work these clerks fully eight hours, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] worked himself up into a frenzy while he shouted:

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], who opposes this amendment, does not say anything in the interest of the farmers in his county that work from sun to sun, while their poor wives' work is never done. He says nothing about the lumberjacks working for the lumber industries of the country. These very industries are now complaining because Congress is threatening even to make an eight-hour law for their employees, and yet not a word in behalf of these employees is heard.

Yes; it is good politics, no doubt, on the part of those southern Representatives to declaim against the working girls in Washington because she has no vote, but they are as silent as the grave when it comes to appropriate the millions to pay the big salaries of those roller-desk patriots who are serving the Government for the pay in its time of need.

I want further to say to these gentlemen that the constituents of the gentleman from Maine, the farmers and the lumberjacks, are not finding fault with the small pittance you give the working girl in Washington. Many of them have daughters in the employment of the Government here, and they want to know always that their girl from home has the necessities of life from an honest employment and that she has reasonable hours of labor; and while I believe the working girl will find more congenial employment at home, with better pay, I want it understood that they are here at the urgent request of the Government and because the Government has sounded the call far and wide that it was necessary to have the extra clerical help to carry on the work of the war. They are doing honest work with more patriotism than the gentleman from Missouri is now doing in trying to ridicule and oppress them. They are entitled to as much consideration from this Congress as are those who fatten their greed from the Nation's misfortune.

The people at home are very anxious as to how the billions we have raised shall be spent; they are troubled about these "Hog Island contracts," made by the chiefs of these new bureaus and commissions, but they do not worry about the extravagance of the working girl in Washington, for they know she is not liable to become either a slacker or a grafter.

When the working girl in Washington has performed her seven hours of work in a hot, stifling superheated room, shut away from the sunlight and God's fresh air, and with tired hand and aching head longs for the rest of home it will not win this war or satisfy the unrest of labor to say to her she must remain another hour at her post with nothing to do but to watch a weary hour go by that has been lost to her forever.

At the present time, when any emergency comes, when extra work demands her attention, she cheerfully works not only 8 but 10 and 12 hours—far into the night, including Sundays, without any extra pay or additional compensation. This she is willing to do, but she will not be satisfied to have forced upon her an extra hour of useless waiting to satisfy the political ambition of the gentleman from Missouri, who, when this amendment passes, can return to his people in the South and say, "I helped win the war by compelling the working girl in Washington to remain at her department an extra hour after her work was completed without any extra pay or additional compensation."

When this war is ended and our country shall have time to adjust itself to normal conditions, when the people shall know for the first time how their billions have been spent, when investigations of these great bureaus of war shall have been completed, and we shall know the facts, it will then be discovered that it was not the working girl in Washington that was the slacker and the grafter but those who, forgetful of their country and with greed and avarice before their eyes, used the war and its opportunities to fatten their fortunes and fix themselves into permanent and life positions in the bureaus of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes against the proposition to my colleague from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I wish gentlemen who are in favor of the so-called Borland amendment would not deem it necessary to abuse the men and women who have come to the Nation's Capital at the urgent request of their Government to perform an important public service. Government clerks are human beings, like the rest of us. They are just about as patriotic as most of us, and I think that in this time of crisis the ordinary Government clerk is probably sacrificing as much as the ordinary Member of Congress. The Government clerk is entitled to a square deal in this House. He is representative of every section of this country, and you can not indict the patriotism of the Government clerk unless you are prepared to indict the patriotism of the people of the entire country.

To my mind the problem presented here to-day is a very simple one. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has introduced an amendment fixing a minimum eight-hour day. Now, what is the attitude of the Government clerks toward the proposition? The clerks ask that the Government shall execute the contract which the Government has entered into with every Government employee. I hold here in my hand the Manual of Examinations issued by the Civil Service Commission, and I want to call your attention to one paragraph which has appeared in every manual issued for years:

> The law requires of all clerks and other employees of whatever grade or class in the executive departments at Washington not less than seven hours labor each day, except Sunday and days declared public holidays by law or Executive order. These hours, now fixed at from 9 a. m. to 4.30 p. m., counting half an hour for lunch at midday, may be extended by the head of an office if, in his judgment, the public business demands such action. Overtime is without extra compensation.

Then it goes on to give the other details. Now, the Government clerk simply says, "I want the Government to carry out this agreement entered into with me by the Government voluntarily. I am willing to work overtime whenever the head of a bureau or a department may say that the public interest requires such overtime, and I will not ask for any extra compensation. But when the executive officer says that it is not necessary to work more than seven hours, then I think the Government should carry out its agreement with me."

I submit, my friends, that that is a good proposition from the Government's point of view. If you fix an eight-hour day you must of necessity be fair enough with the Government clerk to grant him overtime for such extra hours as he may work.

You will note that the gentleman from Missouri does not couple any such proposition with his amendment. If the gentleman from Missouri came into this House with a proposition asking for an eight-hour day, with compensation for overtime; in other words, placing the Government clerk on exactly the same footing as other Government employees, he would stand in much better position, and, personally, I would be willing to give the proposition very sympathetic consideration. But as a matter of economy the proposition submitted by the clerks means the saving of large sums to the Government.

The other day the gentleman from Missouri succeeded in tacking on this amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill. Did he follow it up with a motion to reduce the appropriation for clerk hire? Not by one penny. And if this amendment that he now offers is adopted, the appropriation for clerk hire will not be reduced one dollar.

So, my friends, the claim that the adoption of the Borland amendment will be followed by a tremendous saving is without foundation in fact, as is evidenced by the gentleman's failure to move a reduction in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The gentleman from Missouri is a Democrat. The Democratic Party is in control of this Government. When he tells this House and the country that the departments at Washington are filled with slackers, who at a time of crisis would refuse to do a day's work for the Government, should he not realize that he is presenting an indictment against the President of the United States and every executive officer? Because all that is necessary in order to compel the clerks to work as many hours as the business of the Government demands is that the President or the head of any department or bureau should attach his signature to an order directing the extension of hours.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. KEATING. I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is not mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Missouri is out of order, of course. But on that point——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman will endeavor, undoubtedly, to tell you that I am mistaken. I am not mistaken. The gentleman from Missouri should know, because he seems to have devoted a good deal of attention to the subject, what the Civil Service Commission states in its manual, that the hours of labor may be extended whenever the public interests demand.

You have not heard any civil-service employee say that he is unwilling to obey such orders. The position of the civil-service employees in this contest is what I stated before. It is this: "We have entered into a contract with the Government, binding in morals if not in law, by which we were to have a seven-hour day except when the public interest demanded longer hours, and the question of the necessity for longer hours was to be determined by the executive officers of the Government from the President down. We are perfectly willing to carry out that proposition without extra compensation."

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. MEEKER. I think we are all aware that many of these men and women are working overtime. Can the gentleman give us any information as to about the percentage of overtime that is being worked?

Mr. KEATING. I can not give exact figures on that point. A great number of Government clerks are working overtime. But so far as action on this proposition is concerned, they are agreed as to the general policy and are perfectly willing to work overtime when the public interest demands it, not demanding a penny for this extra work, but simply saying that when the executive officers of this Government say that seven hours work is sufficient on a certain day or a certain week or a certain month that they shall have a seven-hour day.

Why, no business man under similar conditions would think for a moment of placing himself in the position of breaking faith with people who had come here at his request. These clerks did not troop to Washington seeking these positions, despite what the gentleman from Missouri may tell you. All over this land advertisements have been placed in the newspapers. Stenographers have been told that they owed a duty to their country to come here to work for the Government, and I know of my own knowledge men who have sacrificed positions paying more than they are getting in the Government service, and who have come here and are now working for the Government for less than they got at home, because they felt that they should have some part in this great contest for democracy.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. No; I can not yield just now. One of these gentlemen entered my office the other day and told me that the first day he was in Washington he worked until 9 o'clock at night. The next day they kept him on duty until 11 o'clock at night. He was not paid a penny for overtime and made no demand for overtime. But the third day they caught up with their work, and the men were let off at the end of seven hours.

Now, my friends, that is the proposition that is before you. It is not a question of dealing with a lot of slackers. It is a plain business proposition, and I hope the House will vote down the Borland amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the time may soon come when the Government clerks and employees of the United States in governmental departments may call upon some one to save them from their friends. [Applause.] The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] bespeaks admiration for the patriotism of the Government clerks and says that they are as patriotic as the Members of Congress. He says that in the face of the statement made by their other champion, the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], in debating the amendment yesterday whereby we increased the pay of clerks, and advocating a larger increase than was recommended by the committee, when he said, "If that is the way the Government of the United States is going to treat its employees, you can not expect to have cooperation, you can not expect to have a patriotic feeling among them." I did not know that the employees of the United States Government placed their patriotism upon a basis of dollars and cents. [Applause.] These gentlemen apparently unwittingly are the spokesmen of that small but treacherous element throughout the country who believe there is a union superior to the Union of the States, and that that is labor, represented by I. W. W.ism and its imitators, because they have not hesitated here in this great crisis to seemingly advocate measures, even when it would appear that they would unquestionably obstruct the country in the proper and successful prosecution of the war. And I say to my friend, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], who is solicitous for some people who have come here from his district, that we have a higher interest here in this emergency than that of the few employees who may have come from our districts. [Applause.] That is the interest of the whole country in order that we may win the war. The very law that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] quoted recognizes the fact that in case of emergency these people can be required to work longer than seven hours. Yesterday we debated an amendment which, if enacted into law, will apply to all the Government employees throughout the country alike, giving them an increase of $120 in their wage or salary up to and including the $2,000 grade, and I say we should not to-day follow that up by making the clerks here in Washington—the poor, tottering, crippled employees who have to drag themselves up the stairways in the various departments by taking hold of the balusters, as they were so pathetically depicted here the other day—we should not say to them to-day, "We will make of you a privileged class. While the Government employees in other parts of this country must work eight hours a day, you will only have to work seven hours a day."

And if the heads of these departments do not require more than seven hours a day, I submit it is our right to say to them, as representing the people of the United States, that we, the Congress, believe the time has come in this emergency to require more than seven hours a day and to change the law and make it eight hours a day and make it uniform throughout the country in governmental departments.

What a pleasing message to send to the boys who are now giving up their lives on foreign soil, that we here, with many grave measures of importance pending and waiting for action, are spending our time discussing whether the Government clerks in Washington should be required to work only seven hours a day after we have increased their pay, whilst we require Government employees in other fields of service outside of the District of Columbia to work not less than eight hours a day. I would rather send a message across to these boys to the effect that the American Congress will require its clerks to work eight hours a day, if necessary, more efficiently to crush our enemy. Why, the Executive has issued an order, I understand, in connection with the erection of the Treasury Annex Building, abrogating the eight-hour provision of the law in order that three shifts may be used, so that that building may be erected speedily, and I contend that we of the legislative branch of the Government are entitled to say to the heads of these departments, "You should speed up in the departments, and in order to do so you must require at least eight hours' work." [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as agreed to yesterday afternoon will add an additional appropriation of $29,000,000 as increased pay to the clerks working in the various departments of the Government. Many of these lower-paid clerks no doubt should have an increase in their salaries, but in my judgment it is utterly indefensible to increase the salary of any clerk who is now drawing $1,600 a year or more. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] proposes that all Government clerks before they shall participate in this increase in salary shall be required to work eight hours per day. His amendment is just, fair, and reasonable to the clerks and to the taxpayers of the country who will be called upon to pay this additional $29,000,000, and it should receive the unanimous support of every Member of the House. No Member should cast a dissenting vote against it in these trying and troublesome times that try men's souls. We are engaged in this great war, and every man and woman physically able to work should be willing to do their bit to bring it to a quick and successful conclusion.

It certainly is not an unreasonable request to require the clerks to work eight hours per day. In this connection it might be well to recite a little ancient history. The Sixty-second Congress passed a law fixing eight hours as a day's work for all women in the District of Columbia working in stores, banks, hotels, restaurants, laundries, and so forth. These women actually put in eight hours per day, and I am reliably informed that the average salary of the saleswomen working eight hours per day in the department stores does not exceed $12.50 per week. If eight hours is a reasonable day's work for women in the District engaged in their line of work, it certainly is not unreasonable to require the clerks to work eight hours per day.

In September, 1916, Congress by law fixed an eight-hour day for upward of 400,000 railroad employees in the United States, and I ask you gentlemen to compare the line of work done by the railroad employees with the line of work done by the Government clerks.

Every time an engineer steps into the cab of his engine and pulls the throttle starting his engine and train onward there is but one-eighth of an inch of iron, the thickness of the flange on the drivers of his engine, between him and eternity. Think of the brakeman on top of a train in that big western country of ours, having from 60 to 75 cars and hauling 2,000 tons to the load, on top of his train, day and night, with the thermometer 20° below zero, on 110 in the shade, with the wind and storm, rain, hail, and snow beating down upon him, so as to make it almost unbearable for a brute, much less a human being. Think of the thousands of switchmen in the various cities coupling and uncoupling cars all night long making up trains to haul food and clothing to the clerks in the city of Washington, while those clerks are in theaters, pool rooms, billiard halls, or ten-pin alleys, or in bed sound asleep, and compare, if you will, the hazardous work done by those employees working eight hours per day, engaged in the most perilous undertakings, with the clerk safely hidden away in rooms built of marble or granite.

Again, think of the 50,000,000 people living in the country on the farms, working from daylight until dark in order to raise food and clothing to feed and clothe these Government clerks. The limitation of the farmer is fixed by the sun. Aye, not even that. Thousands of them have provided themselves with lights hanging on their plows, reapers, mowers, and binders, driving them until midnight. You hear of no strikes, shutdowns, or lockouts or demand for eight-hour day among the farmers of the Nation, and if the clerks in the city of Washington the coming year are to get three square meals per day thousands upon thousands of farmers' wives the coming season will be walking between two plow handles or riding on mowers, binders, reapers, and so forth, in order to raise food and clothing to feed and clothe the clerks, thousands of whom are unwilling to work eight hours per day.

Again, the farmer more or less has to gamble against the laws of nature itself. He must gamble with the season, rain, hail, frost, drought, chinch bugs, Hessian fly, and boll weevil, but with his two strong arms, and his determination to win by eating his breakfast by the lamp, and his supper likewise, he will overcome all these pests and raise an abundance of crops of the sun shines and the rain falls at the proper time.

The clerks in the various departments have 30 days' leave of absence each year, with full pay; 30 days' leave of absence with sick pay in the event they are sick. They have all the national holidays off with pay and in addition have every Saturday afternoon off between the 15th of June and the 15th of September each year. How many days off with full pay do the women working in the department stores and banks, laundries, hotels, restaurants, and so forth, here in the city have? None. How many days off with full pay do the 400,000 railway employees have each year? Not one. How many days off with full pay do the farmers have each year? Not one. In this connection I may say that the Agricultural Department two years ago, after careful investigation, reported that the average income of each farmer and all his family working with him was only $600 per year, and out of this his living expenses had to come. There is no patriotism in any clerk working for the Government anywhere who is unwilling to work eight hours per day.

I hold in my hand the Washington Post of this day. The headlines are: "Americans killed and wounded on the French front."

This report says 4 soldiers were killed outright, 2 died of wounds, 14 severely wounded, and 40 slightly wounded. No 8 hours per day is going in the trenches of France while our soldiers are going over the top. It may be 24 hours; yes, it may be 48 hours; and every one of our brave boys killed or wounded lost his life or received his wounds in defense of every clerk's job—yes, in defense of the Nation. The death list is small, I know, compared to what it will be six months from now. Yes, it is negligible as compared to what it will be a year from now. Then I am afraid it will mount well into the thousands. [Applause.]

"But," says one clerk, "if I have to work eight hours per day, when will I do my shopping?" Says another husky young man, "If I have to work eight hours per day I will have to get up too early in the morning." I am unwilling to vote this $29,000,000 increase, or any part of it, to pay the clerks unless the Borland amendment carries compelling every one of them to work eight hours per day. [Applause.]

I will never tell my people that I voted this burden upon them and then refused to vote to compel the clerks to work the insignificant limit of eight hours per day. Patriotism, common decency, and love of country should compel every clerk in all the departments to willingly work eight hours per day without being compelled to do it by law. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS].

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, as is usually true in a case of every species of hysteria that affects humanity, like the Borland amendment, it proceeds upon a false basis. The author of this amendment takes it for granted that the men and women employed in the various departments of this city are working but seven hours a day and are being paid or overpaid for a seven-hour workday. That premise is false in this, that the clerks in this city are not limited to a seven-hour day and are not paid on such a basis. They have certain tasks to perform, and there is not a department in all the city of Washington where the employment is confined to seven hours. The heads of the departments in the city will tell you upon inquiry that many of the men and women not only work 7 hours each day, but often 8 or 10 hours a day, and without any increase in compensation. They are not paid for overtime, while the employers of labor in private activity are required to pay their help at the rate of time and a half for overtime.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEARNS. I will.

Mr. HARDY. Is it justice between employees if one department should require nine hours and another department only seven hours of labor?

Mr. KEARNS. It would not be justice if that were true. There is not a department in the whole city of Washington wherein the employees of that department do not put in many hours in the week overtime. If you are working for a private individual, it is true he requires you to work eight hours, but if you work nine he pays you for the overtime, and for the extra hour you get one and one-half more money than for any one of the first eight.

There has been some talk this morning that these men and women who have come to Washington since the declaration of war ought not to come for dollars and cents, that their patriotism is put on a money basis. There has been some talk, too, since the declaration of war, that men employed in private employment have gone on strikes and asked for more money, and that their patriotism has been impugned for that reason. I say to you that since the declaration of war the men who are employing labor are making more money out of that labor of their employees than they have ever made before. Do you impugn the patriotism of these men who are working in such employment when they ask a part of the increase of wealth that their own hands have made? Men on the floor of the House will impugn the patriotism of these men, who only want a certain part of the products of their labor. [Applause.] Their toil has contributed to the increased profits, and justice demands that these toilers receive a part of this profit.

The compensation of Government clerks was fixed back in 1898, when the cost of living was not half what it is to-day. With the exception of one slight increase, it is the same to-day. Labor in private employment has doubled its wage in that time, and has not yet reached its just reward.

I am against this Borland amendment until you increase the salary of these employees to a point that will compensate them for their time and services. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the House by a very small margin voted to include among those employees who would receive the raise of pay the "patronage" employees of the House. I desire now to call to your attention a specific instance of what this means, because little by little, with the help of others, I hope some day to arouse the House to consciousness of the moral issue involved in certain practices that are too general in the House of Representatives to-day.

I shall give a specific instance, and I say that it is not an exceptional instance but is rather illustrative of the system, and I give it that you may think about it. On December 14 the House of Representatives was considering a resolution to appoint clerks for the expenditure committees. Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, offered the following amendment, which was adopted:

Resolved, That no compensation shall be paid under this authority except where a clerk other than the clerk of the Member who happens to be the chairman of the committee is named.

In spite of the action of the House of Representatives in passing that resolution, I call your attention now to the instance of one chairman who, by his seniority attained that dignity in the House, who promptly appointed his own son, who then was and still is his congressional secretary, receiving presumably $2,000 per year, clerk of the committee of which he was the chairman at $6 a day. Yesterday you raised his pay and the gentleman who is the father of that boy voted to raise his son's pay on the theory that he was not getting a living wage at $6 per day, although on the roll of the House he is presumably getting $2,000 more. To me these things present moral questions. It is possible that even in this war if the Republicans had controlled this House some such practice might prevail, but, may I say, I hope not. Yesterday, just in time to save and increase the caucus power of the majority of this House, four men, newly elected Democratic Members, came from my State and held up their right hands and swore to be good Congressmen. Almost immediately they cast their first vote for a proposition like this. It was, indeed, a great day for Tammany, and I dare say the four men who came here, though they had never seen their party in caucus in the House, will long remember the opportunity which they had, because they arrived just in the nick of time to be of service to that caucus and to strengthen its grip upon the public purse. [Applause.]

I have many other illustrations that I should like to give, but my time will not permit. You all have them in mind. There is not a man in this House, there is not an employee of this House, who can not cite to you illustrations. In the old piping days of peace, when the revenue of the Government came from an invisible source, these things were not justified; but when your country is fighting for her life, and your boys are at the front offering their lives, when every home in the Nation is giving of its money and its blood to save the very life of the Republic, what do you think of the moral standard of a man or of a set of men who will put such action on the record? [Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the law as it now stands is more economical than it would be if the Borland amendment were adopted, especially during this time. The law as it now stands requires the heads of these departments, if necessity requires, to order these employees to work more than 7 hours a day, more than 8 hours a day, more than 9 or more than 10 hours a day. If this amendment be adopted, it will result in a loss at this particular time rather than in a saving, in my opinion, for the reason that there is not a single one of these departments but what of necessity is being compelled to call upon its employees to work more than 8 hours a day, and I shall cite a concrete example. Take the disbursing office of the War-Risk Bureau of the Treasury Department. When they were getting out their pay for the soldiers at the last pay day they requested, and an order was entered, that those working in the disbursing office of that department should keep at work until the work was accomplished, and in order to do that thing they worked two full nights. Compute what that force of more than 800 employees would have been entitled to had we a strict 8-hour-a-day law and the Government were paying them for overtime. No one will contend—and it will be one of the things that will follow as a matter of course—that if a strict 8-hour-a-day law be enacted there will not be a bill introduced for the purpose of providing pay for overtime. So that I say as an economic measure it is far better during this war, when this Government is being taxed to its uttermost in every one of these departments, and when the heads of these departments, if they are true to the trust assigned them, will require of every man working under him that he do his duty and do it well, whether it takes 7 or 8 or 9 or 10 hours—as an economic measure, I say, it is far better to leave the matter as it stands. There is nothing that can be said in favor of the Borland amendment from that point of view. I believe that during this war and until its close the men who are employed in these departments, rather than being referred to as timeservers working for a specific number of hours a day, should be made to realize the fact that their patriotism is being appealed to and relied upon, and that if it takes all of the 24 hours in the day in order to accomplish their tasks these men will freely give of their time to back up the boys on the firing line in France, who will be called upon many times, I fear, to give more than twice 7 hours a day in their performance of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I am not an extremist. I am always in favor of justice and generosity to labor, but I believe that the laboring people themselves, the clerks here, do not object to this amendment. It is a matter of simple economy. One hundred employees in a department at eight hours a day will do 800 hours of work. If you give them a seven-hour day, it will require 114 employees to do the work. That produces, or tends to produce, a congestion of employees. I believe eight hours is sufficient for the accomplishment of efficient work. That is the time that has been agreed upon by the labor unions all over the country. I believe in an eight-hour day for labor and for clerks, and I can not for the life of me see how anyone can object to this amendment. In fact, I believe that the clerks, but for the influence of the newspapers here in Washington agitating against it, would sign a round robin asking this Congress to fix eight hours as a legitimate day's work. Labor now is scarce all over the country, and a great many persons are coming here to get employment. I do not believe they ought to be brought here with the idea that, while eight hours is a day's work elsewhere, seven hours only is a day's work here. I believe the best clerks and employees of the Government here are willing to work eight hours regularly, and even more if the Government in stress needs it. So believing, I shall vote for the Borland amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am sorry that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is not here. I do not intend to waste much time on him, because his indictment of me is characteristic of his mental attitude on all progressive questions affecting the interests of labor, either organized or unorganized.

I do not see how the Congress of the United States can do any different in this instance than the President of the United States himself. Just shortly after we entered into the war in 1917 the great State of New York, through its legislature, then in session, put through a measure practically abolishing all labor standards in the State of New York for the period of the war. The President of the United States came out in a positive declaration against the abolition of any labor standard, either by the Government of the United States or the States themselves, and the private employers. The governor of the State of New York saw fit immediately to veto the measure that had passed both houses.

Now, the question that the Congress of the United States is to consider here to-day is a question of contractural relations. Labor organizations and individuals from time to time have been severely criticized for the violation of agreements. Now, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] this morning read to you the Manual of the Civil Service Commission, which has guaranteed to every man or woman that came from your State or my State for the last 20 years that seven hours per day would be the day's work in the District of Columbia, unless determined otherwise by the heads of the departments, and the power is placed in the hands of the heads of the executive departments and independent bureaus to require them to work increased hours without additional compensation, and this is being done now and has always been the practice to require the clerks and other employees to work overtime without overtime compensation; in the mechanical establishments here in the District, where the eight-hour day prevails, overtime pay is allowed for all time worked in excess of eight hours.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] offers his amendment here to-day, which provides for no additional compensation. You have brought these people here for 20 years or more with the distinct understanding in regard to the hours of labor. You are called upon to consider a proposition that increases their hours at least one per day without any increased compensation, and then you expect them to rest content. I wonder how many private institutions in this country, or corporations, could get the active cooperation of their employees if they were to arbitrarily raise the hours of labor—I do not care whether it is from 7 to 8, 8 to 9, or 9 to 10—without giving those employees some compensation for the additional time exacted.

I trust the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not true that with the present hours of labor and the present salary over 50 per cent of the persons certified for appointment decline to accept positions in Washington?

Mr. NOLAN. I have no knowledge on the subject, but I presume the statement of the gentleman is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, when I became a Member of this body there were no eight-hour laws on the statute books. For years I made a fight to the best of my ability, assisting the leaders in that movement for an eight-hour day, until the laws which are now on the statute books were enacted. I believe in an eight-hour day for men who labor with their hands. Here is a proposition which until recently, I am compelled to admit, I did not sufficiently consider. When the proposition was first suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] I thought I ought to take a position in favor of the eight-hour day for Government employees. On one occasion, at least, I think I voted for the gentleman's proposition. But I would rather be right at any time than be consistent, and I propose now, for the reasons that I will attempt to give in the brief time I have, to explain why I expect to vote against the Borland amendment.

In the first place, the question of changing the standard of labor, so far as it pertains to the number of hours per day of Government employees, has not been considered by any efficiency board. There is no recommendation of the Borland amendment from any efficiency board. No head of any department has ever recommended this legislation. The only department of this Government which has ever carefully considered this question is the Council of National Defense, and the Council of National Defense, after reciting the various standards set for work the country over, have recommended that there be no change in those standards during the period of this war. No other organization of this Government has given to this question any consideration except the Council of National Defense, and they have declared against it during the period of this war and have declared against the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

As it stands now these hours of labor can be increased by Executive order. Some years ago they were increased half an hour by Executive order. As the law stands now these clerks can be required to work more than seven hours a day by the heads of their departments, and they are required to work more than seven hours a day when more than seven hours of work appears to be necessary. I find them in all of the departments of this Government working more than seven hours a day. I remember when we had under consideration the last revision of the tariff we had detailed to the Ways and Means Committee 15 or 20 of these clerks, who were experts upon this particular question, who were expert accountants, and I saw them go to work in the room of the Ways and Means Committee at 9 o'clock in the morning, and I saw them work all day long and until 12 o'clock at night, and I saw them work all day on Sundays for two weeks of time. This is what Government clerks can do, this is what they are anxious to do, if they are requested to do it and the necessity for it appears. You can not compel a man who works with his hands——

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. I understood you to say that they are perfectly willing to work eight hours a day if they are requested. I am in favor of Congress requesting them to do it.

Mr. RAINEY. You are in favor of compelling them to do it?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. You can not compel the clerk who works with his brain at his desk to work half an hour longer if he does not want to, to save your life. You can not compel a horse to drink if he does not want to drink. You can compel the clerks to loaf half an hour at their desks, those who want to loaf and stay there an extra half hour. That is what you are doing. Those who are efficient and who are anxious to be of service will work more than eight hours when it is necessary, and they do work more than eight hours. Those who are lazy and inefficient will remain longer at their desks if you require them to do so, but they will not work unless they feel like it. I believe in organization of labor if they want to organize. I believe in collective bargaining.

At the present time Government employees are organizing the country over and are becoming affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. I regard this as a most dangerous proposition. The Government can not afford to deal with organizations of citizens. There is only one way in which Government employees who are organized can enforce their demands for larger compensation, and that is by threatening Members of Congress in their districts. Sometimes they can frighten some of them, and by doing what they can to elect Members of Congress who will be in favor of their demands on the Treasury, no matter how exorbitant they may be. The number of Government employees is constantly increasing. Organizations of workingmen enforce their demands by strikes. Of course, a strike among clerical employees of the Government is inconceivable and could not under any circumstances be tolerated.

I am opposed in any way, directly or indirectly, to recognizing organizations of Government employees. All organizations of workingmen agree in their demands for an eight-hour day, and extra pay for overtime, and these demands are being recognized. As soon as you establish an eight-hour day for Government clerks, to that extent you recognize the basic proposition upon which organizations of workingmen operate, to wit, an eight-hour day; and when you do that it will follow as a matter of course that if you require them to work overtime they will demand the usual overtime pay, to wit, one and one-half times as much as their compensation fixed on a basis of an eight-hour day.

Bank clerks are not required to work over seven hours unless it should be necessary in emergencies for them to work longer than seven hours, and then they are expected to do it, and I have seen them, and so have all of you, working late into the night. Government clerks can be required under the present arrangement to work as long as is necessary, and for that reason their minimum workday has been fixed as it is, and at the present time there are thousands of them here in the city of Washington working 10 and even 12 hours per day without complaining, obeying the orders of their chiefs. I see no reason for changing this system of doing things, especially in war time. The Council of National Defense has declared against any change such as this resolution contemplates.

The proponents of this proposition insist that it will accomplish a saving of something like $7,000,000 per year for the Government. I contend that the change contemplated by this amendment will result in no saving at all to the Government; but, conceding that it does, the proposed increase in the pay of clerks means an additional expenditure of $28,000,000 per year, and this bill is to be followed by others. It will be difficult for Members of Congress who vote for both these propositions to reconcile their votes. It is hardly a good business policy to expend $28,000,000 a year and the hundred million or more which will be embraced in subsequent bills, all of which I expect to oppose, for the purpose of saving $7,000,000 per year. If the Borland amendment prevails and becomes the law, we will at once be confronted with demands for overtime pay, and if the Borland amendment becomes a part of the committee amendment which increases these salaries the parliamentary situation will be that it will be impossible to get a separate vote in the House on either proposition and it will be impossible to defeat either proposition. The increase-in-compensation amendment will go through and the other bills which have in view a like purpose will probably also go through and the result of it all will be an additional charge of $100,000,000 on the Treasury per year, which charge will in all probability be a fixed charge, and will be continued through the war and perhaps after the war, and we will be confronted immediately with demands for the usual overtime pay, which will result in still further increasing this expenditure by a sum which can not even be estimated at the present time, but which will later amount to many millions of dollars every year.

I expect to vote against this amendment and against the proposition to increase the pay of clerks in the present abnormal period. In my judgment neither of these matters ought to be written into the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to ask if those clerks who were detailed to the Ways and Means Committee were not paid extra out of the contingent fund of the House? I will give you half a minute in which to answer that.

Mr. RAINEY. I do not understand the record shows that, and I do not think it does. One or two of them may have received some extra compensation out of a fund placed at the service of the committee for unusual and very long hours, but I know the clerks regularly attached to the committee received no extra compensation, and they worked far into the night at that time, and at the present time they frequently work 10 and 12 hours a day, and even longer than that, and receive for this service no extra compensation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for one minute.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it was not my intention to say anything on the Borland amendment, and I would not have spoken at this time if I had not listened to the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. It seemed to me, as I listened to that speech, that it was an indictment of the patriotism of the American workingman.

It is true that there are some slackers among the ranks of the working classes of our country, and we all feel ashamed of them, but not any more so than among any other classes of people in our country; and it ill becomes the gentleman from Massachusetts, and especially one who does not work any harder than he does, to stand up here on this floor and indict the patriotism of the American workingman. [Applause.]

Let the gentleman from Massachusetts go with me into the district in which I live; let him go into the banks there on a Saturday night and see the men in that great industrial iron and steel district marching up to the cashier's window and paying for liberty bonds and savings stamps. I resent the statement he has made. I claim there are just as good and patriotic people among the working classes in this country as there is among any other classes of our people to-day. [Applause.]

I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts did not intend to say what he did. I believe he will agree with me when I say that as a whole the American workingmen have responded nobly during this great crisis and will continue to give their best and all for the great cause which we are contending for to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am for the Borland amendment. I want to say that, in my opinion, the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to great credit and to the gratitude of the whole country for the fight he has been making for the past two years for the principle involved in this amendment. I have not heard one reason nor suggestion in this debate which appeals to me as a fair or justifiable reason why clerks in the departments in Washington should work only seven hours a day when the rest of the men and women in the United States are working eight hours a day and more. [Applause.]

It is not a question of compensation. If they are not getting sufficient pay for an eight-hour day, then an increase of pay should be the problem before us. Let us not seek to shorten the day to fit the pay. These people in Government service here should be required to do a fair day's work, or I might better say they should be permitted to do a fair day's work and should be paid accordingly. Congress has recognized the eight-hour principle time and time again. It is generally recognized as a standard day in private employment throughout the country in nearly all industries. Why a seven-hour day for the clerks in Washington? Their work is no more arduous than that of the millions who toil in the shops and fields and stores and factories and offices everywhere, and these millions have never asked for a shorter day than eight hours.

I insist that eight hours is not too much for any man or woman in reasonable health to work each day. It is not an excessive workday. Men and women are stronger and healthier and better morally, better off financially, better in every way from having worked a reasonable number of hours. There is a point, of course, to which men should not be required nor permitted to go. No one should work to exhaustion, but who will say that eight hours even approaches exhaustion in such labor as these clerks are required to do?

One gentleman said that many had come here from long distances and sacrificed positions with better pay than they are getting here, and that they did it from a sense of patriotism, from a sense of duty to their country in this hour of its trial. That may be true. That is a splendid spirit. I will undertake to say not one man or woman in the departments in Washington to-day who came here with that sentiment in their hearts is complaining of an eight-hour day. [Applause.] Those who came here with that fine spirit of loyalty are willing to work 10 hours a day, or 12 hours a day if necessary under the circumstances, and will not complain about it. [Applause.] It has been urged that some of the clerks work more than eight hours now on busy days. I think that is true. I think I know of a few instances where occasionally clerks have to work 10 hours a day or more. That is one of the wrongs that the Borland amendment will cure. Sometimes Government work can not wait until the next day and clerks in charge of that urgent work have to work overtime. The reason of it is due largely to the fact that a large part of them quit at seven hours. If all of them were required to work the standard day of eight hours all could finish in that time, and rare indeed would be the instances when anyone would be required to work longer than that. Let us be fair to all and permit those to work eight hours who want to work eight hours and make those work eight hours who do not want to.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for one minute.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the justice of this amendment is most clearly indicated in the fact that employees in Washington in the Government Printing Office, in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and in the navy yard, where they work with their hands and toil as laborers toil, and are subject to the injuries which are liable to come upon them by reason of working with machinery, and who necessarily wear out more clothing than those who work as clerks, do work eight hours a day. In the midst of this environment in Washington they are able to get along very well, I hear, working eight hours a day, and I have never understood why men and women working in a sheltered office can not give eight hours to a day's work as well as these laboring people. That is especially true at this time, when the demands of the Government and the demands of the industry everywhere are so urgent and emergent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I asked for this time in order to answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], who said he could not understand why women could not work in these offices as long as men could work.

Mr. BARNHART. I beg to say to the gentleman that I did not say anything of the kind. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I misunderstood him. I ask the attention of the gentleman to the testimony of an eye-witness, who says:

"I visited the Auditor for the Post Office Department. Let me describe the place. * * * All the witnesses this side of the pearly gates will never remove from my mind the impression I received. I saw scores and scores and scores of young women and middle-aged women and some old women and a few men—nearly all women, though—sitting down at a new-fangled machine, and each of them had before her eyes where she could see it a card with a post-office number upon it, with the figures showing the amount of some postal transaction. It may have been a money order for 10 cents or it may have been one for $10. She was required to touch exactly the right keys, to punch exactly the right number in a card, and then to punch exactly the right amount in dollars or cents, and if she missed a single figure, if she touched the wrong key once, she was docked, and when she had a certain number of dockage marks against her, her pay was liable to be reduced or she was liable to discharge. So hour after hour they sat there, and there they still sit, like automatons, like human machines, their eyes glued upon the paper before them, their fingers working almost, it seems, by magic, touching with great rapidity these keys, then quickly seizing another card and replacing the one just completed. Employees in that department tell me that scarcely a week passes that does not record the fact that some poor girl or woman is stricken with nervous prostration. A body has been broken on the wheel of labor—discarded as worn-out human machinery—mere wastage, no longer to be counted. * * *

"Seven hours and a half a day at that kind of work is about as bad as it was to serve in the galleys of old Rome."

I trust that testimony will satisfy gentlemen that there is a difference between women and girls working at that kind of work and men working in the free, open air.

Mr. BORLAND. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM].

Mr. HELM. Gentlemen, did you ever see a rock thrown into a pond? Do you know where the waves stop? Never until they reach the banks. Now, Washington is the center of a great pond. Throw this seven-hour-day rock into this Washington pond, and every railroad man, every miner, every shipbuilder, every man employed in the public utilities within the confines of the United States will want the same identical favor shown him. This is the one overshadowing, all-important vice of this proposition. It is this: If the Washington clerks get a seven-hour day the rest of the workingmen and women of the country will want a seven-hour day. And bear in mind that this is the paradise of all the job hunters in the United States. The job hunters who do not get here believe that they have been kept temporarily out of heaven. Do you want to give these Government employees a preferential status? If you do, the rock thrown into this pond will stop at San Francisco and the utmost confines of Maine and of Florida and of Texas. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe I have four minutes remaining. I yield that time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not imagine for a moment that it is possible to say anything particularly new at this time, or to give any reason that may be particularly influencing upon the minds of gentlemen present. Ever since this proposition was agitated I have looked upon it as one of serious importance. As we vote upon this we are going to decide whether we are in earnest and whether we are honest on certain convictions we have hitherto pronounced.

From the time I first began work in a legislative body, which was in the legislature of my own State, and during the years that I have been in this House I have on every occasion voted for the eight-hour day. I am going to vote for it now. [Applause.] If I do not, then hitherto I have been acting wrongly and I have not been as generous to the workingmen as I ought to have been, or I have not been honest with myself and with them. Now, I take this position: I have believed in the eight-hour working-day. I believe in it now; and if the eight-hour working-day is sound in principle for working men and working women throughout the United States, it certainly is sound for the Government employees in the city of Washington. [Applause.] Somehow it seems that when a person comes here and gets a job with this Government in Washington he feels favored among men and women and expects to be coddled, to be aided and assisted in a dozen and one ways that the average workingman throughout the country does not expect. I can not for one moment adhere to the sound policy of the eight-hour day, as I view it, and refuse my vote to this eight-hour proposition for the clerks here in the District of Columbia. There are some individuals throughout the country who have felt that they were acting in favor of labor by opposing this. Since this was first started I have listened for some friend of labor to give a reason why we should not require the clerks in the city of Washington to work eight hours instead of seven, and I have never yet found one lift up his voice to give a reason; and I say with all the earnestness I can express that if the labor organizations of the United States are sincere in asking for an eight-hour workday for themselves—and I believe they are—they can not oppose if Congress requires the clerks in Washington to work eight hours also. [Applause.]

These clerks ought to be willing to do that very thing. Some of them—I personally know of many—have been working, gladly working, ever since this war began, not 8 hours, but 10, even 12 hours. I am proud of them. But for the slackers in Government offices who constantly want more pay and shorter hours I have a very different feeling.

During this period now at hand, when we are asking every citizen to sacrifice and to work, requiring many to make the supreme sacrifice, how can we justify any course other than to require eight full hours of these employees. There is a world of work to be done. Every citizen should exert himself to the utmost in the country's service, and no one can say he or she had done a decent day's work for his country if he has worked less than eight hours.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. KEARNS. The salaries of these clerks were fixed back about 1898, and with one slight increase they have never had any addition to their pay since that time. Since that time the wages in private activities have been doubled.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This is not a contest over wages at all. This has nothing to do with compensation. This has to do with work. I believe in men and women working in the vocations to which they devote themselves. I do not believe in slackers in a shop or in an office any more than I believe in slackers in the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, it is scarcely necessary to go over in detail the arguments in favor of requiring the Government clerks in Washington to work eight hours a day instead of seven.

I desire first to correct a misstatement that has been repeated with dogged persistence during this debate. It is not true that the heads of the departments can now extend the time to eight hours by a stroke of the pen. The law provides for a seven-hour day and safeguards carefully any extension of that time. The wording of the law is:

Provided, That the heads of the departments may, by special order, stating the reason, further extend the hours of any clerk or employee in their department.

The emergency requiring extra work must exist in a particular office or bureau and must affect certain clerks or employees before any such order can be made. No general order could be made extending the hours of all clerks equally for the purpose of promoting efficiency or reducing public expenditures. That can only be done by legislation by Congress, and hence the necessity for this law.

In the second place, I desire to point out that in all the mechanical departments of the Government, which have been on a union-labor scale for many years, eight hours work a day is the rule. This prevails in the arsenals, the navy yards, the Government Printing Office, and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. During the hearings on this salary-increase resolution Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, was on the stand, and he was asked this question:

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to get your view as to what is considered the standard for employees in industrial establishments?

Mr. MORRISON. Eight hours is the standard. There is no question about that.

The seven-hour day for clerks in Washington is hostile to the interests of the toiling masses of the country, because it increases unnecessarily the burdens of government. Every effort which brains could devise and money could command has been used to arouse the organized labor men in my district against me, personally and politically, because I have dared to stand up for the rights of the taxpayers of the Nation against the greedy profiteers of Washington. Every form of misrepresentation has been employed, but I have taken care that the laboring men in my district should know the truth. They are just as intelligent and as patriotic as any other set of citizens when they know the truth. The efforts of the Treasury looters have failed, as shown by the following letter:

OPERATIVE PLASTERERS' AND CEMENT FINISHERS,
INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF UNITED STATES AND CANADA,
LOCAL UNION NO. 17.
Kansas City, Mo., March 8, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND.

DEAR SIR: We, the plasterers and members of Local No. 17, of Kansas City, Mo., want to thank you for your promptness in taking up with the War Department the plasterers' end of the work on the hospital units.

Also, we heartily indorse the eight-hour day law for all clerks in Washington (and elsewhere).

Respectfully, yours,
FRANK STUTSMAN,
Corresponding Secretary.

Gentlemen, these employees of the Government here in Washington were brought here for one purpose only, to do the work of the Nation. This Capital City is not a national poor farm nor an old-folks' home. It is the busy workship of a Nation—a Nation at war; a Nation which is defending the very life of democracy; a Nation which is toiling early and late—which is paying taxes and buying bonds, which has given its sons to the cause, and stops at no privation or sacrifice to win this war. Must we forget this great Nation of self-sacrificing patriots, must we forget our Army in the field, must we forget the cause for which we fight and listen only to the clamor of self-interest with which we are surrounded here in Washington? God forbid! No man in this House can defend himself before his people for voting for a seven-hour day for the Government clerks. "Choose ye this day which ye will serve."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I appear in behalf of the Borland amendment, as a better friend of the clerks than the gentlemen who have taken the other side. There is no question about it. And I am a better friend to the clerks than Members of Congress who go round and harangue the clerks associations and their meetings trying to make them believe that Congress is doing wrong by them. [Applause.] I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] because it is in the interest of the good, honest, working clerks. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] shed tears over the overworked clerks who sometimes drop in their places, but not a crocodile tear has been shed here for the overworked farmer's wife whom you and I have seen drop down in exhaustion in her efforts to make a living for her family. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I say deliberately that I am for this because the present system works an imposition on the good clerks. I am not casting any reflections on the heads of departments or of bureaus when I say this. The heads of bureaus and departments want efficiency. They want people who will do good work and bring results, and when they call upon their clerks to work over hours they do not call on slackers who are constantly watching the clock and complaining about long hours of labor, but they impress into service the good, honest clerk who is willing to perform eight hours of service, and more if it is necessary, for the good of the country. [Applause.]

I am in my office at work till half past 10 to 11 o'clock every night. I deserve no credit for that, but as I walk down the halls of the House Office Building at 11 o'clock at night I hear the click of the typewriter, showing that your clerks are doing their honest work. They know no seven or eight hour law, and are not asking for any.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY], who opposes this amendment, does not say anything in the interest of the farmers in his country that work from sun to sun, while their poor wives' work is never done. He says nothing about the lumber jacks working for the lumber industries of the country. These very industries are now complaining because Congress is threatening even to make an eight-hour law for their employees, and yet not a word in behalf of these employees is heard.

I am an organization man. I joined the Ku-Klux Klan and nearly everything else that would let me in, ever since I was a boy. I have been off and in the Methodist Church, always believing and practicing the doctrine of falling from grace. [Laughter.] I believe in the clerks' organization, and I am ready always to help the really good clerks. Many of them have come to me and stated, "Mr. BURNETT, we think we ought to have better wages, but we are not asking for a seven-hour law, and we are not opposed to an eight-hour law." The only one from my State that has come to me with a protest against the eight-hour proposition is a man that has been here for 20 years. He is a white man at that, and is still only getting $1,000 a year, and perhaps does not earn more. He is not from my district. That is the kind of clerks that are making the complaints. The man or woman that is willing to do his patriotic duty and help win this war is not the one that is besieging Congress against the Borland amendment. I have shown my friendship for the clerks and my interest in them, unlike some gentlemen who vote against the increase of their salaries, but by voting for every increase, especially in these days of the increased cost of living. All of them that work are worthy of their hire. But, gentlemen, I am not in favor of men or women boasting of their patriotism and refusing in the days of the war to perform eight hours service, when the railroad men and others in the industries of the country are performing eight hours arduous labor every day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment which I send to the desk read.

The CHAIRMAN. There should first be a preliminary vote taken on the amendment offered to the committee amendment. The Borland amendment is offered as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. No; Mr. Chairman, the "Borland amendment" is offered as an amendment to the committee amendment. No amendment to the Borland amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is the situation, it is true.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have my amendment read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent to have his amendment read for information.

Mr. BORLAND. I object.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Is the gentleman afraid of free speech? Does the gentleman object to my stating what it is?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The Chair must put the unanimous-consent request. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the amendment sent to the desk may be read for the information of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have been obliged to refuse so many requests for time that I am constrained to object.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, an amendment to an amendment exhausts the number as far as amendments are concerned, but a substitute is in order.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer mine as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. I rose to make the same suggestion that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] made, that a substitute would be in order.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, may my amendment be entertained as a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. If it is in order as a substitute.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. We will have the pleasure of hearing it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "day," in the Borland amendment, add: "Provided, however, That all time over eight hours by those rendering personal services in said departments shall be paid for on the basis of time and one-half."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, that is not a substitute, it is a subterfuge. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment for the same purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York desires to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

No increase herein shall apply to salaries or compensations for personal services in any of the executive departments or independent establishments of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any bureau or office therein, which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial act approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day, allowing for all time over eight hours a compensation at the rate of time and one-half for overtime.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is that a substitute offered for the committee amendment or for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand.

Mr. LUNN. It is offered as a substitute for the Borland amendment, which is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman's substitute clearly appears to be the Borland amendment with a few words added at the end. That is not a substitute. It is a method of making an amendment in the third degree. The substitute, of course, must, in like manner, take the place of the whole proposition before the House. What the gentleman's amendment really does is to add three or four words at the end of the Borland amendment in the form of amendment and then offering it in the form of a substitute.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is another thing, Mr. Chairman; it is open to the further objection because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri was purely a limitation. The substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN] is more than a limitation in that it proposes legislation and in itself would increase the expenses of the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make this further suggestion, that the Borland amendment is limited to one subject, namely, the extension of the hours of employment of those who are receiving the increased compensation provided in the so-called committee provision. The amendment in the way of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN] relates to a different subject matter. It relates to compensation and increased pay. The Borland amendment is exclusively limited to hours of employment and not to the rate of pay. Therefore it comes within the general rule that it is not germane to a proposition limited to one subject to amend it by a different subject matter. The Borland amendment merely provides for an increase in the hours of labor and this amendment provides for an increase in the compensation. For that reason I maintain it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The first objection urged to the matter proposed as a substitute, is that it is not a substitute. But why is it not a substitute? A substitute is an alternative proposition. If something is added to a pending amendment, thereby creating a new proposition, and the total thus created, is offered in lieu of the pending amendment, then a legitimate alternative proposition is certainly submitted for the one under consideration. That is what is proposed to be done by the matter submitted. This matter is another and different proposition to the one pending, and strictly and technically is a substitute. The first objection is therefore overruled.

The next objection is that the substitute proposes new legislation. This point seems to the Chair to be well taken. The substitute does propose legislation, and the point of order, on that ground, is sustained.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No increase herein shall apply to salaries or compensations for personal services in any of the executive departments or independent establishments of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any bureau or office therein, which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day: Provided, That during the continuance of the war all or any portion of the clerical forces required in said departments may be selected and employed without regard to the provisions of civil-service law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. For how long?

Mr. RUCKER. For five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the fact that the gentleman kept us here so long the other day, until after the dinner hour, and out of generosity to him, I shall not make the point of order but will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the point of order for what length of time?

Mr. STAFFORD. For five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that some gentlemen in the House are improving all of the time. [Laughter.] The substitute offered by me ought not to be cast out on a point of order. It is in the interests of the clerks in Washington who, we are told, work so hard. When this Congress wrote into the law some years ago a provision that in the departments in Washington no clerks should work less than seven hours a day, that provision was immediately construed to mean that no clerk should work more than seven hours a day. Seven hours became the limit. Then we have a provision in civil-service law which is humane, and which provides that civil-service clerks in the Government employ shall have 30 days' sick leave, with pay, each year. That provision in the civil-service law which provides for annual sick leave for 30 days, with pay, has resulted and is resulting almost disastrously. It is actually destroying the health of the people, because they construe that to mean that each man and each woman must be sick two and a half days every month, and they get sick regularly and stay sick the full two and a half days.

Mr. BORLAND rose.

Mr. RUCKER. If my friend is very much disturbed and he has some suggestion to offer or question to ask, I yield to him.

Mr. BORLAND. I was going to suggest to the gentleman that we have an immediate vote, because a point of order is going to be made against the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. I know it is. The gentleman has not given me any information at all. I want to say that I am not going to vote for the Borland amendment because it is offered by my colleague, and neither would I vote against it because elsewhere some great and distinguished citizen of the United States decried against it yesterday. I am going to cast a vote which reflects my judgment, and if the Borland amendment is adopted, then I am going to cast a vote which will help to cause rejoicing if not applause in the gallery, namely, for the amendment increasing clerical salaries. If the Borland amendment be defeated, then I hope every man will regard it his conscientious duty to his constituents to vote down the proposed increase in salary carried in the committee amendment, because these clerks ought not to have an increase of pay unless they are required to perform a reasonable amount of service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the Rucker amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order. This amendment, of course, is infected with the same vice as the Lunn amendment was. It takes the Borland amendment and couples with it legislation, and is then offered as an alternative proposition. For the reasons already stated, the Chair is thoroughly of the opinion that this so-called substitute is not in order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment. After the words "Provided, however," in the Borland amendment, insert the words "and during the continuance of the present war."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers as a substitute what is really an amendment to the amendment, in itself an amendment to another amendment. The proposed amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is an amendment in the third degree and is out of order.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. May I offer the Borland amendment with those words added at the end of it? Will that then be a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer a substitute.

Mr. LONDON. I do, then, offer the following substitute:

After the Borland amendment add the words "and during the continuance of this war."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is an amendment in the third degree. I maintain it is not a substitute, but is an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled on that—that if you take an amendment and add to it, and thereby make a new proposition, and offer it as an alternative proposition, it is a substitute.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the further point that this legislation is being enacted for a single year, and if the war should last for five years this substitute would cover that, and it would be out of order on that ground.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Would not that amendment be out of order on the ground that it goes beyond a year's time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is just considering the point in connection with the amendment. The Chair is ready to rule. The life of this appropriation bill is fixed. The matter proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] may carry it beyond the life of the appropriation bill.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I offer, then, the following as a substitute:

Add, at the end of the Borland amendment, the words:
"Provided, The war continues until June 30, 1919.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the gentleman desires to offer another substitute?

Mr. LONDON. I offer to add the following words at the end of the Borland amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must offer it as a substitute.

Mr. LONDON. I offer it as a substitute. Will the Chair permit me one moment? I have so many parliamentary advisers misleading me that I am all confused. [Laughter.] I am offering the following as a substitute to the Borland amendment:

Add at the end of the Borland amendment the following words:
"And provided, The present war is ended prior to June 30, 1919."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that has nothing to do with the subject matter before the committee. It does not make any sense.

Mr. LONDON. I have not the Borland amendment before me, and I do not know how much sense there is in the amendment. I am on an original base. I am trying to make something that is nonsensical sensible, and I have a great deal of difficulty, I admit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 6 the following:
"No increase herein shall apply to salaries or compensations for personal services in any of the executive departments or independent establishments of the United States or of the District of Columbia, or any bureau or office therein, which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day: Provided, The present war is ended prior to June 30, 1919."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the gentleman has finally gotten his substitute in order. The Chair will submit it anyhow. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, may I speak on that under the rule?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is not germane.

Mr. LONDON. Under the agreement I have a right to speak for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the debate was closed on this amendment by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Not on the amendment to the amendment. There was an hour for general debate on the other amendment, and an hour's debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. That did not say that when that was concluded, if a matter came up subject to amendment and an amendment was offered, there would be no debate on the amendment.

Mr. BORLAND. It was provided that the other proposition involved in the eight-hour proposition should be submitted within the hour, and the reason for that was that we had disposed of all the amendments to the committee amendment prior to taking up the Borland amendment, and it was the complete sense of that agreement that one hour should conclude the debate upon the eight-hour proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say this, if the gentleman from Missouri will give him his attention: If the unanimous-consent agreement provided that the vote could be taken at the expiration of the hour on the Borland amendment and all amendments thereto in the nature of a substitute, then, of course, this debate is out of order. Is there any such limitation? I do not think it is in the consent agreement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know whether the Chair has ruled on the point of order or not, but I submit, if the Chair will examine this amendment he will hold it is not in order. I will make the point of order it is not germane and that, at the same time, it has not any sense.

The CHAIRMAN. As to whether it makes sense or not is not a parliamentary question. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the Chair will pardon me, this amendment is simply the Borland amendment, with these words added:

Provided, That the present war is ended prior to June 30, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the expiration of this bill, is it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the expiration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The point is, however, Mr. Chairman, that here is a proposition made under the Borland amendment, which will put the eight hours a day in operation immediately after July 1. And here is a proposition submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] that it shall not go into operation provided the present war is ended prior to June 30, 1919, after the bill has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is right.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. LUNN: "No part of any amount herein appropriated shall be used to pay salaries or for personal services in any executive department, bureau, or office of the United States which does not, subject to the provisions and exceptions of section 7 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved March 15, 1898, require eight hours of labor each day: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to employees in any bureau or establishment where such employees are not paid time and one-half for overtime."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. It provides for the method of payment of the employees of the United States. It is really legislation and not germane to the amendment. It is not a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, the Borland amendment is a limitation on the application of wage and salary increases. It provides that the increases shall not be received in any department or bureau of the Government where the employees work less than eight hours.

The substitute which I have offered is an additional limitation, the further limitation being that not only shall these increases fail to apply in those departments where employees do not work for eight hours, but these increases shall not apply in any department where there is not a provision for time and a half for all overtime above eight hours. I am arguing for the legitimacy of the substitute at this time. I feel that the point of order against it is not well taken. [Cries of "Rule!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have this matter discussed.

Mr. KEATING rose.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I rise to make the point of order that the substitute in the form it is is suicidal and defeats itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] was proceeding to discuss the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana as soon as the gentleman from Colorado is through.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is the slightest question that this amendment is in order at this time as a substitute. The Borland amendment undertakes to limit the payment of these increases of salary to employees of bureaus where the eight-hour day is enforced. The Lunn substitute provides that the limitation in the Borland amendment shall not apply in any bureau where employees are not paid for overtime. That is all there is to the substitute.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is there any provision now anywhere for paying them for overtime?

Mr. KEATING. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then is not that an addition to existing law when you undertake to provide for paying them overtime?

Mr. KEATING. Not at all.

Mr. Chairman, the Lunn substitute does not change existing law. The Borland amendment provides that the increases in salary shall not be paid to employees in any bureau unless the eight-hour day is enforced. The substitute provides that the Borland amendment shall not affect the employees in any bureau where workers are not paid for overtime.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. As I understand the substitute, it makes this change: The Borland amendment requires eight hours in all departments. The substitute requires eight hours only in those departments that provide for overtime?

Mr. KEATING. Yes. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, because it states in a few words exactly what the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN] is endeavoring to do, namely, to provide that the limitations of the Borland amendment shall not apply to any bureau where those who work more than eight hours are not compensated for overtime. [Cries of "Rule"!]

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, either this amendment changes existing law and seeks to do by indirection what it can not do by direction, or else it has no effect under the existing law of the United States. It says that this amendment for eight hours shall not apply, except to departments that pay time and a half for overtime.

Now, let us see what operation it would have under that kind of a provision. In the hearings on this amendment Mr. Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, was asked how many departments of the Government were on an eight-hour basis, and he answered: "All people who work in the navy yard, all the people in the Government Printing Office, most of the people in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are on the eight-hour day."

Those are the people who are to-day on the eight-hour basis. Those are the people who are to-day paid time and a half for overtime. This amendment would apply then only to Government navy yards, arsenals, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the Government Printing Office. In other words, this amendment would not apply to any department that is not now maintaining an eight-hour day, so that either the gentleman's amendment is meaningless and can not apply to a single department that is now maintaining an eight-hour day, or else he is seeking to do by indirection what can not be done directly. The chairman is urged to take judicial notice of the fact that the existing statutes of the United States require an eight-hour day in these mechanical departments.

The purpose of the amendment I have offered and its whole spirit clearly is to require an eight-hour day in the departments that are not now maintaining it, and yet the gentleman's amendment would entirely change the whole purpose of the amendment by requiring it not in the departments that are maintaining a seven-hour day but in all the departments that are maintaining an eight-hour day. If that is not a radical change in the amendment it would be difficult to conceive of one. The gentleman is bringing in an amendment here that I say is either absolutely meaningless under the existing statute law or if it has any meaning and force it goes into legislation and applies to departments that do not now pay on the basis of eight hours.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the Borland amendment is itself an amendment to a section of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill—legislation made in order by a rule adopted by the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN] is attempting to amend the Borland amendment by offering a substitute. Ordinarily legislation, unless it is a limitation under the Holman rule, is not in order on an appropriation bill. This House adopted a rule making section 6 in order. It is purely legislative, raising the salaries of employees. The Borland amendment is offered as an amendment to this legislation. The substitute of the gentleman from New York is offered as a substitute for the Borland amendment. All of section 6 is legislation made in order by a rule adopted by this House, and I do not think that the point of order is well taken and can lie in this instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked for a discussion of the point of order, because he was somewhat in doubt as to the ruling proper to be made. The substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN], is offered to the Borland amendment, and it is insisted that it is in order as a limitation. This matter of limitation under the rules of the House, is frequently misapprehended, and amendments offered as limitations, are not limitations at all, under our precedents. This substitute is presented as a limitation on a limitation, and therefore presumed to be in order. But the Borland amendment is really not a limitation on an appropriation bill. It is in substance, legislation on an appropriation bill, and would be out of order, but for the Holman rule. It is cast in the form of a limitation, but in essence it requires the executive departments to which it relates to maintain an eight-hour system. But since the effect of the Borland amendment is to secure a larger return of work to the Government for the amount of money that would otherwise be paid for a less return of work, it effects a retrenchment of Government expenditures, and is therefore in order. The Borland amendment is something more than a negative prohibition on the use of moneys. In this connection, in order that the nature of a limitation may be more perfectly apprehended, it will be well to cite some of the precedents.

Legislation may not be proposed in the form of a limitation. (4 Hinds, sec. 3931.)

The House by limitation on a general appropriation bill may provide that no part of an appropriation shall be used for a certain purpose. (4 Hinds, 3917.)

This is upon the theory that the House may deny an appropriation for a purpose authorized by law. It is not in order to legislate as to the qualifications of the recipients of an appropriation, but the House can specify that no part of an appropriation shall go to recipients lacking certain qualifications. (4 Hinds, sec. 3942.)

A limitation is negative in its nature. (4 Hinds, sec. 3955; id., sec. 3967.)

The limitation must be upon the appropriation and not an affirmative limitation of official functions. (4 Hinds, sec. 3957.)

A limitation must not include positive enactments establishing rules for executive officers. (4 Hinds, sec. 3967.)

The limitation permitted on a general appropriation bill must in effect be a negative prohibition on the use of money, not an affirmative direction to an executive officer. (4 Hinds, sec. 3974.)

Now the Borland amendment provides that the salaries afforded by the committee amendment shall not be paid to the clerks in any executive department, bureau, or office of the United States which does not require eight hours of labor a day. It does not relate to recipients lacking certain qualifications, but to hours of work required by departments, bureaus, and offices of the United States. Even if the department or bureau has authority under law to work its employees less than eight hours a day, this amendment in substance says to such a department, you must work your employees for as much as eight hours a day in order to enjoy the benefit of the appropriation designed for the payment of employees. The objection that this amendment, is in effect legislation, is cured as noted above by the fact that the increased return in work secured by requiring the employees to work for eight hours a day, instead of seven and a half as formerly, but at the same compensation, will operate a reduction of expenditures, thereby bringing the amendment within the saving effect of the Holman rule. But what will be the effect of the substitute?

The substitute in substance provides that the Borland amendment shall not apply to any department, bureau or office, where the clerks are working for eight hours, or less than eight hours, with no provision for pay for overtime work. Hence in all such departments, bureaus and offices, the clerks will receive the compensation provided by the committee amendment. The substitute further provides that in those departments, bureaus and offices, where the clerks work eight hours, and are paid time and a half for overtime, the Borland amendment shall apply, that is that the employees in such bureaus, departments, and offices, shall also receive the compensation provided by the committee amendment. In this view of the effect of the substitute which is to replace the Borland amendment, how can it be argued that the substitute which is legislation, will reduce expenditures? If it will not operate ex proprio vigore, to reduce expenditures, then it is not in order. The substitute must be considered with reference to its operation, meaning, and effect, as a whole. In the opinion of the Chair, the substitute is legislation. It is not shown that it will effect a retrenchment. Hence it is not within the Holman rule. Further the Chair does not think that the substitute can be regarded as a pure limitation. For the reasons given the point of order to the substitute is sustained.

The question now is on agreeing to the Borland amendment.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. KEATING and Mr. LUNN demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 121, noes 82.

Mr. KEATING. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the chairman appointed Mr. KEATING and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 128, noes 88.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back to the House with the following amendment:

Strike out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, on page 64.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GOOD. I am not.

The SPEAKER. Does any other gentleman who is opposed to the bill want to move to recommit it?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I move to recommit.

Mr. LUNN. I move to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out the Borland amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LUNN. I am.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it possible that anybody is opposed to a bill appropriating money to pay the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer such a question as that.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I move to recommit the bill with the following amendment——

The SPEAKER. There is already one motion to recommit.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise to make a point of order against the motion to recommit of the gentleman from New York on two grounds.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. BORLAND. The point of order is on two grounds. First, that the House has just adopted the amendment, and therefore it is not a proper motion to move to recommit, and, second, that the Borland amendment was an amendment to an amendment and is not subject to be stricken out in that way.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it in order to make more than one motion to recommit?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; when the first motion went out on a point of order.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it in order for more than one motion to recommit to be submitted to the House?

The SPEAKER. Why, yes; you can submit such motions until you get one that is in order.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I have one to offer.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I have one I would like to send to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman against the bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No, sir; I am not against it.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Rhode Island against it?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I am partly against it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I insist that as no gentleman has announced his opposition to the bill, recognition goes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The SPEAKER. Of course, that is correct. The Chair laid down the rule that he was going to pursue in this House about motions to recommit three years ago, and he is going to stick to it until he is overruled. Under the circumstances presented here the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is entitled to recognition, and the Clerk will report his motion to recommit, and we will see if that is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith, with an amendment striking out, on page 64, lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, which reads as follows:

"Baltimore, office of assistant treasurer: Assistant treasurer, $4,500; cashier, $2,500; paying teller, $2,000; receiving teller, $1,900; exchange teller, $1,800; vault clerk, $1,800; clerks—2 at $1,600 each, 3 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each; messenger, $840; 3 watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $31,500."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I have a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just recognized the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KINCHELOE. To amend his motion.

Mr. GOOD. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question.

The question being taken, the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit with instructions offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman state what his proposition is and what it means.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Subtreasury business.

Mr. DYER. What part of it?

Mr. GOOD. To eliminate Baltimore.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McARTHUR. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to get it. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understood the Chair to state that this amendment was as to the entire Subtreasury business. Does it not pertain to one office only of the nine?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it again.

The motion to recommit was again read.

The SPEAKER. This applies only to Baltimore.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 70, noes 119.

Accordingly the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. This motion to recommit having been defeated, is it in order to offer one that has merit and that will be adopted?

The SPEAKER. No; only one motion to recommit can be made. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING BILL.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I present the following report (H. Rept. No. 386) from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 267.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration of S. 1854, entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," under the general rules of the House.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this proposes for the consideration of the House the bill to advance the standard time one hour during certain periods of the year. It is said that 12 countries in Europe have already adopted this principle. It will work to the advantage of the laboring people of the country in advancing the clock one hour, and give them that much more time to spend with their families at home in the afternoon.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is said that the American people are conservative. That is stating it mildly. We are the last among the great nations to take advantage of the opportunities that Ben Franklin said over 150 years ago the world would have of saving candlelight and fuel by changing the clock.

This bill is tardy in coming before the House. When the matter was submitted to the Committee on Rules the conservatism that is usual in that committee was laid aside, and the committee reported the rule providing for the consideration of this bill.

I said a moment ago that we were a conservative people. Most people in the country, without regard to where they live or what their business is, have been in favor for years of changing the date of the inauguration of the President of the United States from the 4th of March until some day in the spring or early in the summer, when it would not endanger the lives of those who come here to attend the inauguration. But because Washington was inaugurated once on the 4th day of March they can not change the date. The first time Washington was inaugurated was on the 30th day of April, and if we could change the date from the 4th of March to the 30th day of April we would show just as much reverence for the memory of the first inauguration of President Washington as by showing a veneration for his second inauguration on the 4th of March. But we are so conservative that when we get into a way of doing things we refuse to change. Monarchies, kingdoms, and empires change their methods and their feast days. If the king's birthday comes when it is cold and dreary, they change the date to the most pleasant and happy day of the year in order that they may celebrate it without danger to health and life. Other countries have sought to save daylight, to use what daylight they require, by moving the clock forward, and have some left for recreation for their people who work; in order that places of employment and business may close and employees have time for rest and recreation in the afternoon during the summer season. Other countries have done that. We have failed. The time has now come when I believe the House of Representatives will lay aside this species of standpatism and join with those who are in favor of advancing the clock one hour, rising an hour earlier between the 1st of April and the 1st of October, and retiring, if they choose, an hour earlier at night. I am in favor of the rule and of the bill which it makes in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. The rule in terms provides that the bill shall be considered according to the House rules. That would permit of one hour of debate, in case the gentleman from Tennessee wished to move the previous question. Now, there are a number on this side of the House who would like to discuss this bill, and I would like to inquire what is the purpose of the gentleman from Tennessee if the rule shall be adopted as to closing debate?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee to answer.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, this is the only opportunity we will have to consider this bill at all. My purpose was, after the one hour was exhausted, to which I would be entitled, to move the previous question on the bill and all amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to extend the time beyond the hour for a reasonable time, so that it would permit Members to have some discussion on the bill? I want to say to the gentleman that there are a number on this side who have asked, in the aggregate, for more than one hour's time. Would not the gentleman ask to extend the time to some reasonable hour this afternoon before he moves the previous question, so that the bill could be passed this evening?

Mr. SIMS. Let me say to the gentleman that after the rule is adopted and the one hour is used we will see how the matter develops. I would not be opposed to giving a reasonable time if I did not lose the parliamentary opportunity of moving the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, might I suggest that this arrangement can not be made before the rule is adopted?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] five minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I was glad to vote in the Rules Committee for the favorable report on the resolution making this daylight-saving measure in order. I am glad now to urge the adoption of the rule and the passage of the measure itself.

This idea is not a freak proposal; it is founded in common sense. It is not a new, untried experiment. It is in successful operation in 12 European countries and time has vindicated every argument advanced by its proponents.

The idea of saving an hour of daylight each day during the summer months is said to have originated with William Willett, a London architect, some 10 years ago. As he walked through the streets of London in the early morning hours, he noticed how deserted they were, even when fully lighted by the sun. Observing this, he conceived the idea of moving the clock ahead an hour in summer, so that the people might have an hour more of daylight.

Ridicule was heaped upon the proposal. Innumerable objections were proposed. In the British Parliament the legislation embodying the idea was defeated in 1909, 1911, 1912, 1913, and 1914. But more numerous became those who saw advantages in it, and on May 17, 1916, the measure was passed in Parliament. Since then France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Portugal, Australia, and Iceland have followed.

The committee appointed to investigate results in England reported that—> we can say unhesitatingly that the vast preponderance of opinion throughout Great Britain is in favor of it not only as a war measure but as a permanent institution.

Simply and concisely this measure provides that on the last Sunday of this month at 2 o'clock a. m. the clocks shall be advanced one hour. On the last Sunday in October at 2 a. m. the clocks shall be turned back one hour, putting them just where they were before.

It will create no confusion, but it will give an extra hour of daylight, with all the manifold advantages which that involves. It will result in saving of fuel, in added time for the production of food, in increase in outdoor exercise and recreation, and in general improvement of health.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor adopted resolutions in favor of this measure, stating—> that we urge the inauguration of the daylight-saving project for the conservation of time and opportunity for greater leisure and open-air exercise for the masses of the people.

The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce and a host of business organizations have indorsed this measure and urged its passage.

Let the cavillers ridicule the idea of saving daylight; let the would-be humorists laugh at it as they will. The fact is that the practical results of the measure will be more than 150 hours of daylight leisure for every man and woman and little child. That one tremendous boon justifies the passage of this bill, and I sincerely hope that the House of Representatives will do what the Senate has already done and enact this measure without more delay.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1854) to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of establishing the standard time of the United States, the territory of continental United States shall be divided into five zones in the manner hereinafter provided. The standard time of the first zone shall be based on the mean astronomical time of the seventy-fifth degree of longitude west from Greenwich; that of the second zone on the ninetieth degree; that of the third zone on the one hundred and fifth degree; that of the fourth zone on the one hundred and twentieth degree; and that of the fifth zone, which shall include only Alaska, on the one hundred and fiftieth degree. That the limits of each zone shall be defined by an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, having regard for the convenience of commerce and the existing junction points and division points of common carriers engaged in commerce between the several States and with foreign nations, and such order may be modified from time to time.

SEC. 2. That within the respective zones created under the authority hereof the standard time of the zone shall govern the movement of all common carriers engaged in commerce between the several States or between a State and any of the Territories of the United States, or between a State or the Territory of Alaska and any of the insular possessions of the United States or any foreign country. In all statutes, orders, rules, and regulations relating to the time of performance of any act by any officer or department of the United States, whether in the legislative, executive, or judicial branches of the Government, or relating to the time within which any rights shall accrue or determine, or within which any act shall or shall not be performed by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, it shall be understood and intended that the time shall be the United States standard time of the zone within which the act is to be performed.

SEC. 3. That at 2 o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in April of each year the standard time of each zone shall be advanced one hour, and at 2 o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in September in each year the standard time of each zone shall, by the retarding of one hour, be returned to the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing said zone, so that between the last Sunday in April at 2 o'clock antemeridian and the last Sunday in September at 2 o'clock antemeridian in each year the standard time in each zone shall be one hour in advance of the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone, respectively.

SEC. 4. That the standard time of the first zone shall be known and designated as United States standard eastern time; that of the second zone shall be known and designated as United States standard central time; that of the third zone shall be known and designated as United States standard mountain time; that of the fourth zone shall be known and designated as United States standard Pacific time; and that of the fifth zone shall be known and designated as United States standard Alaska time.

SEC. 5. That this act take effect and be in force from and after January 1, 1918.

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 3, line 4, strike out the word "April" and insert the word "March"; on line 6, strike out the word "September" and insert the word "March"; on line 11, strike out the word "September" and insert the word "October"; on lines 24 and 25, strike out all of section 5; on page 4, line 1, strike out the figure "6" and insert the figure "5."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for one hour.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to divide the time for general debate and allow three-quarters of an hour on a side?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, if it can be agreed that at the end of the hour and a half of debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendment I shall have no objection.

Mr. ESCH. We may not use the whole three-quarters of an hour on this side.

Mr. SIMS. Would the gentleman object to that sort of an arrangement?

Mr. ESCH. No.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the bill run for one hour and a half, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and the other half by myself, and that at the end of the hour and a half the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate on this bill be limited to one hour and a half, half of the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], and that at the end of the hour and a half the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And that at the end of that time amendments, of course, should be reported and voted on.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, yes; reported and voted on.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. They can be offered at any time during debate; but, of course, they will have to be offered from the desk before a vote is taken.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that to be the result, that at the end of that time any amendment that is offered can be voted on, but without debate.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if that consent agreement is made, how will those who do not get time—and I understand the committee, who are all in favor of the bill, will use all of the time—and who wish to offer improving amendments, get a chance to discuss them?

The SPEAKER. They can not be discussed after the hour and a half is consumed.

Mr. WINGO. And one would not have an opportunity to offer them unless he got recognition.

The SPEAKER. They can be offered pending debate.

Mr. WINGO. But one would have to get the floor.

The SPEAKER. Of course in order to offer an amendment. The Chair's understanding is that debate is to run for an hour and a half and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage. Amendments offered during that time and pending are to be voted on at the end of that time without debate.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for an hour.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, this proposition, known as the daylight-saving bill, is a plan which is now in operation in the countries of practically all of our allies and in the enemy countries. It is in operation in Great Britain, in France, in Germany, in Austria, in Italy, in Holland, in Portugal, and in Scandinavia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it in operation in Canada?

Mr. BORLAND. It is in operation through action of some of the provincial legislatures in some of the Provinces in Canada.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it in operation in Mexico?

Mr. BORLAND. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What effect will it have upon the international train schedules on those roads that run into Canada and Mexico from this country?

Mr. BORLAND. I shall speak of that matter when I come to it. It is not a new proposition, so far as the civilized world is concerned, but it has been in operation now for two full seasons. In fact, the United States is behind other first-class commercial countries in the delay in adopting this daylight-saving movement. The proposition simply consists of exchanging one hour of artificial light for one hour of natural light. It provides for advancing the clock during the period of time embraced practically between the vernal equinox and the autumnal equinox one hour.

The effect of that will be to move forward the business habits of the community one hour nearer to sunrise. In no other respect will the habits of the community or any of the schedules of hours of labor be changed, but the result of advancing the clock will be to utilize one hour of sunlight nearer to the time of sunrise and cut off one hour of artificial light at the end of the day.

Mr. PADGETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Down in my country a farmer gets up an hour before sunrise and does not quit work until an hour after dark. Would he have to get up and go to work two hours before sunrise? [Laughter.]

Mr. BORLAND. There would not be the slightest change in the habits of the gentleman's constituents. There would not be the slightest change in the habits of any gentlemen anywhere. The change is a community change, which does not affect the individual at all.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Would this daylight-saving bill affect in any way the farmer?

Mr. BORLAND. It would not.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Would he eat his dinner an hour earlier?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, no.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Would he eat it at 1 o'clock instead of at 12?

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed, we can get along a little better. I have only 10 minutes, and I do not think we can advance very much if each gentleman asks a separate question.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. How can there be a community change, of substance, without a change of life of the individuals who compose the community?

Mr. BORLAND. I think I will answer that question as I proceed, if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I read a very interesting article last Sunday by a person who has been very much interested in this bill, and from which I draw the conclusion that possibly the next propaganda they will start will be a change in thermometers. He suggested in this article that Congress provide special thermometers for next winter, fixing freezing at 45° F., insisting that by so doing we would save coal, contending that people heat their houses to 60 or 70, and by the new proposed winter thermometer would be led to be satisfied with less heat. Is it the intention of the gentleman to follow this bill with that kind of a bill?

Mr. BORLAND. That is a very good illustration of the argument used against this bill.

Mr. WINGO. This is from a gentleman who is in favor of this.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman is not advancing it seriously——

Mr. WINGO. I am advancing it seriously, because the magazine article was a serious argument and by a man in favor of this bill. I am not advancing that theory.

Mr. BORLAND. It evidently was not a serious argument. Nobody is going to change the laws of nature even to suit the gentleman from Arkansas. All we are going to do is to change the business habits of the community, which we regulate by clock. We go to work by the clock; we get up by the clock; we eat by the clock; we catch trains by the clock; the banks and business offices open by the clock. Now, it is perfectly apparent that it does not make much difference how much daylight there is, or how early the sunrise, it is impossible for an individual in a community to take advantage of that daylight himself except for purely recreational purposes. Some gentlemen can get up an hour earlier if they choose, and ride horseback, play golf, or play tennis, but there is no case in which they can transact business by that added hour of the day. If they go down to their stores, their customers are not there; even their clerks have not put in an appearance. The street cars are not in operation. If they go to their offices, there are no patients or clients. The banks are not open, and the mails have not been delivered. It is utterly out of the power, in this complex age of civilization, of any individual to change the habits of a community. He can not add to the day's work to save his life, because that is fixed by the fixed habits of the community. The only way it can be done is by a power which commands the universal respect of the community, and that power is the clock.

Now, when we come to figure out exactly how the community's habits are regulated, we find they are regulated not only by the clock, but they are actually regulated by the standard time fixed by the railroads. We do not follow accurate sun time in any community in the United States, and it does not make a particle of difference to us what the accurate sun time is. We follow the standard time as fixed by the clock.

In 1883 the railroads, realizing the tremendous inconvenience of everybody in trying to follow sun time in all the different communities of the United States, through the American Association of Railroad Managers, fixed upon a standard time. They figured that there was one hour's difference for every 15 degrees of longitude, and by making a standard number of zones approximately 15 degrees in width and changing the time by the even hour they would gradually reduce the inconvenience and confusion occasioned by the dual time. So they did that. And now we have the standard time fixed by the common consent of the railroad companies, which embraces four zones in the United States based upon certain standard of meridian. Now, everybody, including the courts and the Government, have adapted themselves to this standard time. It is not the sun time in any State in the United States, not a single one, because it is reckoned west from the meridian of Greenwich, and that is only the mean standard time of the meridian of Greenwich, which is not the actual sun time any day of the year. It is the average time at which the sun crosses the meridian of Greenwich throughout the year.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. In just a moment. I would rather finish a little further. So that we are now operating under an artificial standard.

I want to impress that upon gentlemen. We are not tampering with natural laws, as my friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] seems to think. We have long since passed that. While he was still in school we passed the idea of regulating our time by the movement of the sun. We have come to an artificial standard given to us by the railroads. All that we are asking here is that that standard, so accepted by the people, shall be made the United States standard.

Let me explain briefly the frame of this bill, which I drew and which was introduced by me in the House of Representatives and by Senator CALDER in the Senate. The first section adopts the standard time now in use throughout the country—established by the American Association of Railway Managers—as the standard time of the United States, and provides that the boundaries of the zones shall be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, having regard for the convenience of commerce and the existing junction points and division points of the common carriers. There will be no interference, therefore, with the standard time now in general use.

The second section provides that within the zones thus created the standard time of the zone shall govern the movement of all common carriers engaged in interstate commerce and shall be the official time of the United States, regulating its courts, offices, and legal proceedings done under the statutes, laws, or regulations of the Government.

Having thus fixed the official standard time of the United States, the third section provides that at 2 o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in March of each year the standard time of each zone shall be advanced one hour, and at 2 o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in October of each year the standard time of each zone shall, by the retarding of one hour, be returned to the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing such zone, so that between the last Sunday in March at 2 o'clock antemeridian and the last Sunday in October at 2 o'clock antemeridian the standard time in each zone shall be one hour in advance of the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone, respectively.

It is in this third section that the daylight-saving plan occurs. During the summer months, and especially between the vernal equinox and the autumnal equinox, the days are long and the sun rises three or four hours before the time when business begins according to the settled habits of the community. It is in this period of the early part of the day that the saving of the use of daylight can be effected by moving the business habits of the community forward one hour.

But, says some individual who prides himself upon his settled opposition to new methods: "Why can't a person rise an hour earlier in the morning if he desires to do so, without the need of a law?"

In this age of complex civilization it is manifest that no one individual can change the settled habits of the community. It is entirely possible for him to rise an hour earlier in the summer time and use that hour for recreational purposes, but in a city at least, or even in a very moderate size industrial community, he can not add that hour to his day's work. His day's work does not depend upon himself alone but upon his employer, his employees, his customers, his clients, and especially upon the arrival and departure of the mails, the opening and closing of the banks and other public offices. In order to take practical advantage of the hour of daylight, it is necessary to move the entire habits of the community by some power which everyone consults and respects.

This power is the clock as represented by the standard time. The change is made at 2 o'clock in the morning of the last Sunday in March—a time when it is manifest that traffic of all kinds is at its lowest ebb. Those who happen to be awake and at business at that hour on Sunday morning would make the change then, and the comparatively few trains which happen to be on the road would change their time as they now change it in passing from one zone into the other. The great mass of citizens, however, would not notice the change at all. When they retired to bed on Saturday night at the usual time, they would simply move their watches one hour forward, get up Sunday morning by the same watch, and practically no change would occur in their habits.

The hasty objector concludes that he himself is the only one who is going to change and that the street cars, railroads, and stores will operate on the old basis. It should be understood, however, that the trains will arrive and depart, the mails will be delivered, the street cars will run, and the banks will open and close at the same hour by the clock as under the existing habit and schedule, so that only the individual who refuses to make the change will find himself out of line with the timepiece and an hour late for everything.

The effect of this simple change is to add an hour of daylight at the beginning of the day and to cut off an hour of darkness at the close of the day. It also has the effect of providing an extra hour of daylight between the close of business in the afternoon and sunset. It confines the sleeping period more nearly to the period of actual darkness and the working and recreational period more nearly to the period of actual daylight.

This bill has been specifically indorsed by the United States Chamber of Commerce and by hundreds of organizations of business men throughout the United States. It has been urged also upon Congress by the American Federation of Labor. An especial plea for its passage has come from the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense on the ground that it is an important war measure. The medical bodies throughout the country have agreed that it is important from the standpoint of health and sanitation in removing much of the eye strain of individual workers and providing more hours of daylight for healthful recreation.

The United States Shipping Board has petitioned Congress for its passage and the Fuel Commissioner made a special plea to the President of the United States setting forth the importance of this measure in the conservation of fuel. It is manifest that all of these organizations could not unite upon a plan unless it possessed undoubted merit and was as far as possible removed from a mere fad.

We have also the result of the experience of the European countries, where it has had a practical test for the last two seasons. In both France and England it goes into operation by virtue of executive order, and if it had not fully demonstrated its usefulness as a war measure it would not have been continued through the third season of its trial.

It is, in fact, a very important war measure at this time. The United States is one of the last of the great powers to adopt this important change, and the failure of Congress to pass the law would put us out of harmony with European nations on the question of time during the summer season. This would have a serious effect upon our exchanges, our shipping, and our mail and cable communications.

The gentleman from Tennessee asked me whether this plan had been adopted in Canada and Mexico and, if not, whether our international train service would not be affected by their failure to adopt the same plan. I am answering this a little more fully by saying that Canada has now adopted the plan in some communities and Provinces by local election. It is probable that it will be adopted there by Dominion election also following our adoption.

It is impossible to say what will be done in Mexico, but the question is not serious in any case, because it is just as feasible to change time when that occurs on international boundary as it is now to change time when that occurs on boundary between one of our existing zones of standard time.

The convenience of similar system of time, however, will appeal to the Dominion of Canada, especially in view of the example of the mother country.

The advantages of the plan are too numerous to analyze in detail. The most conspicuous is the saving in artificial light by cutting off an hour of darkness at the close of day. This results in a saving of fuel to an enormous extent in all of the great cities of the United States. Not alone is the saving in actual fuel involved, which is extremely important during this war period, but the saving in the labor of mining, transporting and handling the fuel, and in operating and providing plants for the production of artificial light.

The advantages of the plan in the way of health and recreation are apparent at a glance. All of the indoor workers will have an extra hour of daylight after the close of their work, which will be of the greatest value in building up their bodily health and strength. The extra hour of daylight can be used also for military training, but more especially for home gardening.

The cultivation of home gardens during the coming season will be a very important element in the conservation of food supplies. The extent to which our population can be fed by perishable food raised at home will be an important factor in winning the war. Home gardening not only utilizes the surplus labor and energies of the family but relieves to that extent the demand upon labor for the farms where there exists now an alarming shortage.

The production of food at home also relieves the strain upon transportation and storage facilities of the country and releases a certain amount of labor and energy which can be devoted to taking the surplus of our food products abroad. The National War Garden Commission, which is very strongly in favor of this bill, calculates that the total amount of time the extra hour of daylight would add to the working time of the 5,000,000 war gardeners which they estimate will be this year would be 910,000,000 hours, and that each garden can grow vegetables equivalent in food value to 126 pounds of beef and 93 pounds of bread. This, they estimate, would save enough meat to feed an army of a million men for 503 days.

Altogether the advantages of the daylight-saving plan are so obvious and the disadvantages, if any, so slight, that this House will do well to respond to the urgent demands of the commercial interests of the country, to the advice of the medical fraternity, and to the request of all those who are engaged in the war work of the Government, and pass this measure, placing the United States in harmony with the practice of our allies, and meeting to that extent the efficient operations of our active enemies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi). The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to renew my request. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be continued for an hour and a half, one-half of the time to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], and at the conclusion the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. WINGO. What disposition is there to allow time?

Mr. SIMS. My purpose is to yield to those who oppose the bill as well as those who favor it.

Mr. WINGO. We could not get time under the rule.

Mr. SIMS. I had no control over the time on the rule.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman has time now.

Mr. SIMS. I will yield from the time in my control.

Mr. WINGO. Is the debate to be on the bill?

Mr. SIMS. The rule says it shall be considered under the general rules of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. Has the committee the power, after the House has decided the amount of debate to be had on this bill, to fix another and a different time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are not in the committee now. We are in the House.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will yield for a question.

Mr. FESS. Under the rule under which we are operating the Chairman has the right to move the previous question at the end of the hour?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. So that if we do not get the hour and a half we may be cut down to an hour?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Tennessee is an experienced man in the House, and he knows that that would not be fair or practicable.

Mr. SIMS. I am anxious to get through.

Mr. WINGO. I have asked the gentleman for time. He has indicated that the committee wants all the time.

Mr. SIMS. I will state to the gentleman that I will yield him five minues of my time that I have to yield.

Mr. WINGO. Very well. Some one suggests that that is all I need.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to one hour and a half, and that at the conclusion of that time the debate shall be exhausted and the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto, and that one-half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee and one-half be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I assume that the time taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] shall be deducted.

Mr. SIMS. Part of it shall be deducted from this side.

Mr. LONDON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee eliminate that part of his request which relates to the five-minute rule. We should be free to offer amendments and to discuss them.

Mr. SIMS. You can offer any amendment, and it can be voted on at the conclusion of the hour and a half.

Mr. LONDON. But can we not have opportunity to speak in favor of an amendment as it is offered?

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman gets time he can do that.

Mr. LONDON. Members desire to take time on their amendments. I object unless that can be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask this question: I desire to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] 25 minutes, to be yielded by him to such gentlemen as he sees proper, without my losing the floor, if I can do that. If not, I will yield five minutes to gentlemen in such amount as they may request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the circumstances, the gentleman can yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he desires to do so.

Mr. SIMS. Then, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted, from the hour I have got to use, to yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], to be yielded by him without my losing the floor and the opportunity to make my motion demanding the previous question on the bill and all committee amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to yield 25 minutes of the hour in his control to the gentleman from Wisconsin, to be yielded by him as he sees proper, this to be done without his losing any privileges which he is entitled to use as in charge of the bill Is there objection?

Mr. LONDON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman the right to do that?

Mr. BORLAND. Could not the gentleman from Wisconsin or any other gentleman on his own side claim an hour in his own right?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, as I remember the rules of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee can yield such time of his hour as he desires for debate without losing his rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is right.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] yields for amendments, he loses the floor for all purposes.

Mr. SIMS. The question is, Can I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] and have him reyield the time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Unless he restricted the time to debate, he could not.

Mr. SIMS. I will restrict it to debate. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin 25 minutes for debate, with the privilege to him of reyielding such of it as he sees proper to other Members of the House.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, under the rules the gentleman has no right to yield time except to those who desire to occupy the floor. The gentleman has no right under the rules to yield time to some one else and have that person yield part of that time. He can only yield the time to one who desires to occupy the floor, and it occurs to me that this can be done in the same way by designating those to whom he desires to yield time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is incorrect in that. The gentleman can yield 25 minutes if he sees proper to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and the gentleman from Wisconsin can yield part of that, if he sees proper, to others.

Mr. SIMS. I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Chair is wrong on that ruling; not that I care about this proposition. It is entirely immaterial. But that rule should not be established, because it is in violation of the rules. I am perfectly willing in this instance that the gentleman from Wisconsin shall have all of the time that the gentleman from Tennessee desires to give him; but I do object, Mr. Speaker, to the Speaker establishing the precedent here that is contrary to the rules.

Mr. RUBEY. Regular order!

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, what is the precedent that the gentleman from Iowa thinks is being established that is contrary to the rule? Under the familiar precedents of the House, the gentleman who has the hour can yield such portions of that time as he pleases to another Member.

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly. I think he has a perfect right to yield 25 minutes of that time to the gentleman from Wisconsin if the gentleman from Wisconsin occupies the 25 minutes. That would be all right. If he does not, he must yield back the balance of his time not occupied by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman from Wisconsin, practically speaking, can allow other gentlemen to speak in his time and we can not stop him. Nobody can stop him.

Mr. DOWELL. Not if the gentleman from Tennessee yields the time?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; the gentleman from Tennessee need not yield the time. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, for instance, 25 minutes. The gentleman from Wisconsin takes the floor. Somebody asks the gentleman from Wisconsin if he may interrupt him. The gentleman from Wisconsin allows him to interrupt him and to proceed for 5 minutes, if he wants, or 10 minutes. Nobody can stop that.

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly; with the gentleman from Wisconsin still occupying the floor.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; he has the technical right to the floor.

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So that that works out, as a practical proposition, as a yielding of time by the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. That is correct, certainly; but not in the manner in which it was suggested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi). That is the way in which the Chair intended it. So the statement of the Chair was correct. To whom does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SIMS. I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] for debate only.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. ESCH. I have enough requests to take up the 25 minutes without yielding any more to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SIMS. Perhaps, possibly, before the debate is over we may get an opportunity for these other gentlemen to be heard.

Mr. BORLAND. Can the gentleman from Tennessee yield me five minutes?

Mr. SIMS. That leaves us only 10 minutes on this side. I would rather yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] than to any other man who is not a member of the committee, because he introduced the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent for more time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] may proceed for five minutes, the time not to be counted as a part of the hour of the gentleman from Tennessee, and the gentleman from Tennessee to lose no rights by reason of it.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask unanimous consent that the debate be extended 20 minutes beyond the hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 20 minutes beyond the hour.

Mr. SIMS. I would have to object to that without an agreement that the previous question should be considered as ordered at the expiration of the time for debate.

Mr. BROWNING. I object, unless that agreement is made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey objects——

Mr. BROWNING. Unless the agreement is made as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DOWELL. I will incorporate that into the request for time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his request.

Mr. DOWELL. That 20 minutes time beyond the hour be granted, and that the previous question be ordered at the end of the hour and twenty minutes.

Mr. SIMS. On the bill and all amendments.

Mr. DOWELL. On the bill and all amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the debate be extended 20 minutes beyond the hour to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is entitled, and that at the close of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. HASTINGS. Regular order!

Mr. SIMS. I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. BORLAND. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes, not to be taken out of the hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for five minutes, not to be taken out of the hour. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] 25 minutes for the purposes of debate, without losing the floor.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill divides the territory of the United States into what are known as five zones, approximating the zones now established by the railroad companies, with the right in the Interstate Commerce Commission to delimit these zones so as to make the delimitations as convenient as possible to traffic conditions. Under the present system there have been many cases of inconvenience because the limits of the zones were not definite. Under the powers granted by the bill the Interstate Commerce Commission will fix these zones. Under present conditions I know of a city in central zone territory which as to one railroad uses eastern time and as to another railroad central time, to the great confusion of the traveling public. There ought to be no such confusion. With the power herein granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the zones, basing them largely upon the junction points, there will be no confusion. Daylight saving is not a new matter. It is not an untried experiment. Twelve or thirteen nations have adopted it. Every European nation at war has adopted it, and not one of them has seen fit to go back to the old system. The fact that it has proven a success in every country that has tried it is a sufficient justification for this country to adopt it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. For a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In those countries that have adopted it, have there been any changes in the hours of labor for the factory workers?

Mr. ESCH. No; not as I understand.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is, they are run by the clock, as before?

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman mean in the number of hours worked by the people?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not mean the number of hours of work. I mean in the time at which they go to work.

Mr. ESCH. They begin an hour earlier, based upon sun time, so that they get through an hour earlier in the afternoon, and that is one of the main purposes of this proposition, that the laboring people can get through at 4 o'clock in the larger centers, whereas they now get through at 5 o'clock, and can devote the balance of the afternoon and the early evening to gardening, other outside work, amusements, and so on.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If this bill shall pass here, I wish to know whether the factories in this country will continue to run by the clock as it now stands—that is, by sun time, using that as a nearly accurate expression—or whether it means that where they now begin work at 7 o'clock, they will then go to work at 8 o'clock?

Mr. DOWELL. No; they will go to work at 7 o'clock.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Seven o'clock as it is now or 8 o'clock as it is now? In other words, whether they will change the hour of the clock at which the whistles will blow? Where they now blow at 7 o'clock to call the people to work, will the whistles then blow at 8 o'clock?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I can not yield at this time. Mr. Speaker, this fact ought to be remembered, that nations that have adopted this proposition in Europe are located in latitudes higher than a great portion of the United States. The nearer we get to the equator the more even the nights and days are, and therefore in the southern part of the United States, possibly in Florida and southern Texas and southern California, they will not be able to save as much sunlight during the months covered by this bill as will the people living in the Northern States. They therefore may not get the full benefit of the act. But it is to be remembered that most of France, practically all of England, Norway, and Sweden, and a great portion of Germany are, in point of latitude, really north of New York City. Therefore their days covered by the daylight act are very much longer than they would be in the southern latitudes. However, in the United States there is scarcely a section that will not be benefited by this act. It will save time; it will save light; it will save fuel; it will increase the comforts of thousands of people. It will aid in the prosecution of the war, and all these are factors which justify Congress in adopting this act.

I will now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, "man's work is from sun to sun." That was true in the old days when there were no clocks. Husbandmen and sailors started with sunrise and that began their day. We go to work by the clock. We find in the summer that the sun gets up earlier and the clock time does not go ahead with the sun. Usually we begin our hours of labor in the factory at 7 o'clock. The result is that in the summer three good hours of morning daylight are lost in many countries, hours that men ought to use so as to get their afternoons to themselves.

It is comparatively a very short time since there were any clocks, and the errors of clock time are as conspicuous as its novelty.

The sailor had a half-hour sand glass which he turned over at sunrise, and when it was out sounded one bell, repeating this until he got to eight bells, and then beginning over again. Short watches of two hours in the evening, called the "dog watch," arranged for the change of men on deck. The first clocks were poor things. They finally became good enough timekeepers or chronometers to enable the mariner to guess at longitude, although as late as 1798 Vancouver could not tell his longitude within a degree, and in 1825, the beginning point of the survey of Alaska, allowed a margin of two degrees of longitude to cover errors. Those who travel by sea know how the clock is changed every day according to the longitude and the time when the sun crosses the meridian.

The sun itself is nearer the earth in winter and moves faster, so that the length of the days varies during the year, and our clock time is called "mean time," being an average of the sun time during the year.

Since the introduction of factories and fixed working days the people of cities where they had clocks began to work by clock time, while the farmer in summer still gets up with the sun in order to get his harvest in.

The trouble with clock time is that the whole community gets used to starting different sorts of work at 6, 7, or 8 in the morning, while daylight begins much earlier, but common agreement has the force of law. The workman would consider it an imposition to be asked to begin an hour earlier by the clock. In families where there are servants breakfast can not be had until the servants are up and the milkman has called. Markets, stores, banks, factories, libraries, railroads, trolleys, and all other machinery of civilization have each its own time-table, and each one depends upon the other. A commuter can not get to town until the train runs, and more trains are run at hours which suit the convenience of the community. A single man can get up earlier and go it alone at anything that interests him. The great historian and student, Thiers, used to rise at 3 and get six hours' work in his study before he went to business. After dinner he appeared for a few minutes at the official reception and then went to bed. But most men and women must go with the crowd, and there can be no change, no matter how beneficial, which is not a matter of common consent and which is not acceded to by all.

This bill, as a practical matter, proposes to put the clock forward in summer so that it will ring 7 o'clock at what we now call 6 o'clock, and factory and work generally will begin more nearly with the day. A few of us get daylight for ourselves by rising early and getting to work before the rest start, and if you start with daylight I may not have daylight for my morning exercise. Thus it is not true, as some of us have thought, that every man can arrange his time for himself.

My friends, the Colgate Co., in Jersey City, tried daylight saving. They got the workmen to agree to come an hour earlier, so as to get an earlier workday and have the afternoon to themselves. Everyone liked the plan, but they found it would not work well because the morning trains did not run frequently in the early hours. Everybody must make the change at once.

Railroad travel has become an absolute necessity. American railroads run east and west, and in 24 hours, from New York to Chicago, the time changes by more than an hour. The difficulties attending the change of time with each degree of longitude were of little importance as long as railroads were short, but as the system ran 3,000 miles, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, these frequent changes became unbearable, and to make travel safe it was necessary that the time should not be in doubt and that the engineer's watch should be a law from the beginning to the end of his run. Hence came the adoption of the system of zones, in which the time changes an hour at certain points, preferably, whenever possible, at junction points, such as Pittsburgh, Buffalo, or Omaha. These railroad zones are described in the bill and are made subject to the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The time set by the railroads has been very generally adopted by the various cities and towns throughout the Union and followed abroad. There is no law for this, and it is merely a matter of common consent. It is only one of the instances of how much can be done without law and by common consent, habit, and agreement.

Perhaps the bill might have stopped with simply saying that railroad time should be put forward, and governed in this way. The present standard time exists by mere agreement between the railroads, which changed the hours all over the country so as to avoid altering the time with every few miles of travel. The system works very well, although in some places standard time is a half hour ahead of the sun and in others a half hour behind. In one gentleman's district—Mr. COOPER of West Virginia—the sheriff, following the almanac and railroad time, closed the polls 20 minutes before sunset because the sun ought to have set at that time. [Laughter.]

It is not certain whether towns will feel at liberty as they are now to adopt what time they please. Savannah found it inconvenient to use Chicago time, and its business now runs by New York time, although the railroads run by Chicago time. The same thing is true in Ohio. This is a country of local independence.

The action of these towns is a proof of the practical character of the bill. Chicago time was 37 minutes slower than Savannah sun time, and it was found that a day's work would not be done before dark if it was to begin and end by Chicago time. The workmen certainly would not start an hour earlier by the clock, and so Savannah set the clock forward an hour, just as we are doing now. This governed all the affairs of the town, but everybody knew that if a railroad train started at 1 o'clock, it meant 2 o'clock by the Savannah time.

The advantages of getting up with the sun are so great that some arrangement to catch up with daylight in the summer has become absolutely necessary in time of war. "Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise." It will give the workmen time in the afternoon, whether he work in the factory or the office. The children will have longer holiday after school. Men can go to their homes and be with their families. They can take care of gardens, and gardens and food production are now an absolute necessity. It will save gas and electric light, and therefore fuel. The figures of this saving are estimated in many millions. The system was adopted last year by England, France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, and Portugal, and this year by Australia and Iceland, but, of course, it was reversed in Australia. An hour of daylight to 20,000,000 workers and 100,000,000 people is of inestimable value. The change is a practical one and will only be made twice a year. It will shorten one night in the spring by an hour and lengthen one night in the fall by an hour, and the only objection that has been made is that some through trains will be an hour late one night when the time is changed. Late trains are not uncommon.

This legislation does not attempt to change time. Actual time can not be changed by legislation. It changes only the artificial time which we have. What is called "mean time" is an artificial compromise. Standard time is an entirely artificial agreement by which one place takes the time of another so as to keep to equal hours and even time throughout certain zones. The language of the bill if carefully read provides that the railroad time shall be made an hour earlier during the summer and this could have been done by an order of the Railroad Director without any statute. It likewise says that United States offices shall be operated by this statutory time and that United States statutes as to time shall be construed to refer to that time. When the act provides that it shall determine "the time in which any act shall or shall not be performed by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States," the courts may limit the word "jurisdiction" so that the enactment may not extend for all purposes to all United States territory, but only to matters within United States constitutional jurisdiction. But common consent will do the rest. The people have generally adopted railroad standard time and the people will adopt United States standard time because it gets them nearer to the real day. We follow the motto, "Work while it is called to-day." This is a practical matter. It does not settle theoretical time. It settles the practical question of when a man shall work by saying that our arbitrary time shall follow the seasons.

It is of no consequence whether the bill technically goes too far in saying that everybody shall be bound by the new time, because, although time and tide wait for no man, and the sun does not stand still or go ahead for the American Congress, as it did once for Joshua [laughter], it is beyond all question that on the whole this bill will work for the practical advantage of the community, and I support it heartily, whether for peace or war.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, the full merit of this proposed legislation has been obscured behind the clouds of ridicule and lack of understanding, some of the darkness which this bill seeks to eliminate. This measure does not propose to change either the laws of nature or the habits of man. But it does seek to alter the conditions under which we work and play.

In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], let me say that, briefly, the setting forward of our clocks neither lengthens or shortens the hours of toil. The working day under the new arrangement of time remains the same, so far as the actual length in hours of that day is concerned. It merely means that the working day will commence one hour nearer to sunrise and terminate one hour further away from sunset than at present. And as a corollary the time for recreation will begin one hour earlier and end one hour earlier. That is all there is to the proposition in its simple analysis. In other words, we merely borrow 60 minutes from the afternoon and loan them to the morning.

This will enable us to do more in the early hours of the day and then have more time for recreation in the afternoon, while it is yet light. The same amount of time for work and and the same amount of time for play will be ours as at present, the only difference being that our work and our pleasures will be consummated in daylight. It means that, accomplishing the same, we cut off one hour of darkness, thereby benefiting health and saving that much artificial light and the corresponding amount of fuel to produce that light. I am heartily in favor of the proposition.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] two minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the daylight-saving proposal is almost the only thing since the summer of 1914 on which the entente powers of Europe and the central powers have been able to agree. The forerunner of the movement in the world was Germany, which passed a law on the 6th of April, 1916, putting forward the clocks one hour. Within three months of that time the following countries of Europe had adopted the daylight-saving plan: Holland, Austria, Turkey, England, France, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Italy, Switzerland, Spain, and Portugal.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I have not the time. In 1917 this list was increased by the addition of Australia and Iceland. I believe that in the New World Nova Scotia has set the United States a good example. England was actuated by considerations growing out of the war in adopting this policy. She found that she could effect an enormous saving in coal for military and naval purposes if she adopted the daylight-saving plan. It is said that in 1917 she saved nearly £3,000,000 as a result of the daylight-saving plan, and thereby released the equivalent in coal for her war vessels and for her war industries. As a war measure and as a peace measure I favor this bill. When I was in Great Britain in November I made full inquiries into the workings of the daylight-saving movement. Everywhere I went I was told that it had become an integral part of the fabric and life of the people of Great Britain, and that they would not, if they could, even consider going back to the old régime. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have any particular objection to this bill; I just decline to take it seriously. I do not know that it is going to help anyone and I do not know that it will hurt anybody. I suppose I would not have taken any time except that I want to remove the impression that I am inclined to "pester," as some folks say, my good friend from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, Mr. SIMS. I would not think of that, because I am very fond of the gentleman from Tennessee, and if the House will permit me I shall tell the reason why. He is the first real live Congressman that I ever saw. I remember when I was a barefooted boy in his district he was pointed out to me as he walked along the road as a Congressman. That morning I had gone to work at daylight—not by the clock—and I was throwing up sweet-potato hills with a hoe, the meanest work that a boy ever did, unless it be "suckering" tobacco; and those of you who were raised in Tennessee and Kentucky know what that is. So ever since that time as a barefoot boy when I saw him, my first real Congressman, I have been exceedingly fond of him and have watched with pride his steady rise to his present great influence and high standing in the House, and when I get "naughty" with him it is simply the naughtiness of a young man to an elderly man whom he loves and respects. God bless him, I hope he will remain in Congress for many years to lead us by his wisdom and cheer us with his graciousness.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is one of the most ingenious, hard-working Members of this body. He is always serious about everything, and he thought that I wanted to repeal the laws of nature or alter them. That is not what I am trying to do. He is the one that is trying to make the change. I was serious when I told him that I read a magazine article last Sunday proposing a winter thermometer.

I do not recall the name of the gentleman who wrote it, but if I can find the article I am going to ask the privilege of putting it in the RECORD, because it was a serious article, advocating that Congress provide for a winter thermometer and fix the freezing point at 45° Fahrenheit, on the serious theory that people generally try to keep their apartments and houses at between 60 and 70 degrees of heat, and they could look at the thermometers and be fooled, and in that way save fuel next winter. I have as much respect for that proposal as I have for this. Mr. Speaker, you can not change the habits of a Nation, and that is what you are trying to do by this legislation. A majority of the men who advocate this character of legislation have not seen the sun rise in 20 years [applause and laughter], and they will not see it if you pass this bill. This bill is for the relief of the slackers of the Nation who are too lazy to get up early. If it will get them out of bed earlier and get them to their offices at 9 o'clock instead of 10 o'clock, it may not do any harm, and may do some good.

But the great mass of the toiling people of this country will go on getting up before or at daylight. This is simply a bill to deceive men who are too lazy to get up, and have not the will power to set the alarm clock earlier. If you want to save daylight, why do you not run up the clocks two hours instead of one? You can do it. You have plenty of opportunity during the summer months to get up two hours earlier and use the daylight. These men who traipse around here at night are not going to bed any earlier, and they will not get up earlier if you pass this.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The thing I am concerned about in this bill is, and I know the gentleman represents an agricultural district as well as I do, is not the beginning of the day but the end.

Mr. WINGO. There will not be any end.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of course, stores and every other business that opens an hour earlier will close an hour earlier. Now, would that not inconvenience people who work not by the number of hours in the day, but until the sun goes down?

Mr. WINGO. No; I do not think it would make any difference. I think there are a great many people in this country that will not pay any attention to this law; and people will go around here in the city of Washington and ask, "What time is it?" "Do you mean the congressional time or the standard time," will be the reply. The farmer will have a good laugh over our tinkering with the clocks. We have tinkered with everything; we have tried to repeal the law of supply and demand, now you are tinkering with the clocks, and if you keep up this foolishness, some fool will ask us to suspend the law of gravity and regulate the period of gestation. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman tell me at what time Congress will convene?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know.

Mr. KING. Congress is supposed to convene at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. WINGO. It will convene at 12 o'clock "congressional" time, or at 11 o'clock real time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will it interfere with the time of getting up on Sundays?

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman is constituted as I am, it will not. I repeat, I am not so much opposed to this legislation, as I can not take it seriously. We should not be wasting our time on such bills, but should go on with the war-finance bill, the great supply bills for the Army and Navy, and other measures for speeding up the war. While our boys are fighting in the trenches we are here like a lot of school boys "tinkering" with the clocks. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT], a member of the committee.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I, like some other gentlemen who have spoken in regard to this bill, at first regarded the subject with some levity, and thought the matter might be futile and that it was chimerical, but the longer I have thought about it and the more closely I have examined it the more I am convinced that there is practical utility in it.

The best proof of a pudding is the eating thereof, and the very best proof of the business sense of the world in regard to a measure is what the business men say. Now, this measure has been advocated by the National Chamber of Commerce, representing 450,000 business interests in this country. That in itself, in my judgment, would be conclusive proof of the merits of the matter. But further than that—and I have so little time I can not discuss the merits of the bill—permit me to observe to this distinguished assembly that this very measure, according to Mr. Brunet, who is a skilled public-service engineer in Providence, R. I., is estimated to save $40,000,000 in fuel in the United States in one year. We have cried for fuel; we say that there is a scarcity of it. We all know we need it, and need it all the time, and if that item alone is to be taken into consideration, it would be a moving consideration to me.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I must decline to be interrupted.

There were $10,000,000 saved in five and one-half months in France for fuel alone. There were $12,000,000 saved in England for five months and a half in fuel for light and heating purposes. There were 200,000 tons of coal saved in the city of London in the period of five and a half months by their daylight saving.

There are to-day about 102,000,000 people in this country outside of the territorial expansion that we have in the Philippines and in the Sandwich Islands. Of those we can safely say there are about 20,000,000 men and boys and other male labor engaged in our manufacturing industries and upon our farms. Allow one hour per day in these four or five months as the saving in time by the advancing of the clock, by having them get up earlier and working at that time, and you save all those hours. If there ever was a time in the history of the Nation when we needed productive farm labor, incessantly and intensely, this is the time.

Some gentlemen say we can not change nature, that we can not change the habits of the people. I admit you can not do that by legislation, but you can do it by the moral effect of the legislation and you can do it by the example that has been set.

Now, this matter can not be accomplished unless there is a concentration of effort. If one establishment in Pittsburgh says, "We will have daylight-saving regulation," and another says, "We will not," there is no concentration of effort. If one city says it will do so and another city says it will not do so, again there is the competition and no concentration. But if you have a national law to the effect, although it is not penal, although there is no penalty attached to the violation thereof, and although it is nothing except moral suasion and example, if you have a national law and it is general and universal, you have a concentrated effort, and that is what the bill does and nothing else.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has this experiment been tried out in England under war conditions?

Mr. DEWALT. It has, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And is the report from England to the effect that it has been satisfactory?

Mr. DEWALT. Satisfactory, and completely so. They saved $12,000,000 in fuel in five months' time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. How will they save fuel?

Mr. DEWALT. By reason of the fact that if they go to work at one hour earlier in the daylight they do not require light. The coal is used in producing electric light.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I heard the gentleman from Mississippi ask a moment ago how this would save any fuel. I will answer his question. In the cities and towns of the country a great many places are required now to close at 11 o'clock at night. If these places should put the clock ahead one hour they will really close at what now is 10 o'clock, and thus save an hour's consumption of fuel for the purpose of artificial light. It will save, also, an hour's consumption of fuel in millions of places for the production of heat. And these two savings will together save millions in money.

Now, here in my hand is the answer to the gentleman's question as to what the saving has been in London, England. Mr. Robert Garland, the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, as chairman of the daylight-saving committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, testified before the Senate committee. By the way, the Senate passed this bill unanimously. This is what he said:

I believe, also, Senators that if you will ascertain from the British or the French commissions, from any of the members who are here, they will say that they not only are satisfied to have this in time of war, but they will also continue it in times of peace. Those are the verdicts we get from these various countries, and we have corresponded with chambers of commerce in Great Britain; we have statistics and reports from the main cities, such as London, Birmingham, Manchester, Glasgow, and other cities, as well as Belfast, in Ireland. We have reports from Vienna; we have reports from Berlin; we have reports from Paris. In England alone, in the short term of five and one-half months, they saved in fuel $12,000,000 in our money, and in France $10,000,000. It means economy, it means efficiency, it means physical recreation for our people, and it means farm gardening to a very much larger extent than we have to-day, because it gives the men, women, and children that extra hour, and that is the one thing I wish to impress upon you.

Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked a few minutes ago by another gentleman, it is sufficient to say that where shops now open at 7 in the morning by the clock they will continue to open at 7 by the clock——

Mr. PADGETT. But that will be 6 o'clock.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That will make no difference at all. They will work the same number of hours, but they will quit one hour earlier, and therefore will consume less fuel in the evening for artificial light. Moreover, the places of amusement, all the theaters and countless other places, though closing at the same hour by the clock, will really be closing one hour earlier, and thus require less fuel for heat and light.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] said that he could not take this bill seriously, and yet it presents a subject so serious and important that England, France, Austria-Hungary, Italy, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Australia, Iceland, and Bermuda have considered it, have all adopted the plan proposed by this bill, and, according to official reports, with most gratifying results. It would seem as if the gentleman from Arkansas could afford at least to consider the bill seriously.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I would have liked to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, when I first began to consider this question of daylight saving I was disposed to believe with my friend from Kentucky, Mr. THOMAS, but since that time I have given some consideration to the measure and am now heartily in favor of the provisions of the pending bill.

At a meeting composed of men representing farmers, business and professional men, and industrial establishments, held in the city of Johnstown, Pa., recently, resolutions were adopted favoring the daylight-saving bill and urging its enactment, a copy of the same having been forwarded to me and mention made thereof in the RECORD.

In a community such as that in which I live, composed largely of industrial workers, it has been found that in times like the present emergency men are very glad to be able to leave their employment one hour sooner and devote that hour in their war gardens, and many of our men are doing such work right now. Those of us who have had no experience whatever with men employed in industrial establishments have no conception what the cessation of daily employment one hour earlier in the evening means. At this time of the year men who are employed at day work are required to eat their morning and evening meal by artificial light. By the change now proposed, the daylight saving will work a wonderful change in the evening and furnish opportunity to vastly increase the raising of food products. I am in sympathy with the arguments already adduced in favor of this measure and hope that there will not be one dissenting vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, when I first heard of the daylight-saving proposition I thought it was a little strange that people could not agree, if they wanted to, to get up an hour earlier without changing the clock, but the more I have looked into the matter the more I have understood that if you want to change the habits of people you have to change the clock. After all, there is a good deal that is arbitrary about our methods of reckoning time, and clocks are rarely exactly right anywhere. A day is the time it takes the earth to turn around on its axis, and just why it should be divided into 24 parts called hours, I do not know. It comes down to us from some ancient method of reckoning. The 24 hours, 1 hour to every 15° of the circle, do not work out exactly right, and there is a difference of some 4 minutes, I believe, between what is called solar time and siderial or astronomical time. Then the earth does not turn over exactly 365 times while it is going around the sun in a year, but about 365¼ times, so we have to add a day once in four years in February to make the years come out right in the long run. The months are supposed to come from the revolutions of the moon, but to make them come out right in a year some have been given 30 days and some 31 days, and one 28 days, except once in four years, when it has 29. There is a good deal that is arbitrary about it all, rather than scientific. In the doctrinaire days of the French Revolution they tried to change a good deal of this, and were going to have it all arranged on the decimal system, with 10 months in a year and 10 days in a week, and I have forgotten whether they tried 10 hours in a day or not—but, anyway, it did not last. It was real, genuine revolution, however, and one evidence that the Russian revolutionists, the bolsheviki, are not the real thing is shown in the fact that they have not tried to reform the calendar, though the Russian calendar needs it as much as some other things Russian.

The division of the United States into time belts 15 degrees, or an hour, apart is arbitrary, but so convenient and workable that ever since the railroads adopted it in 1883 it has been generally accepted by everybody, and I have been very much surprised in reading the hearings on this bill to find that the standard-time belts have never before been given the sanction of law. The fact that they were generally adopted without any law shows that you can work great reforms without passing laws, though the fashion nowadays is to pass a law for everything, and this bill to turn all the clocks ahead an hour on March 31 caps the climax of the present fashion. It is nevertheless a workable proposition and will undoubtedly save daylight and fuel, a matter of prime importance during these strenuous war times. Under the present standard-time system there are places where the clocks are nearly an hour faster than the real sun time, and the people in those places are to-day complacently getting up at 5 because the clock says 6 without knowing the difference. That proves the value of the plan without drawing on the experience of European countries. My friend, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], says you can not change the habits of the people by law. The answer to that is that the habits of the people in the matter of getting out of bed and getting into bed and going to work were changed when the standard-time system was adopted.

Mr. Speaker, it may seem an exaggeration to say that there are places where people are to-day getting up at 5 because the clock says it is 6, but Cleveland, Ohio, is an example. Travelers know that as you go westward on the New York Central or the Erie the railroad time changes to central time at Buffalo. You set your watch an hour back on leaving that city. Suppose you arrive at Cleveland, some five hours by train west of Buffalo, at 6 o'clock. You will find the clocks in the city set at 7 o'clock. After trying central time a while the people of Cleveland decided, as a matter largely of daylight saving, to reckon by the eastern standard of the seventy-fifth meridian instead of the central time of the ninetieth meridian, which is considerably west of Chicago and not far from St. Louis. As Cleveland is about at longitude 82, its clocks were about 28 minutes slow by central standard time and are 32 minutes fast by eastern time. They found that everything went along better with the clocks indicating a half hour later than the actual time rather than a half hour earlier.

In my district eastern standard time is practically the same as actual time. The seventy-fifth meridian is the meridian that passes through Philadelphia, and it passes through Sullivan County, N. Y., at Lackawaxen, a little junction point on the Erie Railroad. Port Jervis, which is in Orange County and about the westernmost point in my district, is about 18 minutes of longitude east of this point. Its clocks are therefore a minute and some seconds only slower than actual time. The seventy-fourth meridian passes through the Hudson River, between the cities of Newburgh and Beacon, and clock time in those places and in Poughkeepsie is just 4 minutes behind the actual time—that is, behind what it would be if eastern standard time were reckoned from the seventy-fourth instead of the seventy-fifth meridian west longitude. Millerton, which is the easternmost place in my district, is about at longitude 73° 30′, and its clocks are therefore about 6 minutes slow. When you get over to Boston, Mass., eastern standard time is some 16 minutes slow, and at Eastport, Me., longitude 67°, it is 32 minutes slow. It will be a particularly good thing for those far eastern points to set their clocks an hour ahead during the spring and summer, but it will also be a good thing everywhere else. Our time standard after Easter Sunday till October will be sixtieth meridian time, the meridian of far eastern Nova Scotia.

It is expected that the enactment of this law will lead to a good deal more of food production, particularly by small gardeners in the suburbs of the smaller cities and villages, and I believe that expectation is warranted. It will be a pretty lazy individual who will not make some good use of the extra hour of the afternoon and evening. How it will work out with the genuine early risers, of whom there are some in every city and village—people who have been accustomed to doing half a day's work before breakfast—I am not so sure. They have always been daylight savers, like the farmers.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers are the real daylight savers. They have been getting up early and going to bed early for generations, and that is why so many of them are healthy, wealthy, and wise. This bill is designed to give the city people equal advantages. They will not get up an hour earlier without this little scheme to fool them into thinking that it is an hour later than it really is, but when they once get started at it they will all be glad of it.

I have been interested in this proposition for several years, and, incidentally, Mr. Colgate, of Colgate & Co., who has tried the plan in his factory at Jersey City with great success, in spite of somewhat unsatisfactory train service, lives in my district and has written me several times about it, and I have been interested in Senator CALDER'S efforts, which are now to be crowned with success. Chambers of commerce and many manufacturers and business men in my district have favored the daylight-saving bill, and I have no doubt that it will be passed without much opposition and will be entirely successful. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any legislation that has been more universally demanded than the daylight-saving bill. This bill was passed by the Senate early last summer. I am glad that the time has been extended by the House committee from five to seven months.

I was one of a committee of three Congressmen to visit the White House last summer in the interest of this bill, the other two Members being the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], the author of the bill. The President told us that he needed no conversion to the idea of daylight saving. Back 30 or 40 years ago, when it was the custom to work from dawn until darkness, there was a young chap working in a woolen mill, working 12 hours a day. He requested his employer for a day off. His employer asked him for what reason. He said, "I work 12 hours a day and at the end of the day I am fatigued, and when Sunday comes I sleep all day. I want a day off so that I can see what the daylight looks like."

This will be of tremendous benefit not only to those athletically inclined, who play golf and tennis, but to all the industrial workers of this country. It has been shown that in England in the few months of experiment it has saved $2,500,000.

By unanimous consent, I wish to insert in the RECORD letters from Marcus A. Marks, president of the Borough of Manhattan, and from Sidney Colgate, of Colgate & Co., who has tried this out in private industry with great success.

The letters are as follows:

NATIONAL DAYLIGHT SAVING ASSOCIATION,
New York City, January 28, 1918.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN OLNEY: Answering your kind lines of 21st, just received, I inclose my most recent summing up of the arguments for daylight saving.

Experiences in single cities, like Cleveland and Detroit, while usually satisfactory, do not touch the present movement, which is a summer proposition (Apr. 28 to Sept. 29), and which is to be not local but universal in this country, and which will in turn bring us into harmony with Europe, where daylight saving is also a summer regulation.

In the winter there is no daylight saving by pushing clocks forward, because you lose as much by the darkness in earlier rising as you gain by retiring earlier.

We have studied this carefully for two years and feel certain of ground, as stated in Post article. Glad you will help push this into the light, I remain,

Cordially, yours,

MARCUS A. MARKS.

COLGATE & CO.,
New York, January 26, 1918.

Hon. RICHARD OLNEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. OLNEY: I am inclosing copy of a statement which I have just sent to the Outing Publishing Co. I think it is exactly what you want, and it will be all right for you to use any or all of it in any address that you may make before the House, and you may use my name and that of our company in connection with it.

We are heart and soul in favor of daylight saving. It would, no doubt, now be considered a war measure, but I am convinced of the fact that if our Nation tries it it will never give it up; it will be one of the blessings which will come to future generations through this war.

I thank you for your interest, and if there is anything further that I can do to help you in this matter please do not hesitate to call on me.

Yours, sincerely,

SIDNEY M. COLGATE.

COLGATE & CO.,
New York, January 26, 1918.

We have found that closing our office an hour earlier in the summer has been of much benefit to our employees. They have been able to use the extra hour for recreation and out-of-door work. In speaking to the head of one of our departments, in the fall of the first year that we tried the daylight-saving plan, I said: "George, you have not had a vacation this summer, when do you propose to take it?" He replied: "I do not feel as if I needed any vacation. Every day during the summer was in the nature of a short vacation, and I have never been in better health."

This was the experience of practically all of our office force. We found that all, both men and women, were in better condition; that they worked with much more snap and energy, and that the same force put through more work than before the daylight-saving plan was adopted. Getting out earlier in the afternoon for some recreation or work which really counts, acts as a stimulus and encouragement, and we have found that there was a much more buoyant and cheerful spirit throughout our office force.

We would not under any circumstance go back to the old plan. After we tried this daylight saving for only a month and a half 94 per cent of our employees voted to continue it. Each year we have adopted it for a longer period. During 1917 it was in operation from the 1st of April to the 1st of October, and we certainly will put it into effect this year.

Congress could not take any action which would more easily save fuel, increase the production from the land, and benefit the health of the Nation than by putting into effect the Calder daylight-saving bill which passed the Senate at the last session, but was held up by the House. Almost universally business men are in favor of daylight saving, and if our Congressmen could only realize that their constituents are behind them in this matter there would be no question whatsoever that the bill would promptly be passed.

We are way behind our allies in this respect. They have tried it out and are convinced of the advantages of daylight saving. France has enacted a law that daylight saving, every year, whether they are at war or not, will commence on the 1st of April and continue until the 1st of October.

COLGATE & CO.,
By SIDNEY M. COLGATE.

Mr. Speaker, to practice what I preach, I yield back the remaining minutes of daylight of my time to the committee.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. OLNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman has stated that similar legislation has been passed in England and several other European countries. Is the time when this change goes into effect uniform?

Mr. OLNEY. It is proposed to conform——

Mr. HASTINGS. Does it go into operation in March or April, or at the same time this bill provides?

Mr. OLNEY. As I understand——

Mr. HASTINGS. Does it go into effect in March or in April? The Senate bill has one date and the House amended it. At what date does this go into effect in European countries?

Mr. SIMS. In England March 24. In Germany, I think, March 15.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then it is not uniform?

Mr. SIMS. Practically uniform.

Mr. HASTINGS. Very nearly so?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] three minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I think all of the great industries in the State of Pennsylvania favor this legislation, and there is a reason for it. If work is begun in the mills one hour ahead of the present time of beginning work and it ceases one hour ahead of the present time of ceasing work, there will be an hour's saving, so far as fuel for artificial light and heat are concerned. It has been figured by men who are able to estimate on this subject, as to the 83,500,000 incandescent lights reported by the Census to be in use in 1915, that it requires to keep those lights going for one hour 6,126 tons of coal. For one hour per day from the end of April until the end of September it requires to keep those lights going 937,000 tons of coal. It is believed that 1,000,000 tons of coal per annum could readily be saved by the passage of this bill.

Gentlemen have suggested that foreign countries have adopted this daylight saving. That is true. In 1906 a parliamentary committee in England reported in favor of daylight saving. That was in a year of peace. The reasons given for it were these: "A greater use of daylight for recreation." That is to say, if work ceased one hour earlier in the day, there would be another hour for recreation, so far as the workers were concerned. The second reason was "less use of houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors." That, of course, appealed to the people of England in particular at that time. A third reason was "the benefit to the general health and welfare of all classes." That included the saving of strain on the eyes. When a man works in the daylight the strain on his eyes is not so severe as it is when he works by artificial light. Another reason given by this parliamentary committee was the reduction of commercial and domestic expenses as to artificial light. That involves the coal-saving estimates I have mentioned for the United States.

Since the war broke out every European country, with the exception of Russia, has found it absolutely necessary to avail itself of these morning hours of daylight which had previously been wasted, because people did not begin work early enough to enable the various industries to avail themselves of the natural light and because there was an extravagance, a waste, and expense, due to the fact that work that could have been done by daylight continued after dark, when lights and fires had to be forced.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the trade and commercial bodies of Pennsylvania and Philadelphia have been sending resolutions urging the passage of this bill as a war measure—a speeding-up measure. Individual business men have also been writing to urge its passage. They want the advantage of that extra daylight hour for reasons that appeal to our business judgment. I shall incorporate several of these in my remarks, but for general information I submit a series of resolutions adopted by the American Philosophical Society, of Philadelphia, founded in the year 1727, which can not be accused of having any other than a scientific interest in this important question. At a meeting in the ancient home of the society in Independence Square, May 31 last, action was taken as follows:

RESOLUTIONS IN REFERENCE TO DAYLIGHT SAVING ADOPTED BY THE AMERICAN PHILOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

Resolved, That the American Philosophical Society, convened in special meeting for this purpose, memorialize the Congress of the United States urging the early enactment of the identical bills, House No. 2009 and Senate No. 1854, entitled, respectively, "A bill to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States."

Resolved, That the members of the American Philosophical Society urge their respective Senators and Representatives to take early and affirmative action on these bills, and that the society address the President, asking his approval of them.

Resolved, That the members of the American Philosophical Society urge their respective State legislatures to pass resolutions favoring these bills, as the Pennsylvania Legislature has recently done, and that they further urge commercial, financial, agricultural, and engineering associations in their respective localities to memorialize Congress for the early enactment of these bills.

Mr. Arthur H. Lea, in moving the adoption of the above resolutions, said:

In his autobiography, Benjamin Franklin wrote:

"In walking through the Strand and Fleet Street one morning at seven o'clock I observed there was not one shop open, though it had been daylight and the sun up above three hours; the inhabitants of London chusing voluntarily to live much by candle light, and sleep by sunlight, and yet often complain, a little absurdly, of the duty on candles and the high price of tallow." (Bigelow edition, Philadelphia, 1868, pp. 291-292.)

The founder of this society was the first to present the idea of daylight saving but his suggestion has been neglected for 150 years. Men can not and will not individually alter their habits of rising and going to bed, but collectively they can do so with no inconvenience. Traveling eastward or westward we alter our watches one hour at certain places and immediately forget the change and adapt ourselves to the new time. By Federal legislation we can do the same and as easily throughout the entire country.

The bills aforesaid would legally establish the standard-time zones adopted by the railroads in 1883, which innovation was then recognized as an immense convenience. They would also cover any legal questions by providing that standard time is to govern common carriers, Government officers, and persons subject to the jurisdiction of the United States in their acts and legal relations, rights, and contracts. Furthermore, after establishing standard time, these bills provide for advancing it in the five zones, respectively, by one hour at 2 a. m. on the last Sunday in April of each year, and for retarding it by one hour at 2 a. m. on the last Sunday in September. The only amendment necessary, now that April, 1917, is past, is to provide that for this year the advancement shall take effect at the earliest date, to be specified after approval of the act of Congress.

The advantages of daylight saving are manifold and great. Daylight is free, artificial light costly. According to the United States Census, issued in 1915, there were 83,500,000 incandescent lamps of 50-watt equivalent in the United States in 1912. The growth in the five-year period since 1907 had been at the rate of 84 per cent. Allowing for only a growth of 50 per cent in the five-year period from 1912 to 1917, there are conservatively 130,000,000 such lamps in the United States to-day. To illuminate this number of lamps one hour requires 6,126 tons of coal, according to the best station practice in large units. To illuminate them for one hour per day from the end of April to the end of September requires 937,000 tons of coal. This, then, would be the economy in coal alone by the daylight-saving plan. To this should be added the cost of transporting and delivering this 1,000,000 tons of coal, carting away ashes, etc. It has been impossible to ascertain how many of these lamps are illuminated with hydroelectric current, but it would be conservative to offset them against the oil and gas lamps in the country, and to conclude that the net economy in coal, oil, and gas to be effected by daylight saving would be equivalent to about 1,000,000 tons of coal a year.

From the labor standpoint, if we take eight hours as the standard workday, divided into two equal periods from 8 to 12 o'clock and 1 to 5, with rest and dinner from 12 to 1, there is one hour of daylight more from sunrise to 12 o'clock than from 1 p. m. to sunset, and this disparity increases to 1 hour and 19 minutes at the last Sunday in September. In other words, from two to three and one-half hours of daylight are now allowed to pass before work begins and only from three-fourths to two and one-half hours of daylight remain after work ends. It would obviously be better if these differences were more nearly equated, or even reversed, so that work would begin in a cooler hour and end sooner after the "heat meridian," when labor is more exhausting. The recreative period of the day would then have more sunlight, and the people would spend more time in fresh air, with resulting physical benefit. Eyestrain would be lessened by the substitution of an additional hour of natural for artificial light. As public health affects public efficiency, the productiveness of the Nation would be increased. Daylight saving, after long discussion during peace, was adopted as a war measure for efficiency and economy by the belligerent nations of Europe, excepting Russia, and the same reasons apply with even greater force to the United States, which does not have as long days and short nights as Europe in summer.

Agricultural productiveness would also be stimulated by the enactment of daylight saving. Farmers would have an extra evening hour of light, and those in other occupations who wish to raise food plants would have the same extra hour after the close of their working day. Thus this change of time would aid immensely in accomplishing the Government's expressed desire for increased food production.

As previously stated, all the belligerent European nations except Russia have adopted daylight saving as a war measure for efficiency and economy, and adjacent neutral nations, such as Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland, have done likewise. These European nations now follow time standards six and seven hours ahead of ours, and therefore their business day is practically over before ours begins. Stock exchanges in London and Paris now close one hour before our exchanges open, and the Continental European stock exchanges close two hours before our opening. Stock-exchange transactions within the same day would be facilitated by our advancing our time, and the same would be true of ordinary commercial and financial transactions across the ocean.

THE MANUFACTURING VIEWPOINT.

PHILADELPHIA, March 6, 1918.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: What is holding up the daylight-saving bill? One million tons of coal could have been saved last summer had Congress passed this bill a year ago, and this quantity of fuel would have kept 1,000,000 families in comfort for a month; it would have prevented thousands of deaths from pneumonia, influenza, and bronchitis; it would have kept factories working which were compelled to close down; it would have kept people employed who have been walking the streets as a result of the fuel famine—all because Congress failed to act.

The only possible objectors to this bill could be the gas and electric light companies, as this bill has the unique distinction of being wholly good—a bill which would lessen suffering, keep the wheels of industry moving, save fuel for our coming winter, promote the health and happiness of millions, and yet it is allowed to remain dormant. I wonder if Congress realizes how much the people are stirred up about this matter? Can't you do something to get prompt action on this bill?

Very truly, yours,

NORTH AMERICAN LACE CO.,
HENRY S. BROMLEY,
Vice President.

FOR WAR WORK IN THE GARDENS.

NATIONAL WAR GARDEN COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1918.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I want to thank you for your efforts in behalf of the daylight-saving bill and urge you and your colleagues to redouble efforts now that the planting season is upon us. This bill should increase by fully 25 per cent the efficiency of war gardening this year and add millions of dollars worth of food to that which will be raised f. o. b. the kitchen door. A big drive starts March 18 to get a million boys to aid the farmer. This means that the "city farmer" must get all the help you can give him. War gardens are the field kitchens over here which are supplementing the field kitchens over there. Food must follow the flag. Give the war gardener the extra hour of daylight in which to cultivate his back yard or vacant lot and he will raise food equivalent to the ration of 1,000,000 soldiers for six months.

Yours, very truly,

P. S. RIDSDALE, President.

STATEMENT OF A COAL MAN.

PHILADELPHIA, March 14, 1918.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Representatives Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MOORE: I was very much pleased to read in the paper that you had taken up the advocacy of the daylight-saving bill. As a coal man I can assure you that your estimate that there would be a saving of about 1,000,000 tons of coal is conservative. I know of no one measure which would be more beneficial in the saving of coal than this, and, with a great many other people, can not understand why the House of Representatives is still holding up the measure after it has been passed by the Senate. It should go into effect at least not later than April 1, and as there will be some preliminary arrangements to be made before that time this delay on the part of the House seems incomprehensible.

I hope, now that you are an advocate of the measure, that you can have it passed speedily.

Yours, very cordially, SAMUEL HEILNER.

AN AUTHOR ON STANDARD TIME.

Kirk Munroe, the author, now residing in Florida, makes this statement as to the complexity of time adjustments:

In 1883 there were 77 different "times" kept by the railroads of the United States. The resulting confusion was so great that a "time convention" of prominent railroad men was called to devise a remedy. They did this by dividing the United States into four time zones—Eastern, Central, Mountain, and Pacific, each covering 15 degrees of longitude (approximately 900 miles) and representing one hour of time. The meridians of longitude bisecting these zones are, respectively, the seventy-fifth, ninetieth, one hundred and fifth, and one hundred and twentieth. A zone, therefore, covers 7½ degrees of longitude or 450 miles on each side of its bisecting meridian.

Thus the western line of the seventy-fifth meridian zone, dividing eastern from central time, extends due south from Hudson Bay to Habana, Cuba, passing through the cities of Detroit, Mich., Mansfield, Ohio, Ashland, Ky., Bristol, Va., Asheville, N. C., Waycrosse, Ga., and Tampa, Fla.

This simple zone system was hailed as an excellent solution of the difficulty and was readily adopted by the entire country, though as it did not receive official sanction from the Federal Government there was nothing compulsory about it, except in the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and Florida. In 1915 the last-named State so amended its law on the subject as to make the legal time to be adopted optional with its several counties. Being thus left at liberty to use their own discretion in the matter, the several railroads proceeded to use the time best suited to their own convenience without regarding in the least the desires of the general public, and to change from one time to another at such points as best suited them without regard to the established zone lines. The resulting confusion is almost as bad as that existing before the famous "time convention" was held. Thus the zone line between eastern and central time, instead of being straight and making a readily comprehended division, has become as crooked as a rail fence, and communities west of the time line are keeping eastern time, while others lying far east of it are compelled to keep western time, much to their inconvenience and business disadvantage.

The section of the country suffering most in this respect is the peninsula portion of Florida, which, bordering on the Atlantic and lying almost wholly within the eastern zone, is compelled by its railroads to retard its clocks one hour and keep the time of Texas even as far west as El Paso, Oklahoma, Kansas, etc.

The railroads wholly to blame for this unhappy state of affairs are the Atlantic Coast Line, the Seaboard, the Southern, and the Florida East Coast. The first two run on eastern time as far south as Savannah, and there (80 miles east of the zone line) change to central time for the brief balance of their run into Florida. The Southern, running almost due north and south through Columbia, S. C., changes its time from eastern to central at that point. The Florida East Coast Railway, operated entirely far within the eastern zone, uses central time, though at certain points it is located 150 miles east of the zone line marking the division between eastern and central or western time.

During the present year (1916) all Europe, realizing as never before the value of daylight, has set its clocks ahead a whole hour, and if we Americans would keep up with the economic procession of the world, we must take similar action wherever the railroads are stealing our daylight.

On the eastern coast of Florida both Miami and Key West have in the past adopted eastern time and then been compelled by the Florida East Coast Railway to give it up. Many other Florida communities are loud in their dissatisfaction with western time and are most desirous of adopting eastern time in its place.

Yours, truly, KIRK MUNROE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HICKS, Mr. BORLAND, and Mr. THOMAS were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ESCH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, when this proposition was first suggested it came to me with more or less of ridicule. I thought if there was any desire to begin work earlier than was the custom, why not get up earlier and begin it. But in looking into the reasons for the proposal I am persuaded that there is more than sentiment in it. It will not affect the agricultural sections of the country at all, since their rising and retiring are due almost entirely to seasonal conditions. The farmer regards the demands of the seasons rather than customs. The sun rather than the clock is his guide. In the summer time he gets up earlier and begins work earlier than in the winter time. Yet that could not be so in a city where the work is the result of community interest and is done through associations and societies, largely under the law of custom. In centers the population soon learns the demands of the rules of the group. Hours for labor as well as for recreation are fixed by custom. These determine the schedules of trains, the opening and closing of offices, professional and public, the beginning and ending of the business day. The custom of opening the office at 9 o'clock soon assumes the force of law; it would be difficult to change the hour but not to push it ahead by a change of the clock. By the latter method work still begins at 9 by the clock but 8 by the sun. It might end by 4 by the clock but 3 by the sun. We thus change the hour but not the custom.

Earlier rising will give a better product as all must admit who have any experience with the early-morning rising. The mind is brighter and the body more vigorous.

The early closing does not only insure great saving of fuel and light, but it insures a great saving of the afternoon which may be employed in the garden or field for augmenting the food supply. Especially is this true of him who is in indoor work. The open-air work will not only greatly increase the food supply, but it will, by this diversion from indoor to outdoor work prove a great tonic in health to the individual. So I say there is really great value in starting the work an hour earlier in the morning and stopping it an hour earlier in the afternoon, thereby getting more hours for production, thereby losing nothing in the way of time for work, and at the same time saving the time in the afternoon for increase in another line of production that otherwise could not be done if we did not have our earlier hour. This, of course, means little if anything in the country but much in the city. Therefore, it seems to me that the proposal is laid in genuine good sense, and I shall, although coming from a section where it will not affect us much if at all, vote with pleasure for the saving of the extra hour.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if this earth should disappear from among the 2,000,000 stars in the photographic star catalogue of space, and if upon other planets and stars intelligence in some form is searching the infinite depths which we call the sky, it would simply be noted in some language undreamed of by us that another light had gone out; and with it would disappear the brief history and all material traces of mankind.

We are a small planet revolving around a central sun.

The time we take to make the circuit of the sun we call a year, and the time we take to make one revolution we call a day, and the day we divide into minutes and the minutes into seconds.

By these years, days, minutes, and seconds we measure human transactions and human life, and "the days of our years are three score years and ten; and if by reason of strength, they be four score years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off and we fly away."

We have five senses, all of them inferior to those of the lower animals, and they grow dull with the passing years.

Beyond our normal sight and hearing there are telescopic worlds and microscopic worlds and sound worlds, and in the little radius of our senses on this moving sphere we lay premises from which we try to reason into the unknown.

John Fiske, in his Excursions of an Evolutionist, says:

> We have every reason to believe that the great glacial period began 240,000 years ago and came to an end 80,000 years ago, but at the beginning of this period men were living in the valley of the Thames. At the end of it, the men of the River drift had probably become extinct and their place in Europe had been taken and held for ages by the boreal cave men who now in turn were about starting on their long retreat to the Arctic regions.
>
> How long a time before the swarthy Iberian settled in Europe with his dogs and cattle we have no means of deciding; nor can we say when the blue-eyed Aryan began his invasions, though we know this last event must have been very recent—not very long before the dawn of history.
>
> Nor can we tell how long there had been human beings on the earth before the glacial epoch began—but it must have been a great while because even before the close of the Pliocene age they had had time to spread over the earth as far as Portugal in one direction and as far as California in the other. And if we are to take the date of 240,000 years ago for the beginning of the glacial epoch we can hardly allow for the close of the Pliocene age an antiquity of less than 400,000 years.

For centuries "they mowed and babbled till some tongue struck speech and patient fingers framed lettered sound."

EARLY THEORIES.

Long after the dawn of history primitive man believed that the earth was flat; that the sun, moon, and stars were hung in the heavens for purposes of illumination; that the earthquake and the thunder were the literal voice of an angry God, and that comets were balls of fire flung from heaven at an offending world and brought war and pestilence in their train.

The rotundity of the earth dawned upon the early Greek astronomers. Pythagoras (569—470 B. C.) "deduced his system in which the earth revolves in an orbit from fantastic first principles," one of which was that "the circular motion is the most perfect motion."

Plato (born 429 B. C.) proposed to astronomers "the problem of representing the courses of the planets by circular motions."

Aristotle (384—322 B. C.) "summed up the state of astronomical knowledge in his time and held the earth to be fixed in the center of the world."

Eratosthenes (276—196 B. C.) "measured an arc of meridian from Alexandria to Syene (Assuan) and found the difference of latitude by the length of a shadow at noon, summer solstice."

Ptolemy (130 A. D.) "theorised on the planetary motions and held that the earth is fixed in the center of the universe."

The Greek astronomers who believed the earth to be at rest reasoned that if it were revolving things would fly off from it.

But with the decay of ancient civilization the world forgot the learning of the Greeks.

As time went on a system of the universe comprehending heaven and earth and hell, created out of myth, mystery, legend, and story, took shape in human thought and became real.

It culminated in the sixth century in a complete edifice of the universe constructed by the Egyptian monk, Cosmas, in which heaven was above, the earth the ground floor, and hell below. When Dante wrote his Divine Comedy early in the fourteenth century he wrote it in the light of the astronomic and theologic knowledge of his time.

In the view of medieval Europe the earth was flat, bounded on the north by ice and Arctic blasts too cold for life to live in; on the south by desert wastes and boiling seas too hot for life to live in; on the east by far Cathay and swamps of vast extent, and on the west by a "Sea of Darkness"; and the few people who finally began to talk about a possible other side of the world where trees grew downward and rain fell upward were considered by knight, monk, and vassal as mere babblers and dreamers of dreams.

The science of those days was mixed with miracle and prodigy. "It brewed strange ingredients into elixirs of life, searched for the philosopher's stone, and gathered herbs in auspicious phases of the moon for the cure of diseases."

The map of Claudius Ptolemy made in the middle of the second century, and the travels of Marco Polo in Asia represented all that scholars knew and much of what they conjectured concerning the earth's surface down to the voyages of the fifteenth century; but during all that time the theory of the monk, Cosmas, that the earth was flat and stationary was commonly accepted.

For centuries Europe, looking westward across the sea, spoke of it as the "Sea of Darkness" and beyond its mysterious horizon few mariners dared to sail.

By the thirteenth century, however, it had become known that beyond Cathay—that is, Cipango, or Japan—the earth did not extend itself in swamps, but that the shores of eastern Asia were bounded by a sea as were the shores of eastern Europe.

The mariner's compass, discovered in the twelfth century and rejected for nearly a hundred years because it was believed to be the work of the devil, had by the end of the thirteenth century come into general use, and here and there cloistered scholars and student nagivators began to wonder if the sea that washed the shores of western Europe was not the same sea that washed the shores of eastern Asia, and whether it was not possible to sail westward into the east.

Generations "bloomed out, loved and hated, and rustled off, and the rolling and tramping of new generations passed over them."

The earth was torn by wars of spoliation, conquest, and religion; Europe fought back the Moors and Moslems and organized the crusades.

A little later men began to kill one another with gunpowder, and thereafter brute strength had no monopoly.

A little later they learned to print their thoughts on paper, with movable blocks and a printing press, and thereafter there was no monopoly of knowledge by a few.

A little later a man was born near Genoa destined to demonstrate that the "Sea of Darkness" had another shore and to lift the veil from a continent where in the course of time there should be founded under God a nation—"consecrated to liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

COPERNICUS, BRAHE, KEPLER, GALILEO, AND NEWTON.

Man knows now that the earth is round, because he lives around it, has traveled around it, strung cable and telegraph systems around it, and talks around it constantly by wire and by wireless.

But the rotundity of the earth and its habitation on opposite sides, which are now accepted "always everywhere and by all," was for centuries a subject of learned disputation and theological controversy in which the scriptures were constantly invoked against the theory of the Antipodes and punishment was inflicted here and salvation was denied hereafter to those who dared dispute the theological argument.

Nicholas Copernicus, an ecclesiastic born in 1472, investigating the theory of Ptolemy, that the earth was the fixed center of the universe, which had held sway then for 1,600 years, came to the scientific conclusion that not only the earth but all the then known planets revolved around the sun and established the rotation of the earth upon its axis.

This was opposed to the evidence of the senses. For ages it had been argued that if the earth were in motion a wind of great velocity would surround the earth, that bodies thrown upward from the earth would remain behind and that it was clear that if a bird flew up from its nest, it could never return.

Copernicus argued that there could be no such wind as it was believed would result from the earth's rotation, because the air would share the motion of the earth.

He wrote a book called "The Revolution of the Heavenly Bodies," but for 36 years it remained unpublished, because he foresaw the storm its publication would provoke, and feared the consequences to himself. The only copy he ever saw was brought to him on his death bed in 1543.

Three years after the death of Copernicus came Tycho Brahe, whose collection of observations through long years of study of the heavens helped to lay the foundations for the work of Johannes Kepler, said to be the "real founder of modern astronomy."

Contemporary with Kepler was Galileo, born in 1564. He discovered and demonstrated certain laws of motion; one that "the motion of a body will never stop nor vary its speed nor change its direction except by the action of some force"; another that "a light body and a heavy body fall at the same speed, except for the resistance of air"; another, the isochronism of the vibrations of a pendulum, that is "that a pendulum of a given length, has its time of swing independent of the extent of swing."

This pendulum principle in the hands of Huyghens in the middle of the seventeenth century led to the invention of the pendulum clock.

In 1607 Galileo heard that a Dutch spectacle maker had combined a pair of lenses so as to magnify distant objects, and from this suggestion, without having seen this combination of lenses, he evolved a telescope, one of the first turned toward the sky.

His telescope and his heliocentric theory got him into serious trouble, but men with telescopes still continued to scan the sky.

He died on Christmas Day, 1642, and on that same day Sir Isaac Newton, who worked out the law of universal gravitation, was born.

When Newton gave his discovery to the world it was objected that he had substituted gravitation for Providence.

When the work of these men was finished the old conception of the universe was gone, and the question of whether the earth stands still passed forever beyond the stage of controversy to final judgment.

Old religious controversies became "volcanoes burnt out, on the lava and ashes and scoria of which the olive and vine are now growing."

TIME.

Time is a mystery. The time of the earth's rotation or of its circuit round the sun is long or short, as we live it. It may be a too brief happiness or a lingering torture. Some grow old before they have time to be young.

In the "Confessions" of St. Augustine he says:

> What, then, is time? If no one asks me, I know. If I try to explain it to one who asks, I do not know. Yet I say with confidence that I know. But if nothing passes away, there would be no past time. If nothing were to come, there would be no future time. If nothing were, there would be no present time.
>
> Yet these two times, past and future, how can they be when the past is not now and the future is not yet?
> As for the present, if it were always present and did not pass over into the past, it would not be time but eternity.

Past time is not now, future time is not yet, and present time has no duration.

In the universe of eternity there is no rising and setting of suns, no day, no night, no years, no centuries. Sun time is merely local time in its relation to eternity.

Human chronology belongs to this solar system alone and we measure time while the sun shines and throws shadows against a background which we call history.

Conquerors and kings, lawgivers, saints, jesters, scoundrels, geniuses, and charletans, millionaires, and mendicants have come and gone their way in pomp or squalor, out of mystery into mystery, and the sun and the wise, experienced stars look down and give no hint of human destination.

"No philosophy will ever satisfy men which can not throw a plank across the grave."

We are still baffled by the illusive illumination that some call individuality and others call soul.

All our philosophy, all our groping speculation and reasoning leave the mystery of the future as mysterious as ever and yet as imperative as ever.

Bacon says:

> If a man meditate much upon the universal frame of nature, the earth with men upon it—the divineness of the soul excepted—will not seem much other than an ant hill where some ants carry corn and some carry their young and all go to and fro, a little heap of dust.

If the hope of continued conscious existence after the death of the body ever fades out of human thinking, then the light will have gone out of the world; the deepest inspiration to right living will have ended and human existence will have become a meaningless tragedy.

That hope transforms Bacon's ant heap and dignifies human existence. With that hope we journey on to superlative issues.

We may put back the clock or set it ahead or stop it altogether, but time goes on and present time has no duration.

LATITUDE AND LONGITUDE.

The question of "daylight saving," of setting the clock ahead, is not new. It is said that Benjamin Franklin originated the idea, but in 1907 an Englishman named William Willett published a pamphlet on "Waste of Daylight," and since 1916 all the nations of Europe except Russia, Greece, and the Balkan countries have adopted the plan.

The stars enter but little into the consideration of the average man going about his business. They were there when he arrived a short time ago, and they will be there when he goes a short time hence.

The question of whether they were put there by a Supervising Intelligence or were sown in space by chance gives him little concern.

He goes about his business till the undertaker calls, and then his surviving associates trot the horses to the cemetery and hurry back to their business and their little plans for permanence.

He looks upon the "star gazer" as a dreamer disconnected from practical affairs, and yet the map on his office wall, with its lines of latitude and longitude, is the result of centuries of study of the sky.

If he wants to travel by water, he does not speculate on how ships find their way across the sea. He simply finds out the sailing time, engages a room, and goes aboard.

On his voyage he sees a paper posted up from day to day telling where the ship is, and he knows in a general way that the captain or somebody takes observations of the sun at noon, but he does not trouble himself about how it is all done.

To guide a ship swiftly, surely, and safely across the ocean and alongside the wharf of the port of destination is one of the triumphs of human knowledge, and it is only within comparatively recent times that it has been possible.

The transition from sails to steam was only a little while ago. It was not until 1815 that steamboats began to feel their way along the rivers and along the coasts.

The navigator "takes the sun" at noon by a sextant, and the dictionaries define a sextant as "an instrument for measuring the angular distance between two objects—as between a heavenly body and the horizon—by a double reflection from two mirrors, used especially for determining latitude at sea by taking the sun's altitude at noon."

The navigator begins to watch the sun through the sextant near midday and continues till the instant it begins to descend. That is the instant of noon on the ship.

He then compares the height of the sun at noon with certain astronomical tables in his chart room and knows in what latitude the sun reaches that precise height on that particular day in the year.

When he gets his longitude he knows exactly where his ship is, and he gets this by a chronometer.

A marine chronometer is defined as "an accurate timekeeper used for determining a ship's longitude at sea. It is suspended horizontally in gimbals and beats half seconds."

Early unsuccessful efforts were made to so adjust a pendulum clock that it would not be affected by the rolling of a ship at sea, and in 1713, by an act of the English Parliament, upon the recommendation of a committee of which Sir Isaac Newton was chairman, a reward was offered, £20,000, for an instrument that would find the longitude at sea true to half a degree.

John Harrison, of Yorkshire, won the reward after 43 years of study and experiment, but did not receive his final payment until 1764.

A navigator's chronometer is ordinarily set to Greenwich time. The meridian line passing through Greenwich, England, where the British Royal Observatory was established in 1675, is by common consent used as the line from which time and distance, east and west, are reckoned.

For purposes of convenient computation 360 lines of longitude are commonly drawn from pole to pole and, starting from the Greenwich line, are numbered east and west around the world, the line opposite Greenwich, on the other side of the world, of course, being the one hundred and eightieth degree.

Inasmuch as the earth revolves from west to east, and inasmuch as it turns through 360 degrees of longitude in 24 hours, it turns at the rate of 15 degrees an hour. Therefore the time at a point 180 degrees east and west from Greenwich would at the same time be 12 hours later than Greenwich and 12 hours earlier than Greenwich.

For illustration, Samoa and the Fiji Islands are geographically neighbors, but Samoa is nearly 180 degrees west of Greenwich and the Fiji Islands are nearly 180 degrees east of Greenwich, so that when it is Sunday in Samoa it is Monday in the Fiji Islands.

To obviate this difficulty an arbitrary line has been drawn upon the map of the world down through the Pacific near the one hundred and eightieth meridian line, and it has been informally agreed that islands on the east side of this line shall reckon their longitude west from Greenwich and islands on the west side shall reckon their longitude east from Greenwich. This line is known as the International Date Line.

To get the longitude of a ship at sea the navigator, having found the ship's time, compares it with Greenwich time, and if he is sailing east of Greenwich, he knows that the ship's time is earlier than Greenwich time, because the sun is over points east first, and if he is sailing west of Greenwich he knows that the ship's time is later than Greenwich time.

For illustration, if it is noon on a ship in the Atlantic and the chronometer shows that it is 1 o'clock at Greenwich the navigator knows that his ship is 15° west of Greenwich, since 15° of longitude equal one hour of time.

SETTING A WATCH.

We get our standards of time from the study of the stars. To the man on the street the setting of his watch is a trifling thing, but to set a watch or a clock involves the use of the most delicate machinery of this mechanical age, machinery which derives its accuracy from the stars in their courses.

Obelisks, sundials, and water clocks were used to measure time before the Byzantines learned the art of glass blowing, and after that sand glasses were used on land and sea.

To know the speed of a ship in the early days of navigation a piece of wood, called "the log," shaped to resist being dragged through the water was tied to the end of a cord with knots on it, spaced with arithmetical precision, and as the cord slid through the sailor's fingers the time between knots was measured by the sand glass, and these words "knot" and "log" still survive in the language of the sea.

Now, if your watch runs down you set it by the nearest watch or clock. If you want to be accurate, you set it by a jeweler's "regulator." But the "regulator" varies a little from day to day so that the sum of its variations in a week may be appreciable and the "regulator" must in turn be regulated by the astronomical clock.

Every observatory has an astronomical clock which is made as perfect as human skill can make it.

It must be mounted upon a firm foundation, subject as little as possible to vibration, change of temperature, and barometric pressure.

But when made as perfect as possible, it has to be set and regulated by observation of the stars.

For these observations a transit is necessary. The transit is a telescope, the tube of which is firmly attached at right angles to a horizontal axis the ends of which point east and west, so that the telescope may be so rotated as to follow a line along the sky from north to south known as the astronomical meridian.

Across the field of view of the telescope fine threads are mounted so as to form a minute cross.

From astronomical observations for a hundred and fifty years astronomers have compiled tables by which they know exactly when each tabulated star is on the astronomical meridian line.

To know, then, whether the astronomical clock is right it is necessary to check a star by the cross in the telescope at the exact instant it crosses the astronomical meridian line.

If the clock time of crossing tallies with the star time of crossing, the clock is right. If not, it is set accordingly.

This star time regulates earth time. Exactly at noon every day time is ticked by telegraph all over the country.

STANDARD TIME.

There is another kind of time called "standard" or railroad time, which was put in operation in the United States by the railroads in 1883, and has since been generally adopted throughout the world.

Since the sun apparently travels from east to west it is obvious that local time differs widely throughout the country.

For illustration, before standard time was adopted trains leaving New York on New York time arrived in Buffalo by New York time, which was different from Buffalo time; left Buffalo by Buffalo time and arrived in Chicago by Buffalo time, which was different from Chicago time, and so on across the continent.

Railroad companies had the custom of running their trains by the time of the chief town along a given line, so that when several different lines entered a town the town had several different kinds of time.

By the "standard" time system the whole country, including Alaska, is divided into five time zones 15 degrees wide east and west, so arranged that the middle meridian lines of the zones from east to west are, respectively, 75, 90, 195, and 120 degrees west from Greenwich, and that of Alaska is 150 degrees west from Greenwich. The time of each meridian line is the time of the whole zone.

The time at each of these meridian lines and of the zone it governs is therefore earlier than Greenwich time by even hours. For illustration, since 15 degrees make an hour, the 75-degree line is 5 hours earlier than Greenwich, the 90-degree line 6 hours, and so on across the continent.

This bill, with amendments recommended by the committee, proposes by law to standardize the time of the United States and to advance the present "railroad time" one hour during a period of seven months in each year, beginning at 2 o'clock a. m. on the last Sunday in March, and ending at 2 o'clock a. m. on the last Sunday in October.

But whether we call it sun time, star time, or standard time, it is only man's method of trying to measure the flight of the future which is not yet through the portals of the present, which has no duration.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. At the conclusion of one hour, is it in order for another Member to ask for recognition to speak on the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The House ordered the hour extended by 20 minutes and at the end the previous question considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. LONDON. There was such a request, Mr. Speaker, but I was not aware that the House had agreed to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it was objected to. If the gentleman gets the floor he is entitled to an hour.

Mr. LONDON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. If I ask to be recognized and I get one hour, can I speak five minutes and then yield the rest of the time?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the gentleman has not yet got his hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has made it necessary for me to refer to the little personal matter mentioned by him that, unexplained, might cause you to think that I am getting old. The gentleman wanted to know why we did not move the clock forward two hours instead of one? We can, but it is not needed. The gentleman from Arkansas when he came to be sworn in as a Member lacked two hours of being 25 years old; he lacked two hours of the constitutional age. We moved the clock ahead two hours in order that he might be sworn in. That is why we happen to have him here to-day. [Laughter.] So you see that when it is necessary to fool ourselves, that the hands of the clock be set forward, we can do so.

Now, outside of this little pleasantry, I want to say that the Senate bill provided that the clock should be advanced one hour on the last Sunday in April and retarded one hour on the last Sunday in September. The House amended the bill so as to provide that the clock should be set forward one hour on the last Sunday in March and retarded one hour on the last Sunday in October, so as to make the time included seven months instead of five. The reason was that more coal is consumed in March and October than in any two months included in the Senate bill. The fuel situation was such that there was an appeal to make the bill applicable to 7 months out of the 12 months.

That is how these amendments came to be made. It is impossible in a few minutes to reply to all the arguments and objections that have been made to the bill, but gentlemen from the country ought to know that the country people, the farmers, will get up no sooner and go to bed no later. The trouble with the country farmer is that when he goes to town where such gentlemen as my friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] live, he has to wait for these luxurious gentlemen to get up before he can sell them his eggs and butter and vegetables so he can go back to his farm. This will force these gentlemen to get up an hour sooner. The farmer will get into town and sell his barter and buy the things he needs and get back and get to work an hour earlier in the morning. It is on account of the farmer that I am in favor of this bill and not these luxurious lawyers who do not want to go to bed until 2 o'clock in the morning and not get up before 10 o'clock in the day. Another thing we want is that the saloons and other kind of houses that keep late hours close, at least on Saturday night, one hour sooner——

Mr. KING. And open one hour earlier in the morning.

Mr. SIMS. No, indeed; the morning following Saturday is Sunday morning. And this they will have to do, because this will make the law as to closing apply with penalty attached. But my friend from Arkansas need not observe this law, because he will not have to suffer from any penalty for the violation of it, as he is in no business required to close any earlier. He was so young when he came here that naturally his mind is yet a little slower as to legislative matters than if he had been of constitutional age when he reached this body.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. WINGO. When I lived in Tennessee I found that the farmers did not waste any time on a man who was too lazy to set his alarm clock to get up an hour earlier. I do not think they have enough energy to buy a clock.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman must know that the people everywhere else are not as industrious as in the district I represent and where he once lived. The farmers of my district need no alarm clocks to wake them in the morning. A request for the passage of this bill has come from the President of the United States, from the Secretary of the Treasury, from the Food Administration, from the Fuel Administration, and Ambassador Sharp, in France, sent a cablegram to explain how important it is, and that has been transmitted to me by the Secretary of State, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a few of the letters, resolutions, and communications in favor of this bill. The United States Chamber of Commerce and a great number of industrial organizations over the whole country favor this bill, and no one that I know of is opposed to the bill except Members of the House, who do not seem to know what the sentiment of the country is regarding this measure and without having given the bill any real study treat it as a trivial and unimportant matter:

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS,
Washington, January 18, 1918.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Note the attached from Mr. Marks. I think this is a very important matter. If you think it could be put through on the railroad bill without delaying it or causing controversy, I am willing. On the other hand, I think this daylight-saving bill is of sufficient importance to justify a special rule so as to insure its immediate consideration in the House. The latter I would strongly urge.

Cordially, yours,

W. G. MCADOO.

JANUARY 18, 1918.

Hon. W. G. MCADOO,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am just in receipt of your letter of the 18th inclosing a letter from Hon. Marcus M. Marks, with reference to the daylight-saving bill. I have just written Mr. Marks a letter in reply to one he has written me suggesting that the daylight-saving bill be attached as an amendment to the railroad legislation. I have repeatedly assured Mr. Marks that the daylight-saving bill was going to be considered by the committee and acted on at an early date; that the same has been made a part of the war legislation; that it is to have preferential consideration, but that I did not think it wise or prudent to attempt to amend the railroad bill by attaching it to that bill. If we open the door for amendments of this kind nobody knows where it will end. I do not think that if there is any objection to the consideration of the daylight-saving bill when reported to the House that there would be a particle of trouble in getting a rule to have it considered on its merits. I have been strongly in favor of the bill ever since it was introduced, and did all I possibly could to get Judge ADAMSON to agree to act on it last session, as the President well knows as we had quite a lengthy correspondence concerning it. One or more bills besides this one are being urged as proper amendments to the railroad bill. My own judgment is that we should have just as little legislation or legislative provisions in the railroad bill as is possible to have, and that these provisions should apply exclusively to the operation of railroads while they are in your hands.

This is the way this matter strikes me, and as it is not at all necessary to attach the daylight-saving bill to the railroad bill in order to secure its consideration and passage, I can not think it wise to attempt it.

Very sincerely, yours,

T. W. SIMS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 12, 1918.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,
Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith for your committee's information in connection with bills on the subject now before it a copy of a telegram from the American ambassador at Paris, wherein he states that the daylight-saving regulations which have been in operation in France for two successive seasons have demonstrated the wisdom of the plan, and expresses the hope that there will be no opposition in Congress to the enactment of a similar law in the United States.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

PARIS, February 8, 1918.

SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington:

Noticing in the American press the legislation providing for daylight saving during the summer months is now pending, may I express the hope that there will be no opposition to such a measure. The wisdom of this regulation in France has been amply demonstrated through its operation for two successive seasons. I believe it is one of a number of common-sense and practicable economies brought out by the exigencies of the war which should remain permanently as a part of our national economic life.

UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1918.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SIMS: I hardly think that it will become necessary to secure any additional support on the general principle involved in the bill for daylight saving. However, I am only too pleased to give my indorsement to the effectiveness of similar legislation as carried out in Europe. There is no doubt that in the coming spring and summer the additional food production which the Government is desirous of securing will be very largely stimulated by the additional period of daylight which would be given to those town workers who interest themselves in gardening and whose production is of very real importance at this time. I wish you every success in your efforts to carry this excellent bill, which has already been passed by the Senate, through the House.

Faithfully, yours,

HERBERT HOOVER.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Washington, December 29, 1917.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing a memorandum, the substance of which was contained in the letter I sent to the President a short time ago.

I understand this bill is to come before your committee for a hearing very shortly. Also that you strongly favor the bill. I am in hopes that the hearing will make it possible for a speedy acceptance by Congress of this measure.

If there is anything that we can do to further the bill I should be glad to know.

Very truly, yours,

EDWARD N. HURLEY, President.

The daylight-saving movement has proven a success in 12 of the largest countries of Europe, in that it has resulted in material economies in the use of coal and artificial light and in its benefits to the workers of the nation.

The Senate recently passed a similar daylight-saving act for this country, and the measure is to come before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at the next session of Congress.

The daylight-saving plan, if put into operation in this country for the period of April 1 to October 1, would not only result in economies for our people but would materially help the shipbuilder. Practically all "outside" work on ships is dependent upon daylight. Under our present system of time workers begin their work usually at 7 o'clock in the morning and leave at 5 o'clock. This means a loss of an hour of daylight during certain months of the year. Under the daylight-saving system this hour would be gained and more work produced, for in effect the hours of work would be 6 a. m. to 4 p. m.

The result would be increased productivity, less danger from accident, and economy. If the President could urge upon Congress to consider the daylight-saving measure in view of the experience of Europe and our own necessities the shipbuilders and workers of the country would be grateful.

IN THE SENATE, May 16, 1917.

Whereas enemy Governments have passed laws advancing the time one hour during the long summer days for the purpose of conserving their resources and other belligerents have done likewise as a measure of economic war necessity: Therefore

Resolved (if the House concur), That the General Assembly of Pennsylvania indorses the efforts of the business interests now being made to secure the passage by the Congress of the United States of legislation known as daylight saving to advance the standard time one hour during the summer months.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Pennsylvania.

I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania on May 16, 1917.

Resolutions adopted by Norfolk-Tidewater Association of Credit Men.

Whereas a demand has been made to advance the time throughout the country one hour from the last day of April to the last day of September; and

Whereas it has been shown that many European countries which adopted the plan as a war measure have derived such benefits in the conservation and economy of gas, electricity, coal, and oil that it may become a permanent law with them; and

Whereas it is estimated that the extra hour of daylight will aid production in all lines and save approximately $50,000,000 in lighting bills and 1,000,000 tons of fuel during that period as well as improve the health of the Nation: Be it

Resolved, That this meeting of the Norfolk-Tidewater Association of Credit Men go on record as favoring national legislation to carry out this plan.

THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
New York, February 2, 1918.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,
House of Representaives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish again to urge upon you favorable action by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce upon Senate bill 1854, to save daylight, which bill, as you doubtless are aware, passed the Senate June 27, 1917.

The arguments in favor of this measure are convincingly stated in Senate report 46, and we understand that the bill has the support of the President.

On account of the present coal situation and the possibility of saving coal through the curtailment of light during working hours, it is particularly desirable that the bill become law at the earliest possible moment. The purpose of the bill is strongly approved by the general sentiment of the country and particularly by business and manufacturing interests, and we hope that you will lend your influence to promote its speedy passage.

Yours, very truly,

THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
By S. C. MEAD, Secretary.

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1918.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIMS: I understand that the so-called daylight saving bill will be up for discussion in your committee at an early date.

The experience of England and France has convinced me that the change of time provided in this bill would save the United States a very large amount of fuel in the course of a year. I believe that an estimate of 800,000 to 1,000,000 tons direct saving in coal would not be excessive.

As Fuel Administrator I should be much gratified by such favorable action on the part of your committee as would place this bill on the statute books in time to make the saving effective this year.

Very truly, yours,

H. A. GARFIELD,
Fuel Administrator.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE SIMS: As you may be interested in the period during which England will utilize daylight saving this year, we inclose, on behalf of Mr. A. Lincoln Filene, chairman of our committee on daylight saving, an excerpt from a short discussion which occurred in the House of Commons on January 17, 1918.

Very truly, yours,

ELLIOT H. GOODWIN, Secretary.

"SUMMER TIME."

[Oral answers, Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, Jan. 17, 1918, p. 478.]

25. Mr. Gilbert asked the home secretary if it is the intention of the Government to put into force summer time during the present year; and if so, in view of the early date of the Easter holidays this year, will he consider whether the alteration can be made from March 25 and also continued until the first week in October, so that the country can have this benefit as long as possible?

Sir G. CAVE. The experience of the second year of summer time has confirmed the conclusions based on the first year's working of the scheme, and I think it will be in accordance with the general wish that summer time should be continued. As regards the period during which it shall be put in force, the honorable member will recollect that the question was investigated after the first year by a departmental committee, which recommended the period from the second Sunday in April to the third Sunday in September. This recommendation was adopted by the Government last year. No decision has yet been taken as regards this year, and I can only say that the question of period will be carefully considered before the order is made.

PERIODICAL PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
New York, January 29, 1918.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I am pleased to inform you that at the last meeting of the Periodical Publishers' Association, held on January 23, the following resolutions were adopted in reference to the Calder daylight-saving bill:

"Whereas 12 European countries, including England, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, Portugal, Holland, Russia, Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, have adopted daylight saving as a war-economy measure with satisfactory results; and

"Whereas the present coal situation accentuates the advantage of a saving of 1,000,000 tons of coal which would be one of the annual results of the adoption of this measure; and

"Whereas the saving in lighting bills, stimulation of farm gardening and of healthful daylight sports, the substitution of an hour's labor in the cool morning in place of the hot afternoon, and furthermore, uniformity of our time with Europe's, are all economies and advantages which will follow the adoption of the daylight-saving bill: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Periodical Publishers' Association of America, indorse the movement of the National Daylight Saving Association to turn the clocks of this country forward one hour on the last Sunday of April and back again on the last Sunday in September.

"Resolved, That we urge Congress to adopt as a war-emergency measure the Calder daylight-saving bill, already unanimously passed by the United States Senate, where it was introduced in conformity with the request of the National Daylight Saving Association."

Very truly, yours,

JOHN ADAMS THAYER,
Executive Secretary.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1918.

Hon. THETUS W. SIMS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE SIMS: In order that you may have before you the position of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in advocacy of legislation which will establish daylight saving, I beg to submit a memorandum in which we have attempted to place in somewhat summary form our reasons for hoping that legislation will be enacted without delay

Prof. Robert W. Willson, of Harvard University, has prepared rather elaborate statistical data, which will indicate by hour and minute the results of daylight saving in each important community of the country. This data has been sent to the printer, and copies will be forwarded to you in the very near future.

Very truly, yours,

A. LINCOLN FILENE,
Chairman Executive Committee on Daylight Saving of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

DAYLIGHT SAVING—ITS ADVANTAGES—USE AS A WAR MEASURE—FUEL CONSERVATION—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION.

[Statement presented to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives by the Executive Committee on Daylight Saving of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.]

I. Advantages of daylight saving.

A. MILITARY.

1. The training of the national forces will be expedited, and the practice of Home Guards and similar organizations, the members of which have other regular occupations, will be greatly facilitated.
2. Production would be increased in the shipyards of the country.
3. The production in all plants which are making materials for military use and for building ships would be increased, and the conditions of work for their employees would be improved.

B. ECONOMY.

1. There will be the greatest of all savings—that of human materials—as pointed out below.
2. Immediate saving in form of reduction of expense for light and heat.
3. Ultimate saving in the conservation of coal and other sources of light and heat.
4. Possible reduction in the cost of living of those who like to work in their gardens, utilizing the extra outdoor hour for this purpose.

C. HEALTH, MORALS, AND SOCIAL WELFARE.

1. One hour more for outdoor recreation. Recreation is a national asset, an immense force for health and moral well-being.
2. Working mothers and fathers obtain an extra hour for outdoor play with their children, both summer and winter.
3. One hour less for bad lights in tenements.
4. Lessened eyestrain for workers and school children due to the use of artificial light.
5. Smaller risk of accident in industrial establishments because there will be a light hour instead of a dark one at the end of the working day at the time of greatest fatigue and most frequent accidents.
6. Lessened risk of accident due to transportation and traffic conditions, because the afternoon rush will fall in daylight instead of darkness.
7. Working girls will be on the way home in daylight instead of in the dark in winter.
8. Our last hour of sleep will be sounder and more beneficial than it is under present conditions, because there will be less light.

D. EFFICIENCY.

1. General efficiency will, of course, be increased by any improvement in the health, morals, and social welfare of the workers and others.
2. In summer a cool hour in the morning is substituted for a hot one in the afternoon.
3. In winter a light hour at the end of the day is substituted for a dark one. This is especially valuable coming as it does at the time of greatest fatigue and is peculiarly valuable in some industries where accurate eyesight is essential.
4. Efficiency is lowest in the later afternoon, the time when accidents are most frequent.

II. The daylight-saving plan as a war measure.

1. The daylight-saving plan was adopted as a war measure by Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Austria, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Portugal, Australia, Iceland.

The year 1916 was the first year of operation of the plan in all but the last two countries, which adopted the plan in 1917.

A committee of the British House of Commons, which made a preliminary study of the question in 1908 and 1909, reported favorably a daylight-saving bill, stating the results would be:

"To promote the greater use of daylight for recreative purposes.

"To lessen the use of houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

"To facilitate the training of the territorial force.

"To benefit the physique, general health, and welfare of all classes of the community.

"To reduce the industrial, commercial, and domestic expenditure on artificial light.

"That the object of the bill, which is desirable and would benefit the community, can not be attained without legislation.

"And that an alteration of the clock of one hour in April and a similar alteration of one hour in September is the best mode of attaining the object of the bill."

Reasons why daylight saving was adopted as a war measure.

A. Economy in consumption of coal, oil, gas, light, etc.

ENGLAND.

1. The savings in the use of artificial light and fuel to produce this in England were estimated as $2,500,000 for the summer months alone. (Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, vol. 82, No. 39, p. 304.)

2. Mr. Hanbury Thomas, of the Sheffield United Gas Co., has suggested that a general estimate for the whole country can be arrived at from the figures of actual saving in coal given in the replies from those undertakings who use coal and no other fuel on the following plan: The amount of coal stated by such undertakings (28 in number) to have been saved as a direct result of summer time works out in the aggregate at 1.449 per cent of the total annual quantity carbonized by them. The total quantity of coal used by all gas undertakings in the United Kingdom in 1915 was, in round figures, 18,000,000 tons. Reckoning 1.449 per cent of those figures, therefore, the saving in coal affected by gas undertakings in the United Kingdom as a result of the four and a half months of summer time may be put at about 260,000 tons.

Further, applying the same percentage to the total annual sum spent by consumers on gas (reckoned on the total annual sales of gas undertakings at 3s. per 1,000 cubic feet) the saving in expenditures to consumers works out at about £475,000.

These estimates can not, of course, be regarded as anything but conjectural; but they represent the best that can be done with the figures, and are not perhaps very far wide of the mark. (Report, Summer Time Committee, England, Feb. 1917, p. 12.)

3. The parliamentary committee heard from over 80 municipal electrical light undertakings, from 50 to 60 private companies, and from 11 electric power companies.

The estimates of the reduction in consumption of electric light vary very widely, from 1.25 per cent in one case to 55 per cent.

The returns of the power companies give a mean reduction of 20 per cent for lighting purposes.

Thirty-eight private companies furnished figures giving an estimate of reduction varying from 10 to 41 per cent, the mean for the 38 being 23 per cent.

Sixty-four municipal undertakings give a mean reduction of 18.3 per cent in units used for lighting. (Report Summer Time Committee, England, Feb. 1917, p. 10.)

4. According to E. Houghton Fry, secretary committee for regulation of petroleum supplies, the economy affected by the daylight-saving act in consumption of illuminating oils in England was 2¼ per cent of the consumption for the year, i. e., about 11,500 tons.

"This seems to be a very modest proportion, but it should be remembered that 11,500 tons represents two journeys by an oil tanker, which would occupy approximately four months, and this saving, therefore, can by no means be regarded as negligible. In fact, owing to the shortage that is at present being experienced in these vessels the result is a very welcome one."

5. Mr. Herbert Samuel, in the House of Commons, May 8, 1916, said:

"The Government would not have dreamt of favoring this measure or of inviting the House to consider it unless it had reason to think that it was essentially advantageous for war purposes.

"The question of our coal supply is one which is giving us serious concern.

"We are casting about in every direction for means to increase our coal supplies, and when a proposal is made which, we believe, and indeed are convinced, would lead to a large economy of certainly many hundreds of thousands of tons of coal in the course of a year, we can not regard that as a matter of indifference."

6. The question was first brought to notice by the expert committee appointed to advise the Government on the disposal of the coal output.

This central committee for the disposal of coal unanimously passed a resolution urging the Government to adopt the daylight-saving plan in order to conserve the coal resources of the nation.

7. The board of trade found it necessary to urge upon all gas and electric light companies a reduction in their consumption of coal.

8. The railway executive committee managing the railways on behalf of the Government favored the proposal.

(Parliamentary debates, House of Commons, May 8, 1916, p. 345.)

FRANCE.

[From summary, report of M. Mallavalle (deputé), on behalf Commission de l'Enseignment et des Beaux Arts, on bill for renewal of summer time in 1917 and subsequent years.]

1. The committee record two sets of estimates of the total saving in coal for the whole country as follows:

(1) The total quantity of coal consumed by gas undertakings in France annually being put at 5,000,000 tons and by electrical undertakings at 2,000,000—7,000,000 tons in all—an economy of 10 per cent on this amount (which the committee think it fair to take as result of summer time) gives about 60,000 tons over one month, 200,000 tons over three and one-half months (length of summer-time period in France in 1916), 360,000 tons over six months, 410,000 tons over seven months.

If a 15 per cent economy is reckoned, the savings are estimated at about 87,500 tons over one month, 306,000 tons over three and one-half months, 525,000 tons over six months, 612,000 tons over seven months.

Reckoning a mean between these two calculations the saving over six months is put at 442,500 tons and over seven months at 511,000 tons; representing a saving in cost (estimating £1,750,000) and 51,000,000 (£2,030,000), respectively; "chiffres moyens qui pourraient approcher davantage de la verite."

2. The director of inventions affecting the national defense after studying figures of output of gas during the periods preceding and following the introduction of summer time and the restoration of normal time concluded that the saving in coal or gas light might be put at 1 kilogram (somewhat over 2 pounds) per persons, or 1 ton for each 1,000 persons per month.

There are said to be 18,000,000 persons in France "eclaires par le gaz," so that the economy of coal on this basis would amount to 18,000 tons per month, or more than 200,000 over the whole year.

The figure for electricity undertakings is estimated as 100,000, giving a total of 300,000 tons (30,000,000 francs, or £1,190,000) for gas and electricity combined. Half this amount would be saved for the summer-time period.

3. At the Calais docks there was an increase in unloading capacity of 250 tons each day of summer.

4. At Marseilles it was found possible to deal with an extra quantity of goods estimated at between 12,000 and 31,000 tons from July to September (2¼ per cent to 4 per cent of the total tonnage unloaded).

GERMANY.

The municipal gas works at Berlin reported a decrease during May and June, 1916, of 508,500 cubic meters in spite of the fact that 18,000 new gas meters were put up during the first six months of 1916, and the records from January to April showed an increase of 2.4 million cubic meters output of gas as compared with 1915.

The other countries of Europe are investigating the results of last year's operation of the daylight-saving plan. (Report English Commission, p. 17.)

III. Daylight saving as a war measure in the United States.

A. THE FOOD PROBLEM.

1. This country is facing a very serious food problem the solution of which, in part at least, lies in increased, intensive cultivation of the soil. Most agricultural operations must cease at sunset.

2. The daylight-saving plan offers opportunity to over 20,000,000 workers engaged in trade, transportation, and other pursuits outside the field of agriculture for an extra hour of daylight after their workday is over for work on the land.

The United States Food Administrator, Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, writing on February 2, 1918, says:

"In the coming spring and summer the additional food production which the Government is desirous of securing will be very largely stimulated by the additional daylight which will be given to those town workers whose interest in gardening and whose production are of great interest to the Government."

Prof. Y. N. Carver, Harvard University, and former Chief of the Rural Organization Service of the United States Government, says:

"It would be a great help to the movement for the increase of the production of food if workingmen had an extra hour of daylight in the evening for work in their gardens. An hour's work a day in a garden, if wisely directed, will produce an amazing amount of food.

"I believe this to be of the utmost importance. Unless something unforeseen happens, the world is going to experience the greatest food shortage within the next year that it has known since the Napoleonic wars. The chances are that there will be many hungry people in our large cities before another winter is over, not because there is not enough work for them to do, not because money wages will not be high, but because food will be hard to get at any price. Anything which will enable workingmen to produce a part of their own food is, therefore, of the utmost importance."

B. CONSERVATION OF COAL AND OTHER MATERIAL RESOURCES.

1. There is no doubt but that this country will achieve the savings that the European nations have experienced.

In Section IV of this statement will be found a very conservative estimate of the savings in coal which may be expected from daylight saving.

IV. Fuel saving to be expected from daylight saving.

If daylight saving were adopted in the United States through act of Congress a very important saving in consumption of fuel, especially of coal, would result. What the total saving of coal would be is very difficult to estimate, but it would apparently exceed 1,500,000 tons a year, even if daylight saving were in effect only for the shortest period that has been suggested and at a time of year when there is least need for artificial heat and light. The saving would occur in both direct and indirect ways.

DIRECT SAVING.

Daylight saving contemplates increased utilization of natural light through better adjustment of the active day for the greater part of the population to the hours during which artificial light is not generally required. Coal enters into artificial light mainly through development of electric energy and through production of gas, both by carbonization and in use under boilers and retorts.

The amount of coal that will be saved if the clock is moved ahead one hour will differ with the period during which this method of daylight saving is used. Calculations computed for different periods, based upon actual British experience in the summer of 1916, and modified by allowances for differences in latitude, etc., give the following savings in coal for the United States:

(1) Saving of 150 hours of a yearly average of 1,320 per year requiring artificial illumination in the United States (i. e., by daylight saving between second Sunday in April and last Sunday in September, according to the Calder bill (S. 1854) now before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce):

	Tons coal.
In electricity for lighting	660,000
In gas for lighting	144,000
	804,000

(2) Saving of 190 hours from the yearly average (i. e., with clocks moved ahead 1 hour between Apr. 1 and Nov. 30):

	Tons coal.
In electricity for lighting	836,000
In gas for lighting	183,300
	1,019,000

(3) Saving of 198 hours from the yearly average (i. e., with clocks advanced 1 hour throughout year):

	Tons coal.
In electricity for lighting	871,000
In gas for lighting	190,000
	1,061,000

The saving in coal used for these purposes could be represented approximately by the following percentages:

(1) With saving of 150 hours:
Amount of coal used for lighting through gas and electricity, approximately	tons	15,750,000
Amount saved	do	804,000
Percentage saved		5
(2) With saving of 190 hours:
Amount of coal used for lighting through gas and electricity, approximately	tons	15,750,000
Amount saved	do	1,019,000
Percentage saved		6.5
(3) With saving of 198 hours:
Amount of coal used for lighting through gas and electricity, approximately	tons	15,750,000
Amount saved	do	1,061,000
Percentage saved		6.6

THESE ESTIMATES CONSERVATIVE.

Any estimate for the whole territory of the United States, such as has been made above, must proceed upon many assumptions and estimates. That the estimates which are presented are conservative appears from several circumstances. For instance, actual British experience in the summer of 1916 demonstrated that the electric current used during the period of daylight saving was reduced by percentages that ranged from 1½ to 55, and the amount of gas used was reduced by percentages as low as 2 but as high as 26. The figures do not include the savings in coal which would be obtained at "isolated" plants and at the plants of electric railways which sell power for lighting. Again, the estimate has been made on a basis which assumes that the use of electric energy and gas for lighting is spread evenly over the country, whereas, as a matter of fact, the census report for 1912 showed that out of a total of 76,000,000 incandescent lights wired for service by municipal and commercial central stations 57,000,000 were in the New England, Middle Atlantic, and North Central States; in other words, were in the part of the country where, because of latitude, the advantages of daylight saving will be most striking.

The estimate for the results if daylight saving is used throughout the year is especially conservative, since it includes no estimate for the saving which would result throughout two winter months, when, in effect, a morning hour with very moderate use of artificial light would be substituted for an evening hour of maximum artificial illumination. The saving of coal obtained in this way can not be estimated very accurately, but it apparently would exceed 300,000 tons.

INDIRECT SAVING.

The saving of coal through substitution of a morning hour of moderate artificial illumination for an evening hour of maximum use of electricity and gas for lights illustrates ways in which very important savings in coal would be obtained.

Reduction of the peak load for central power stations would have very important results. To illustrate the importance of this item the situation of the Commonwealth Edison Co., of Chicago, which distributes approximately one-eighteenth of the country's total electric energy, may be taken. The peak load of this company is needed for no more than one and one-half hours a day. The average load is less than 50 per cent of the peak. The investment in equipment to produce the peak is upward of one-fourth of the whole and equals at least $25,000,000; the cost of carrying this equipment is $3,250,000 a year. At Rochester, N. Y., one-third of the investment is said to be necessary to care for the peak, at a cost per customer per year of $60. Daylight saving would flatten the peak, since at the seasons when the yearly peak is now attained (because the greatest demand for electric transportation and the maximum use of electric light come at the same hour) daylight saving would reduce the requirements of power for lighting and would at the same time place the greatest demand for electric transportation further within the hours of natural light; in other words, daylight saving would tend to separate the two factors the concurrence of which now causes great investment and large use of coal, and at the same time would materially reduce one of those factors. The benefits would be twofold—(1) saving of coal in an amount which can not be accurately estimated, but which would reach into the hundreds of thousands of tons, and (2) postponement of new investments in equipment to carry the peak of the load.

This postponement of new investments will occur at a time when it is of the highest public interest to avoid all new financing of private enterprise that is possible. The new investment otherwise necessary may again be illustrated through the situation of the Commonwealth Edison Co. In 1916 it had a generating capacity of 360,000 kilowatts, at the end of 1917 it had increased this to 452,000, and according to plans made in 1917 it will have raised it to 600,000 by the end of 1919.

In the use of coal for domestic purposes daylight saving, if practiced during eight or more months, will cause real economies, although there are such great diversities in this use that the saving of coal can not be estimated very accurately. The saving would occur during the cooler months when, in effect, a morning hour when relatively little heat is used in residences would be substituted for an evening hour when under present conditions the use of artificial heat in residences is at its maximum. That the saving would be considerable is apparent from the fact that, according to the figures of the Geological Survey for 1915, at least 60,000,000 tons of bituminous coal will be used this year for heating residences.

Daylight saving will have its effect, too, upon some other problems regarding coal. For example, it will make it easier to persuade small electric stations throughout the country to decrease their "all-night" service and save coal proportionately. It would create a public sentiment which would insist upon needless lighting by municipalities being eliminated, and would lead each private user of electric lights to reduce the amount of light he uses to his actual requirements, thus reducing extravagance in electric energy. The public point of view created by daylight saving will make easier adjustment of such question as the legitimacy under present conditions of advertising by electric signs, illumination of "white ways," etc.

A. LINCOLN FILENE,
Chairman Executive Committee on Daylight Saving of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and committee amendments to final passage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The rule which was adopted by the committee provided for the consideration to Senate bill 1854 under the general rules of the House. This bill that is presented for consideration contains several committee amendments. Those amendments have not been presented as yet for action by any Member of the House. It is the general rule, if I am not mistaken, that a bill when presented to the House by a report is considered as it is introduced and requires some formal action on the part of some Member of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. What is the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. STAFFORD. My inquiry is whether it is not necessary for the gentleman to move to amend as his committee directed him?

The SPEAKER. No. The universal practice is if the bill is read and the amendments are read they are supposed to be pending. I do not remember during the whole time I have been here to have ever seen it done in any other way. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 4, strike out the word "April" and insert the word "March."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 6, strike out the word "September" and insert the word "October."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, strike out the word "April" and insert the word "March."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the word "September" and insert the word "October."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 24 and 25, strike out section 5.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 1, strike out the figure "6" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "5."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. The previous question having been ordered, that shuts off all amendments except the committee amendment?

The SPEAKER. Yes; all debate.

Mr. WINGO. No amendment would be in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. No. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 253, nays 40, answered "present" 6, not voting 133, as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 16, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thee earnestly, we trust with a passionate desire to know Thy will, that we may have a clear conception of the duties of this hour, that we may be the elect of God for service sent under Thine own direction, inspired by Thy Holy Spirit to accomplish Thy great purpose in this Nation and in the world. Call us to Thyself in the service of humanity and fit us for this divine enterprise. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to state by way of personal explanation that yesterday when the votes were taken which appear on pages 3546 and 3547 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I was necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida has called attention to the fact that on yesterday when he was necessarily absent two votes were taken. I am paired with that Senator and did not notice that the Senator was absent from the Chamber, having observed him in the Chamber a little while before I voted. It was an oversight on my part, which I regret.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and wish to have noted in the RECORD several petitions from South Carolina colleges, including the State Normal and Industrial College at Rock Hill, known as Winthrop College; and one from other women of the State, asking me to vote for the woman-suffrage amendment.

Of course they did not expect me to comply with their request, knowing my attitude on the question. I think the women will get the vote in time, but it is not a question for the National Government to decide and any interference in Washington in regard to the ballot is contrary to my ideas of constitutionality.

I would like to have the number of ladies signing these petitions counted and printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the request of the Senator from South Carolina will be complied with.

The petitions are as follows:

Petition signed by 16 women of Richland County, S. C.;

Petition signed by 24 teachers and pupils of Anderson Woman College, South Carolina;

Petition signed by 17 teachers of Converse College, South Carolina;

Petition signed by 202 teachers and pupils of Coker College, South Carolina; and Petition signed by 877 teachers and pupils of Winthrop College, South Carolina.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the American Institute of Architects, of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the presentation and erection in prominent places in the capitals of one or more of the nations now allies of the United States replicas of Barnard's statue of Abraham Lincoln, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate passed the bill (S. 3799) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. At the time the bill was under consideration I was in attendance at a session of the Judiciary Committee. Some amendments ought to have been made to the bill in consequence of the death of some of the beneficiaries since the bill was reported. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the rule has generally been that the House acting upon the bill last takes care of the deaths that have occurred since the introduction of the bill, and as this is a Senate bill I am quite sure that it will be taken care of in the House, and therefore it will not be necessary to recall the bill. However, if the Senator desires to have it recalled, I have not any objection. I am only stating what the rule has been in the past.

Mr. WALSH. I am not able to speak about the rule, but I would prefer not to send a bill to the House carrying appropriations for beneficiaries who have since died.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection, of course, but only made the statement because it has been the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in the possession of the Senate. Without objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered. The amendments sent to the desk by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, strike out lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, in the following words:

> The name of George Leadbeater, late of Company E, Two hundred and fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, strike out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6 in the following words:

> The name of Milton Laird, late of Company I, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, strike out lines 20, 21, 22, and 23 in the following words:

The name of William A. Bodine, late of Company I, Thirty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, strike out lines 9, 10, 11, and 12 in the following words:

The name of Joseph T. Lewis, late of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, strike out lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 in the following words:

The name of Henry Lee Anderson, late major and brevet lieutenant colonel One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, strike out lines 22, 23, and 24 in the following words:

The name of James Stuart, late of Capt. Ahl's Independent Battery, Delaware Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to explain that in each of these cases the beneficiary has died since the bill was reported.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered the roll call. There is a quorum present.

COAL SITUATION IN COLORADO.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9054, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the morning business over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is closed.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is my painful duty to announce this morning to the Senate that the Garfield forces have captured the second line of the trenches in Colorado. This news comes to me in the following telegram:

DENVER, COLO., March 11, 1918.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington:

Herewith is a partial list of the mines that I know of that are idle in this State to-day: Cadell, Gordon, Larimer, Strong, Tioga, Big Four, Rugby, Mutual, Ludlow, Toltec, Harris, Fox, Matchless, Acme, Hecla, Standard, Frederick, Grant, Royal Gorge, Emerald, Wolf, Park, Reliance, King, Black Canon, Black Diamond, Oakdale, Ravenwood, Maitland, Bowen, Chandler, Radiant, Puritan, Baum, Monarch, Centennial, Firestone, Evans, Russell, Ideal, Shamrock, Sunnyside, Nonpareil, McGregor, Bear River, International, Indian Creek, Routt, Pinnacle, Curtis, Wedge. Total tonnage lost these mines to-day, 18,165; total men out of employment in these mines, 4,143. Am told that many miners are already leaving our State, feeling that our operators can not work under prices that have been set, or the operators be able to continue paying present high wage scale unless price of March 11 is revised to that in effect November 1, date we were compelled to advance wages $1.40 per day. I contend we should be allowed to immediately reduce our wages to scale in effect during October.

HARRY F. NASH.

Mr. President, the loss of 18,165 tons a day in these 51 mines is the equivalent of 544,950 tons per month and 6,539,400 tons per year, and 4,143 men at $5 a day are deprived of $20,715 a day and $621,450 a month.

So successful, Mr. President, has the Garfield campaign been that I imagine before the next week is over they will have captured every line except the eminence commanded by the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

TOAST TO THE KAISER.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think it is well enough now and then, while we are discussing matters of world-wide import, like the hours of labor of employees in the city of Washington, to say something that relates itself to the present awful war situation of the world.

Mr. George Morrow Mayo, formerly a clerk in the office of the freight claim agent of the Southern Railway system, of Washington, who is now a gunner's mate in the United States Navy, is the author of the following toast to the Kaiser, which I want to read to the Senate:

A TOAST.

Here's to the Blue of the wind-swept North,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of Grant be with you all
As the sons of the North advance.

And here's to the Gray of the sun-kissed South,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of Lee be with you all
As the sons of the South advance.

And here's to the Blue and Gray as one,
When we meet on the fields of France;
May the spirit of God be with us all
As the sons of the Flag advance.

Mr. President, it is very seldom that poetry is written. A great deal of verse is every day added to the literature of the world. I think these three stanzas constitute poetry, and I wanted to put them in the RECORD.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may read the stanzas, for I do not think one-third of the Senator's heard them, owing to some confusion in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The stanzas were read by the Secretary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1854) to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10358. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, on page 93, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit illustrative of the investigations, products, and processes relating to farming in the subhumid, arid, and semiarid regions of the United States at the International Soil-Products Exposition, to be held at Kansas City, Mo., in conjunction with the International Farm Congress, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $20,000.

The President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Farm Congress, to be held at Kansas City, Mo., in connection with said International Soil-Products Exposition: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted or used for the expenses of delegates.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest that the regular order of business goes back to the appeal which was taken on yesterday from the decision of the Chair upon the amendment offered by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi appeals from the ruling of the Chair sustaining the point of order to his amendment. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the decision of the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, upon that point I want to make a few perhaps innocuous observations. I voted upon yesterday for the Borland amendment requiring the employees of the Government to work at least eight hours daily. I voted for it after having announced that I wanted to add to that an amendment that employees should be allowed time and a half for overtime, so as to put them upon the same footing as all organized labor. The right to put an amendment to the amendment was denied me by a ruling of the Chair, which, as I stated yesterday in an argument, I think was an incorrect ruling; but whether it be correct or incorrect as a matter of parliamentary law, there ought to be some means whereby the Senate of the United States can have the opportunity to put Government employees upon the same footing as all other workingmen in this country. Unless the ruling of the Chair is reversed, that opportunity will not present itself here.

Now, I want to say that, as I stated yesterday, that if the amendment of the bill were in order—which I doubt—then undoubtedly the amendment to the amendment was also in order, being a mere modification of the amendment, which in itself was a change of existing law. Upon yesterday the Borland amendment passed by a vote of 29 to 28. Unless I can get a vote of the Senate upon the proposition of putting these people upon the same footing as other organized labor, I shall change the vote which I cast on yesterday for the Borland amendment, and unless there are other changes in the Senate it will be thereby defeated.

I want my friends and constituents in Mississippi to understand just why I did it. I have been standing here for the principle of putting these people upon the same footing as other working people. I have heard a great deal about their not working eight hours, because they were "adding up figures" or were "punching cards" or something of that sort. Well, the man who is engaged in picking coal or the man who is engaged in a munitions factory, in a somewhat unhealthy pursuit of some sort, or in mining copper, is doing work that is much more wearing and tearing upon his health, if not upon his nerves, than these people are doing. The man who is a bank clerk, somebody said, worked but four or five hours a day. That is a mistake. The bank closes at the end of a limited time, but the bank clerk stays there until he has his books right. If there is a mistake of 25 cents, he remains there all the time until that 25 cents is hunted down if it takes him until midnight. My employees work upon an average more than eight hours a day, and I work upon an average at least 10 hours a day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Mississippi is laboring under a misapprehension, which I will endeavor to correct. The so-called Borland amendment is not an amendment of the Senate; it is the text of the House bill; and the Senator's amendment is not to an amendment of the Senate, but it is to attach an amendment to the House provision.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not laboring under a misapprehension; I understand that. My amendment is to an amendment which the House made upon existing law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but a Senator can not make a point of order against the House text.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment which the House placed on existing law, if in order, makes my amendment to that amendment in order, because it is a modification of a proposed change of existing law which the House has made.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is reasoning which I can not follow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should hate very much to vote against making Government employees work eight hours a day without limitation; they ought to be required to work eight hours, but I do not intend to vote to do them an injustice. Just as I would not make a Prætorian cohort out of them because they merely happen to be in "Rome," the center of the Government, I will not, upon the other hand, lean backwards and do them an injustice. If they are going to be put under the eight-hour law, they ought to be put under it with the limitations and restrictions that are universal with regard to all eight-hour laws. They have no right to demand anything more than other workingmen demand, and we have no right to subject them to any further restrictions—punishment, if you choose to call it so—than other workingmen suffer. Therefore I have taken this appeal from the decision of the Chair in order that the Senate may get a vote upon this proposition; and the universal rule in the Senate is that when the Senate wants to vote upon a question of substantive legislation it can get it by appealing from the decision of the Chair, regardless of the parliamentary point involved, because the rules of the Senate are not the masters of the Senate; they are its servants; and the object of the Senate is to pass substantive legislation of the right character. I am seeking that; but if I can not get it I shall, upon the vote being taken in the Senate after we go out of the Committee of the Whole, reverse my former vote and vote against the Borland amendment presented barely, as it is, without this modification.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I hesitate to vote against the ruling of the Chair, because I realize the Chair is a parliamentarian, and I realize also that his rulings have nearly always been right; but I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is an apparent conflict in the Chair's ruling now and a ruling he made in the past. I will read the ruling of the Vice President in connection with the naval appropriation bill on July 15, 1916, when we were dealing with the Dental Corps of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recalls that decision.

Mr. PITTMAN. Here is the language of the Vice President, who was in the chair at that time:

> The VICE PRESIDENT. Notwithstanding the rule of the Senate to the effect that general legislation may not be attached to an appropriation bill, still when the House of Representatives opens the door and proceeds to enter upon a field of general legislation which has to do with a subject of this character the Chair is going to rule; but, of course, the Senate can reverse the ruling of the Chair, that the House having opened the door, the Senate of the United States can walk in through the door and pursue the field.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the provision in the bill were general legislation on the part of the House, the Chair would have ruled the same way this time; but it is not general legislation on the part of the House.

Mr. PITTMAN. It changes existing general law, and if that does not constitute general legislation, then I would like to know the definition of general legislation. The facts in that case were these: In the naval appropriation bill, as it came from the other House, there was a provision dealing simply and purely with the regular medical officers of the Navy, providing for their rank, and so forth. There was no mention of dentists in that bill as it came to the Senate. An effort was made there by way of amendment to declare that dentists were doctors, and this body attempted to define and enlarge that provision of the bill. A point of order was then made, just as it has been made in this instance, that the proposed amendment was general legislation attempted to be put upon an appropriation bill. This contention was met by the argument then made, that the House having entered into general legislation, the Senate was not required to accept that general legislation or decline it; but, it having come legally before this body, that the Senate was entitled to consider it; that the Senate could modify it or enlarge it. The contention was then made that the provision with regard to medical officers was not general legislation, just as is contended in this instance that the so-called Borland amendment is not general legislation; but it did change the existing law.

Now, the question is whether the pending provision of the bill as it comes from the House changes existing law? If it does not change existing law, why is it in the bill? What is the necessity of that provision in the bill if it does not change existing law? The existing law expressly provides that the departments may employ clerks and pay wages to them for less than eight hours' work a day, while the provision now in the bill says the departments shall not employ and pay clerks for less than eight hours' work. If that is not a change of existing law, then why is it put in the bill? Certainly it is not the function of an appropriation bill to perform such a service. An appropriation bill is designed to provide money for the carrying out of the existing law.

The House, however, came to the conclusion that the existing law was not satisfactory, and they changed the existing law. There is not any doubt that they changed it. Of course, the statement is made that they changed the law negatively instead of affirmatively; but what difference does the manner of changing it make? They said the money shall not be used for the payment of wages except under certain circumstances; but does that bar the Senate from saying that the money shall be used under other circumstances? If the House negatively says that no employee shall work less than eight hours, will it be contended that the Senate can not say such employees shall work more than eight hours?

We had this same question up again in the Senate and passed on it, on an appeal from the decision of the Chair on the naval appropriation bill in 1916, the same bill in which the provision I have been discussing with regard to dental officers was under consideration. The question came up and was decided by this body. As the naval appropriation bill came over from the other House, on the advice of the Secretary of the Navy the existing law was changed, and the eight-hour law was set aside in that bill. How? There was a provision in the bill—not an amendment, but a provision in the text of the bill—which expressly stated that during the war the Secretary of the Navy might compel men to work over eight hours. Was that general legislation or was it a limitation, or what was it? It dealt with something besides providing money. It was undoubtedly general legislation. When the question reached the Senate I offered an amendment which provided that these men should have 30 days' vacation with pay during each year. Was not that quite a broad amendment to that provision of the House? Mark you, the provision of the House said that these men might be worked more than eight hours a day, and I offered an amendment which provided that they should have 30 days' vacation during each calendar year with pay.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to ask the Senator if he is not overlooking the fact that the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] touches two subjects? One is legislation. Of course, the House provision is legislation inserted in the bill by the House; and, while we might have a right to amend that legislation, the Senator must realize that the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi also affects the appropriation; and for the increased amount that might be required no estimate has been made. I think it is an entirely different question from the one that the Senator is arguing. The amendment which the Senator from Nevada offered at the time referred to by him in connection with the naval appropriation bill simply affected the legislation, but did not affect the appropriation, while the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi does affect the appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada allow me a moment or two?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The House provision, which is new legislation and changes existing law, directly affects the appropriation, and does not affect anything else. In its very language it says that the amount appropriated shall not be paid except, and so forth. Of course, my amendment to the amendment likewise affects the appropriation, but that is a still stronger argument for the contention that my amendment is absolutely germane to the House amendment, because they both affect the appropriation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, through the courtesy of the Senator from Nevada, to reply to the Senator from Mississippi, I wish to say that the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi increases the appropriation contained in the bill. The department can not pay these employees the amount of money which would be required by the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi unless the appropriation is increased, but the House provision does not do that. The Senator must realize that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The House provision does not directly increase or decrease the appropriation, but undoubtedly the Members of the House and of the committee there, in taking into consideration the effect of the operations of the new law which they intended to put upon the statute books, did permit it to influence them in naming the amount generally appropriated.

Now, if the Senator from Nevada will pardon me to make one more remark, not quite pertinent to the question at issue, but it happens to occur to me while I am on my feet some Senator said yesterday that the departments could not operate under such a provision as I propose; that they could not manage it; that it was impracticable. Mr. President, there is not a factory in the United States that does not manage just exactly this sort of a situation. When a man goes to work he reports, and when he leaves he must report. Some Senator said that if you leave it to the clerks to make a report for themselves as to how many hours they work it would bankrupt the Treasury. Of course, nobody who is not a fool is going to leave it to each clerk to determine how many hours he has worked. He must report when he starts and he must report when he leaves, and the department will have proper regulations to determine how many hours he has worked each day. That, of course, has nothing to do with the point of order, but I wanted to crowd that in while I was on my feet.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will further permit me, I want to assure the Senator from Mississippi that I am in sympathy with his amendment, and if the point of order had not been made against it I should have voted for it. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I voted as he did for the Borland amendment, but if I had not expected that an increase in pay would be given the clerks I might not have voted that way. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator's amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I hope the Senator will take the same position I am taking—that in order to assert the right of the United States Senate to do equal and exact justice by these people he and I will not abide by our votes in favor of the Borland amendment unless we get the opportunity to put the amendment to the amendment so as to do equal and exact justice.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure the Senator from Mississippi is too good a parliamentarian to insist that the decision of the Chair in this case is not correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon. I insist that it is absolutely incorrect, because, as the Vice President once before said in a similar case, wherever the House opens the door by making a change in existing legislation, that door is open for the Senate either to agree or to disagree or to further limit or modify. I do not think a greater mistake was ever made by a presiding officer.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have not been able to follow all the argument that was going on, so I did not attempt to answer all of it; but the Senator from North Dakota raised the question that there is no estimate to pay the increased labor under the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. In the first place, I will answer that by saying that there is no attempt to increase the appropriation in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi; consequently, it is not subject to the objection that there is no estimate for the appropriation.

Another thing: I rose for the purpose of contending that the Chair had reversed his ruling; that he is not, on this occasion, following the precedent that he has established before on a similar question and a precedent that was sustained on appeal by this body. The first case to which I referred was an amendment on the naval appropriation bill.

What was that amendment? I want to read it, to show that it requires more money than the original bill required. Here was the amendment offered to the naval appropriation bill in which the Chair established the precedent:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint and commission, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, dental surgeons in the Navy at the rate of 1 for each 1,000 of the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps, who shall constitute the Naval Dental Corps, and shall be a part of the Medical Department of the Navy. Original appointments to the Naval Dental Corps shall be probationary for a period of two years and may be revoked at any time during the probationary period by the President: Provided, That the rank of such officers of the same date of appointment among themselves at the end of said probationary period shall be determined by the recommendations of an examining board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment which I am now reading, which established the precedent in this matter, provided not only for the increase of the personnel of the Navy but provided for the establishment of two additional commissions to examine and pass on these applicants.

In other words, it required an additional expenditure. There was no appropriation in the House bill, as it came over here, to take care of that amendment. There was no estimate for it. It had never been thought of. Not only was it entirely new legislation, but it was legislation that would entail an additional expense for which there had been no estimate, and therefore the contention does not affect the precedent established by the Chair in that case.

When the matter came up three days later on my amendment to the naval bill fixing the number of days' vacation for Government employees in the machine shops, again that precedent was cited, and again this body, on an appeal from the Chair, sustained the principle established by the Chair in the preceding case.

The only question here at all is, Has the House entered upon general legislation? That is the only question. Why, to set a precedent in this body, and say that when the House has entered upon general legislation in an appropriation bill we can not consider it, and act freely upon it is to abdicate the legislative functions of this body. It is true that it is a bad principle; it is a vicious policy. I am opposed to general legislation on any appropriation bill. The only function of an appropriation bill is to provide the money to carry out existing law.

We are opposed to it; but there are two bodies of Congress. They are absolutely independent of each other. While we in this body may not place general legislation on an appropriation bill, we have no authority to abdicate our legislative functions and say that when the House violates that policy and that practice, and places general legislation in an appropriation bill, we have either got to accept it or turn it down.

The provision as it comes from the House is both new legislation and general legislation. It is general legislation because it changes existing law.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Nevada to misunderstand me. I did not intend to say that the Senate could not consider the amendment proposed by the House. I claim that the Senate could say that these clerks should work eight and one-half hours, or seven and one-half hours. It is within the power of the Senate to change the legislation. What I did try to say was that when a point of order is made against such an amendment as that proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, involving large expenditures of money, which this necessarily would involve, it is not an analogous case. The Senator does not refer to an analogous case. One or two men in that department might have been paid out of the funds appropriated, or the expense perhaps would be paid as a deficiency; other moneys might be appropriated for the purpose of paying those men; but you could not hope to pay a large number of men, running into the thousands, such as are affected by the provisions of this bill. The Senator must realize that this involves large expenditures of money; and I believe that the Chair was absolutely right in his ruling. No estimate has been made for this increased appropriation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I can not understand why the Senator says this necessarily will require an increased appropriation, for the reason that there is a requirement now that these people shall work eight hours instead of seven hours.

Mr. GRONNA. With no additional pay.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is all true.

Mr. GRONNA. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi provides for wages for time and a half—an increase of pay.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but there is no certainty that any time and a half will be sought, or that any excess amount will be required. There is nothing in it to show that this of necessity, as the Senator says, will require an increased appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the extra hour of work is required, we will not need it.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; and if the extra hour of work is required, it seems to me it will not be needed. Consequently I do not see how the statement can be made that it absolutely requires an increased appropriation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is not any question as to whether or not the amendment requires an increased expenditure. The amendment does not call in terms for any appropriation of more money. If it did call for an appropriation of more money, then the objection that there is no estimate would be material; but that is not involved in this question. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi does not call for the expenditure of any more money. It is simply an enlargement of general legislation that the House has already enacted and sent over to us.

After the Vice President had made the ruling in the case of the amendment with regard to the Dental Corps, and when the matter came up three days later upon an amendment offered by me to the naval appropriation bill increasing the days of vacation of the employees of the Navy Department, the contention was made that the more holidays you gave them the more money it required to carry on the work, which is true. If you only make a man work half the time, you have got to take twice as long or employ twice as many men. There is no doubt that it is true that the amendment I offered imposed an extra expenditure on the Government, and this amendment will impose an extra expenditure on the Government, but not in this bill and not in this amendment.

The occupant of the chair when the last precedent was established made this ruling, and he referred to the Vice President's former ruling:

> The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has listened to the very able arguments, and is of opinion that in view of the precedent set by the Vice President and the Senate on the 15th of this month—

That was the Dental Corps decision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What year?

Mr. PITTMAN. Nineteen hundred and sixteen, three days before the ruling; ruling I am now reading—> and considering that the House of Representatives has provided as to how many shifts may be worked, also for a working during overtime, and having proposed to change the general law and stated that a "shift" may work "overtime," the Senate is at liberty to amend such provision.

> The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

From that there was an appeal to this body. Now, what was the result of the appeal? The question was clearly stated, the issue was clearly had, as to whether the prior decision of the Vice President of this body should be sustained; and on the appeal the Senate sustained it by a vote of 45 to 17. In doing it, they sustained the general principle that general legislation having been entered into upon an appropriation bill by the House of Representatives, this body is not required to vote for or against that legislation, but that it may use its legislative function and amend that general legislation so as to conform to the views of this body.

Certainly it will be an unfortunate day when this great legislative body has to be tied hand and foot by another body over which it has no jurisdiction. To say that the House may engage in general legislation on an appropriation bill, and that, because it does it, no matter how vicious it is, no matter how incomplete it is, no matter how absurd it is, we have to ignore such conditions, that we either have to vote for it or vote against it, and that we are not allowed even to make it intelligent, that we can do nothing with it, is, to my mind, a very extraordinary contention.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That we have no initiative.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not care whether it is this eight-hour question or whether it is another question; it is immaterial. You are establishing a precedent; and if you establish it, and reverse the precedents of the past, you will tie your hands so that you never can amend any general legislation that comes from the House.

I think we are foolish to do it. I think we ought to stand flat-footed by the precedents that have been established by this body and say, "We disapprove of general legislation upon appropriation bills. We will not introduce any general legislation in an appropriation bill in this body; but when the House—a body over which we have no control—does place general legislation in an appropriation bill, then we will not bind ourselves to vote just for or against it, but we will permit ourselves to utilize to the fullest extent our legislative functions, and do what we please in the matter."

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator call this new legislation?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; the Senator calls it new legislation.

Mr. WATSON. Or general legislation?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator calls it both new legislation and general legislation.

Mr. WATSON. That is, within the meaning of the House rule?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know what the meaning of the House rule is. I do not care.

Mr. WATSON. It makes a great deal of difference, according to my view of the situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not a Member of that body and never have been.

Mr. WATSON. That is to say, it was originally placed in the House bill, not as new legislation nor as general legislation, but as a limitation on an appropriation. Therefore the argument the Senator has been making, that because the House introduced new legislation we have the right to amend that legislation, does not hold, because it is not new legislation; it is a limitation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a minute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, while there is a rule in the House that an amendment may escape the parliamentary objection of being new legislation provided it be a limitation upon the appropriation, still the fact is left that new legislation which is a limitation upon the appropriation is new legislation, and what the House put in here is new legislation, and if it had not been general legislation or new legislation there would have been no gumption or sense in the House putting it in at all. Their object was to change the existing order of things, and it escaped the point of order in the House because, under a technical rule of the House, new legislation, where it is a limitation upon the appropriation, is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has stated the answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] so clearly that it is hardly necessary for me to say anything; but I may add that even if that were not a technical rule of the House it would make no difference to me in this body. I am not familiar with the rules of the House, nor do I care what the rules of the House are. I know what new legislation is. I know that legislation that changes existing legislation is general legislation; and if the House voted to the contrary, I would still know that it is general legislation.

Now, then, suppose this had taken place: Suppose they had said that this money should not be used in the payment of any wages for anyone that worked less than 10 hours. Suppose they had gone further and stated that this money should not be used in the payment of any wages for any person that worked less than 18 hours. What are you going to do about it? Are you going to vote "no" and kill the appropriation, or what are you going to do? Do you not understand that by that rule of limitation they can make a law absurd; that they can say that you can not do anything with the appropriation? Why, it must be true.

I do not care by what technical means or what parliamentary means they accomplish their purpose. I say that we are entitled to perfect any provision of a bill that comes over to the Senate from the House, and I do not care what that provision is or how they got it in there. When a provision comes over here from the House we do not have to vote "no" or "yes" on it. We can perfect that provision so long as it is germane to the subject that has been legislated on in the House. Whenever we abdicate that authority, then we can simply legislate on a subject that the House legislate on first, and only in the manner in which they do it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, in explanation of my vote on this question I wish to say that I voted for the Borland amendment, as it is called. I voted for it for the reason that I think those employed in the departments and in this particular department would be better off under an eight-hour law than under the existing law, where by the mere edict of the Secretary they might be made to work any number of hours in the day, seven being the minimum. I shall still adhere to that course, but I think I would prefer very much the attitude of the Senator from Mississippi rather than that they should not have the pay for overtime work; and in case this amendment is not put on the bill in the Senate I shall vote against the Borland amendment.

I wish to explain my attitude so that my colleagues and those interested will understand that I believe if the clerks are paid for overtime eight hours are little enough in this particular time of our history to work. Everybody is working that much. If they are to receive no pay for the arduous duties of the overtime after eight hours of service I shall vote to let that matter remain, as I have already stated, where it now is rather than put it at eight hours and still have them work over that time and not receive any remuneration for it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, while we are considering this question I think we ought to keep in mind the entire difference between the character of officers to whom the proposition of overtime and extra pay is to be applied and the character of pay to which it is now applied. It is now applied to day labor, to a class of work where the pay is by the day, and the wage is largely fixed by the work done. This appropriation bill carries appropriations by the year. If you turn to nearly any page in the bill you will see a long list of items where so much a year is appropriated, not by the day. It is so much for the year for the particular position occupied by a clerk.

Now, suppose you adopt the policy of one and a half pay for all time beyond eight hours, you would tear your whole appropriation bill to pieces. I open the bill at page 17. There you have appropriated for one executive clerk in the Bureau of Plant Industry $2,000 for the year; for two executive clerks, $1,980 each a year. Suppose those executive clerks work an hour over on one day or two days or occasionally, what becomes of your appropriation for the pay of those clerks for the year? You break down your entire bill. You would be called upon to increase this appropriation bill by some lump sum to be distributed at the pleasure of chiefs of divisions to those clerks whose salaries they desired to increase. That would be the practical effect of it.

Mr. President, I desire to make this suggestion: We have a rule which forbids an increase of an appropriation not estimated for by a department or recommended by a committee. The practical effect of this amendment is to increase the appropriation and tear the appropriation bill all to pieces.

Not alone for the reason suggested by the chairman, but for the additional reason that you can not increase an appropriation bill upon the floor of the Senate, I shall vote to sustain the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no objection to the reversal of an opinion of the Chair. That has been done a number of times, and it does not affect either his personal or official relations toward Senators. But the Chair does have the right to explain.

There is no conflict between the opinion of the Chair on the point of order upon the naval bill and this bill. The House did clearly inject into that bill general legislation. The House rule, as the Chair understands, is new legislation; the Senate rule is general legislation; and there is a vast deal of difference between new legislation and general legislation.

This is not general legislation in the House bill applying to civil-service clerks in all the departments of the Government. The most that can be said for it is that it is new legislation with reference to certain clerks in one department of the Government; but it is not general legislation, and the Chair feels that he has a right to put on record his denial, from his intellectual standpoint, of any disagreement between his opinion on the naval bill and his opinion in this particular case.

The question now is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it seems to me a good deal of the argument here has been based on the principle of pay and a half for overtime. The merits of that proposition are not involved in this proposition at all. It appears to me that the Chair's ruling is eminently correct in holding that this amendment is new legislation. The House amendment was properly drawn to come within the House rule.

Now, Senators will see at a glance that it will be utterly impossible to prepare an appropriation bill for one of the departments if the principle of pay and a half for overtime is to be involved. Infinite foresight could not prepare such an estimate. We are required to legislate upon estimates furnished by the departments. The Senate recognizing the propriety of that rule has adopted a rule subjecting any increase of appropriations to a point of order which has not either been estimated for by the department or reported by a standing committee of the Senate. It would throw our entire system of passing supply bills into utter and inconceivable confusion. They could not be based upon estimates if the principle of pay and a half for overtime was to be involved, because nobody could tell in advance how much overtime there would be and how much overpay would be necessary. So it destroys all our rules, all our precedents, and abolishes the system. In fact it introduces an impossible system. It is no system at all.

I shall not undertake to differentiate the payment of time and a half for overtime in a governmental department from ordinary trades or industries. Perhaps it is possible that it ought to apply to both, even though it would involve a revolution of our rules. It ought not to be done in this way or at this time. Generally where pay and a half has been introduced in the industries the industries are conducted profitably. The time and a half is presumed to be economic, even though it is overpay for the least efficient hours on the part of the employees.

Now, the Government is not conducted at a profit. It will be better for the Government if it has occasion for overtime to engage additional employees, rather than pay excessive compensation for overtime. Industries find that upon occasions it pays them better to pay overtime, even though it be excessive than to employ additional help or labor. The principle is different. I hope this legislation will not be brought out at this time, because it changes the whole form, as far as this bill and all other legislation of the kind is concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the Senate decided that the decision of the Chair should stand as the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. REED. I desire to call up the amendment I introduced a short time ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 94, after line 3, insert as a separate paragraph the following:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit illustrative of the investigations, products, and processes relating to farming in the subhumid, arid, and semiarid regions of the United States at the Interantional Soil Products Exposition, to be held at Kansas City, Mo., in conjunction with the International Farm Congress, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $20,000.

The President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Farm Congress, to be held at Kansas City, Mo., in connection with said International Soil Products Exposition: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted or used for the expenses of delegates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the following amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read:

The SECRETARY. On page 91, at the end of line 16, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the head of any department may excuse any clerk or employee from more than seven hours of work a day if such clerk or employee takes courses of study in any university or other institution of learning which, in the judgment of the head of the department, will fit him for better service in any department or branch of the Government. In such cases seven hours shall constitute a day's work; but no person shall be excused from rendering more than seven hours' service except on the days when actually in attendance at such universities or institutions of learning, and no person in any office, bureau, or department shall, because of attendance at any university or institution of learning, be excused from work in such office, bureau, or department at any time when the work therein be in arrears. No person working only seven hours shall be deemed to have rendered a full day's service, nor shall he be paid for a full day's service unless there be filed thereafter with the head of the department, in such form and within such time as he shall fix, a certificate showing the actual presence of such person in the classes of the university or other institution of learning on said day, signed by the authorities thereof. No person shall be entitled to be excused for more than one hour each day, even though he devotes a greater number of hours each day to courses of study in a university or other institution of learning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, permit me to indulge in a very brief explanation of this amendment. To the best of my information, there are something like 4,000 Government employees, who are mostly classed as clerks, who are students in the universities in and around Washington. The courses of study which they pursue and the hours of study which they pursue have a very close relation with the hours of work in the departments. Under the present existing system the departments release their employees at half-past 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The universities and colleges offer courses of study for those employees who are properly enrolled, commencing at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and continuing until 7 o'clock in the evening, also courses of study and hours of lectures later on in the evening after the supper hour. If the so-called Borland amendment prevails either the length of service in the departments will be increased by the addition of an hour in the morning, by opening an hour earlier, or by adding an hour at the end of the present day's work—an hour later in the afternoon; or possibly one-half hour may be added in the morning and one-half hour added in the afternoon. I imagine that very little, if any, time will be gained by an increase of the morning hours of work; in other words, I do not believe that the departments will open earlier as a result of the Borland amendment. It is much more probable that the departments will continue work later in the afternoon and thereby comply with the Borland amendment.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KIRBY. As I understand, we have passed a law setting the clock forward an hour. I should suppose the clerks would have time to go to school after their eight hours' service had commenced an hour earlier.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Setting the clock forward or backward does not make any more hours, one way or the other.

Mr. KIRBY. It was so claimed when the legislation was passed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Borland amendment, as now written, prevails the working day of the clerks will be extended further into the afternoon, and it will make it impossible for the students in the universities—some 4,000 in number—who are department clerks, to attend those lectures which now are held between the hours of 5 and 7 p. m. It is apparent that half an hour's time is consumed, necessarily, between the release of the clerk from his department and his arrival at the university to commence his work there during that late afternoon period.

The amendment which I have introduced authorizes the head of a department of the Government to permit a student in his department to work seven hours, as he is working to-day, and have that count in the same category as the other clerks who work eight hours in order that he may be able to continue his college course. There is very grave doubt whether these men can continue their college course if the Borland amendment, as now written, prevails. The object of my amendment is to let these men continue in their studies. A great many of them attend these universities on the express request and encouragement of the department heads, who want these young men and young women to pursue special courses of study in order that they may be better fitted to advance in Government service. The object of my amendment is to permit that practice to continue.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I could not very well follow the reading of the amendment from the desk, because it was rather long. Does this amendment discriminate between those who are attending the university and those who are not as to the hours of service during the day? Does it give the university students a seven-hour day and the others an eight-hour day?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In one sense it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In all essentials it would.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me as though that would demoralize the service. Everybody would go to a university, then, I suppose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Scarcely under the wording of this amendment. The question is, Do you want to demoralize the universities and all these men who are getting their education, or——

Mr. BORAH. We are just now interested in getting service from the departments and not in affording an education. These young men have an opportunity, after they have worked the same length of time as have the others, to go to the universities at night and complete their courses of study, and I venture to say that, if there are 4,000 of them, the universities will conform their hours to their courses of study for the advantage of having them attend.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have discussed that very matter with the people connected with the universities, and they tell me it is almost impossible to readjust their hours in such a way as to comply with the Borland amendment and still give the students as many hours a day as they are now giving them. One must remember that the two hours between 5 p. m. and 7 p. m. can not be very considerably changed without upsetting the whole course of life with respect to the meal hour and the conditions that are imposed upon people by reason of the inadequate transportation facilities of the city. The employees have to take the trolley cars to their homes after that late afternoon session at the universities, in many instances many miles, to the outskirts of the city, and then endeavor to get back to the universities for the evening sessions. Now, if the time of closing the departments is postponed one hour by reason of the Borland amendment the whole thing is apt to fail; it can not be done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am very clear in my mind that we ought not to have two standards of service in the departments. It seems to me that we could hardly justify that. I know it is difficult to work it out, but I would rather oppose the Borland amendment and stand for the seven-hour day than stand for the seven-hour day for a portion of the employees and an eight-hour day for the others. I do not think that that is in conformity with equity. It seems that the service has been organized and geared up for the seven-hour day, and it is hard to get away from it. The city is organized upon that basis; in other words, the whole arrangement has been along that line.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is fair to say that the special courses in the universities have been geared up to the seven-hour day, but the rest of the city is not.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not believe that we ought to have two standards of service in the departments.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, let me inquire of my colleague if he understands that most of these courses are to prepare men to better perform their service in the departments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; that is the fact. As I have already intimated, a large number of the clerks attend the universities as students upon the request of the department chiefs, who desire them to improve themselves so that they will be more efficient Government employees and that they may be retained more permanently in the service and rise to the highest grades. The chiefs want the employees to take these courses, and the situation arises whether, without the adoption of my amendment, it is not going to be almost impossible for them to attend the courses.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it seems to me this whole matter might be well settled by determining for whose benefit the Congress is legislating. If these employees are needed to do the Government work in the departments, then they ought to be required to do it. If we are legislating for the benefit of the employees or for the benefit of the colleges, it might be very well to vote for the amendment that is proposed. If we need the work of these clerks eight hours a day—and we have already said we do need them by the action the Senate has taken—they ought to be required to do that much service.

My sympathy, of course, is with the clerk all the time, as he is, in a way, a more concrete proposition than the Government itself; but the idea is this: These Government clerks are getting better pay to-day than clerks of like kind in civilian and industrial employment; there is no doubt about that proposition. If it requires this much service to do the Government work—and it evidently does, because we are employing numerous additional clerks all the time—then these clerks ought to be required to do that much service. There is no question that they are not getting paid for that much service. If they desire to improve their condition by attending colleges, that is an admirable ambition and they might be allowed to do that; but let them do it in their own time. They can do it very well after they have finished the eight-hour-day service; and if they can not, it is not the fault of the Government, which is entitled to all it pays for—at least that much—and we do not need to go about protecting the college interests or other individual interests when we are making a simple business proposition and contract to pay for service that we have not been getting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am a true disciplinarian and serve in the army as a private subject to orders. Therefore, in accordance with the decision which you rendered not long ago upon my amendment to the House provision of this bill, and in accordance with the ruling of the Senate sustaining your ruling—both of which were wrong—I make the point of order against the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is pleased to find the Senator from Mississippi right, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Chair will not understand that the "Senator from Mississippi" is right. The "Senator from Mississippi" is merely attempting to duplicate a wrong because it has become a precedent. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there can not be any doubt that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is subject to the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order has been sustained.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I merely wish to make one observation, which is that if the amendment, to which I was opposed as offered, had classified these employees and permitted those whose services are necessary in the military arm of the Government or who have declared an intention to connect themselves with the military arm of the Government, I think it would be wise to pass it in that form, and I hope the Senator from New York will offer it in that form when the bill is reported to the Senate. I believe there will then be no objection to it.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert a new section at the end of the bill, as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to require all persons, firms, or corporations conducting establishments engaged in packing or preparing meat or meat products which enter into interstate or foreign commerce, and which establishments are subject to Federal inspection under the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907," approved June 30, 1906, to install and maintain, so far as may be, uniform systems of cost accounting and bookkeeping. The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this section. It shall be the duty of all such persons, firms, or corporations to install and maintain the systems of cost accounting and bookkeeping prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture after 60 days' notice from the order of the Secretary requiring and prescribing the same. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the point of order was well sustained, and I have prepared a written notice required by Rule XL of the Senate, which I desire to file at this time, that I will move to suspend the rules in order to offer this amendment to the bill. I will merely say in one sentence that the packing houses have been virtually guaranteed a profit of 9 per cent on their meat production and 15 per cent on their specialties. I am advised that one of the biggest packing houses in the country shifts its bookkeeping system quarterly, and perhaps monthly, and that it is impossible to determine anything about the costs or the profits. It is to meet that situation and the juggling with the public interests that this amendment is offered. I present the notice at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma presents a certain notice for the suspension of the rules——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say that I think I shall very cheerfully vote for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma if it comes before the Senate under a motion to suspend the rules; but after the recent rulings of the Vice President and of the Senate, it strikes me that perhaps we had better suspend the rules or else submit to the same infliction all along the line. If the Senate can be deprived of a right to vote under a technical rule, then somebody had better move to suspend the rules; and when it comes to suspending the rules on such an amendment as that offered by the Senator from Oklahoma, I will vote for it; but I will not allow any committee of this body, or any bunch of little men, to take liberties with the rule unless they let me take some liberties with it, too.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oklahoma gives notice that he will move a suspension of paragraph 3 of Rule XIV in order to offer the amendment which was last read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will lie on the table.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I now wish to call up the notice which I gave several days ago, in regard to moving to suspend the rules in order to offer an amendment increasing the price guaranteed for wheat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the notice.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oklahoma gave previous notice that when the Agricultural appropriation bill was being considered he would move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XIV, prohibiting the reception of general legislation to any general appropriation bill, in order that he might propose the following, to be inserted at the proper point in such bill as a new paragraph——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, before that is read, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is not in order. That can not be done in view of the fact that the absence of a quorum has been suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	New	Stone
Beckham	Hollis	Nugent	Sutherland
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Phelan	Thomas
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Thompson
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Townsend
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Fall	Kellogg	Reed	Walsh
Fletcher	Kenyon	Shafroth	Warren
France	King	Sheppard	Williams
Gallinger	Kirby	Shields	Wolcott
Gore	Knox	Smith, Ga.
Hale	McCumber	Smoot
Harding	McKellar	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. The motion is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair thinks it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may ask what the motion is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to suspend Rule XIV, so as to permit the introduction without violating the rules of an amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma. The question is upon suspending the rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask, for information, that the proposed amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, to read as follows:

That section 14 of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefits from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1916. The President shall from time to time establish and promulgate such regulations as he shall deem wise in connection with such guaranteed prices, and in particular governning conditions of delivery and payment and differences in price for the several standard grades at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced, adopting No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent as the basis. Thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States that, upon compliance by him with the regulations prescribed, he shall receive for any wheat produced in reliance upon this guaranty within the period, not exceeding 18 months, prescribed in the notice a price not less than the guaranteed price therefor as fixed pursuant to this section. In such regulations the President shall prescribe the terms and conditions upon which any such producer shall be entitled to the benefits of such guaranty. The guaranteed prices for the several standard grades of wheat for the crop of 1918 shall be based upon No. 2 northern spring or its equivalent at not less than $2.50 per bushel at the local elevator or the local railway market where such wheat is delivered from the farm where produced.

"This guaranty shall not be dependent upon the action of the President under the first part of this section, but is hereby made absolute and shall be binding until May 1, 1919. When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to this section, and ascertains what rate of duty, added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat at the time of importation, would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed therefor pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat under any then existing tariff law of the United States. For the purpose of making any guaranteed price effective under this section, or whenever he deems it essential in order to protect the Government of the United States against material enhancement of its liabilities arising out of any guaranty under this section, the President is authorized also, in his discretion, to purchase any wheat for which a guaranteed price shall be fixed under this section, and to hold, transport, or store it, or to sell, dispose of, and deliver the same to any citizen of the United States or to any Government engaged in war with any country with which the Government of the United States is or may be at war, or to use the same as supplies for any department or agency of the Government of the United States. Any moneys received by the United States from or in connection with the sale or disposal of wheat under this section may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this section. Any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, has the Senator from North Dakota the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has a right to the floor. He has been recognized.

Mr. GORE. I wish to ask him to yield to me for just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the amendment as read, of course, is long and involved; and, from the reading, Senators listening to it from their desks can not grasp the points involved. It reiterates section 14 of the so-called food-control act. It proposes to change that act in four particulars, and in four particulars only.

First, with respect to the price of wheat, it raises the guaranteed minimum from $2 to $2.50.

The second change is that it substitutes No. 2 northern for No. 1 northern as the basic grade, No. 1 northern being in fact an ideal grade.

The third change is that it substitutes the local elevator, or the local railway market in the vicinity where the wheat was grown, for the principal interior primary market—the language of the law as passed.

The fourth and last change is this: It was contended by Mr. Hoover, as I am informed, and by others, that the $2 written into the law last summer was not only a minimum but was a maximum, was an absolute price. That contention was made by others. This makes it plain that that was a minimum price guaranteed by Congress, and was not a maximum price, not an absolute price.

Those are the only four changes which are involved in the proposed amendment.

DAYLIGHT-SAVING BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1854) to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States, which were, on page 2, line 24, to strike out "April" and insert "March"; on page 2, line 26, to strike out "September" and insert "October"; on page 3, line 4, to strike out "April" and insert "March"; on page 3, line 5, to strike out "September" and insert "October"; on page 3 to strike out lines 18 and 19; and on page 3, line 20, to strike out the numeral "6" and insert the numeral "5."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the action just taken by this body consummates, as far as the Congress is concerned, legislation that will put into effect the daylight-saving plan, which, it is universally believed, will be of inestimable value in bringing about, through the saving of time, a considerable contribution toward the winning of the war in the conservation of human energy and a large amount of fuel now consumed in the manufacture of artificial illumination. It will also supply an additional hour for home gardening by the city and suburban dweller, estimated at one-fifth of our total population, and it will give to the workers of the country one hour for recreation at that part of the day when it is most convenient for them to enjoy it. Briefly, this bill provides that on the last Sunday in March—which this year occurs on the 31st instant—clocks shall be moved forward one hour and remain so until the last Sunday in October. We simply move the whole day one hour ahead during the seven months between these two dates by making use of an hour of daylight ordinarily wasted in the early part of the morning.

The change is universal and will cause no confusion. Business will go on just the same; appointments will be kept just the same; railroads will run on present time-tables.

England, France, Germany, Austria, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Italy, Holland, and Portugal—in fact, every European country of importance save Russia alone—have adopted this plan and have found that it has worked with the greatest success in the saving of fuel and in general healthful benefit for its people. On the north Canada and on the south Mexico are only awaiting the consummation of this legislation to adopt the plan themselves.

It will not affect our agricultural sections, since their rising and retiring are due almost entirely to seasonal conditions. The farmer regards the demands of the season rather than customs. The sun, rather than the clock, is his guide; but it will affect advantageously, it seems to me, all of the people of our country except those engaged in farming. Those who have carefully worked out the problem insist that it will save the United States in the matter of fuel alone at least 1,000,000 tons of coal annually. This saving in fuel will come entirely through the fact that we have exchanged one hour of dark for one hour of light.

People live by custom. Eighty per cent of the people of the United States rising in the morning allow only sufficient time to dress, eat breakfast, and arrive at their places of employment just at the stroke of the time to begin their day's work. If their time to start work is 8 o'clock, under the new arrangement it will still be 8 by the clock. Street railways, suburban and interurban transit facilities will be operated upon the same theory, and there will be no difficulty at all about the changed conditions. In fact, after the first day no one will be inconvenienced or confused. Under the operation of this plan the worker begins his day by the same clock time as formerly, but actually an hour earlier, and when the day's work is done there is an hour more of daylight, which, under the present standard, he does not enjoy.

In that hour he can till his garden or do any other thing of a healthful or economic nature.

Perhaps no better experience on daylight saving can be cited than that of the recreation commission of Detroit, which city of its own accord has adopted this plan. The commission reports it has made the after-supper hour the most popular hour of the day. Amateur baseball games among the employees of factories and offices are numerous, and the general improving influence on the social and moral welfare of the city is very great.

I predict, Mr. President, that this is going to be a very popular measure, and that after its beneficial effect is felt for the first year of its operation no effort will be made hereafter to repeal it. When this legislation was first suggested to me for introduction, like every other man who had given it superficial examination, I treated it with some levity, but as one carefully inquires into the subject it will become apparent that it is one of the most important conservation measures ever enacted by the Congress of the United States, and I have taken great pleasure in being its sponsor in this body.

Mr. President, I move that the amendments of the House of Representatives to this measure be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, requests a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9867) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MARTIN, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF STATUE OF FREDERICK THE GREAT.

Mr. THOMAS. I send to the desk a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) providing for the removal and disposition of the statue of Frederick the Great was read the first time by its title and the second time at length and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the statue of Frederick the Great, now disfiguring one of the pedestals of the United States War College in the city of Washington, be removed and disposed of as the Committees of the Senate and House on Public Buildings and Grounds shall determine.

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the application in the case of the Irish people of the great principle of self-determination, as interpreted by the President of the United States in his discussion of the fundamental and indispensable conditions of a lasting peace, will constitute a source of genuine gratification to the people and Government of the United States, sincerely solicitious as they are for the harmony and prosperity of the two great peoples; and be it further

Resolved, That the two Houses of Congress concur in the belief that the effect of willingness on the part of the people and Government of Great Britain to permit the ascertainment of the will of the Irish people by means of a plebiscite of the adult population (men and women) will be viewed as a precedent of distinct national character seeking to acquire in an orderly, legal manner final vindication and sanction of their titles to sovereignty.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from North Dakota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have consented to yield for a few minutes to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rather hope this amendment will not pass, not because I care much about the price fixed or anything of that sort, but it is one step further in the line of the Government attempting to fix prices. If the Government were all wise and could fix a price that was wise, of course, it goes without saying that it would be all right, but the Government is not all wise. Thomas Jefferson was inquired of years ago, "Do we have angels run the Government?" and he answered by saying, "No; men."

Whenever you fix a price that is too high you merely encourage hoarding and speculation in order that that price may be reached in actual sales, notwithstanding what the market wants to sell it for. If you fix the price too low you merely stop production. It would be immensely better if you stop the whole attempt to fix prices for anything.

My opinion is that if you were not to attempt to fix the price of wheat at all wheat would be selling next year at about $1.50 or $1.75 a bushel—at a fair market price—but even if it were selling at $4 a bushel, if the wheat was worth it in the market on account of the cost of production and the cost of living and other things, then the wheat ought to have that price. The very best measure that any legislative body can take in order to reduce the price of a product is to leave the market with its stimulus absolutely free, so that a man may plant with the idea of getting $4 wheat and be disappointed later on by getting $1.70 wheat.

Now, Mr. President, next to munitions and men and ships, food and fuel are the most important things that are necessary in order to win this war, and the question comes up as to how best to increase the production of food and of fuel. That question has presented itself to various people at various times in the history of the world—in the French Revolution, the American Revolution, in ancient Rome when the Gracchi were striking, and all that—but it all comes back to this: If you will let a man believe that maybe he can sell his wheat next year for $5 a bushel as the sky-high price of it, if you let a man believe that maybe next year he can sell his coal for $15 a ton, possibly at a sky-high further price, two results must follow: Every man who has any land he can put in wheat will put it in wheat just as soon as he can, and everybody who has a mine, even if it is a coal mine that in ordinary times was not rich enough to pay to work, will go to work and work it. What will be the result? The result will be overproduction and a decreased price of both wheat and coal for the benefit of the people. That is the necessary economic result of letting the market alone.

So I do not see much sense and never have seen much sense in any governmental attempt to limit the price of products to the people. If you let the man go on his production will limit the price, because his hope and the spirit of speculation will lead to overproduction, and the overproduction will correct his selfishness, will correct his greed, and will give to the consumer what the consumer has a right to have, to wit, a sufficient quantity of the product in the market. It is more important to the consumer to have a sufficient quantity than it is to have it even at a low price. You must have coal to keep warm. You must have wheat if you are going to eat wheat bread.

Now, I have but one more suggestion to make in connection with this matter. I have thought sometimes I would start a voluntary association whereby I and other men signing the agreement would agree not to eat anything made out of wheat at all during this war. It would not be much sacrifice. My own section of the country did that for nearly three years. We did not have anything made out of wheat and the Confederate soldiers fought pretty well without any wheat in their stomachs. I would long ago have started a movement, and made myself its voluntary first member, except for the fact that I absolutely hate to play in the limelight and go out and appear even to be "patrioteering." But it can be easily done. If wheat gets too high, if people out West, the Senators from North Dakota and the Senators from South Dakota and the other Senators there get too greedy, we can stop their exploitation by stopping eating their product. We can live on rice and corn bread and rye and various other things. There is no telling how many pretty dishes you can make out of rice and corn meal if you just know how to make them. I am not at all afraid of leaving the laws of trade free.

I have been a Democrat all my life and always have believed in every sort of free thing, amongst other things free trade, especially free trade within the United States. I have gone further and believed in it even outside of the United States, and even if I am in error I am not afraid to face the other fellow in the open, because I believe with old Jefferson that you can "leave error free provided you also leave reason free to combat it."

Now, I stood all this. I voted for a lot of it because I thought that neither the American Congress nor the American people would be satisfied until you tried it to the 40nth degree. The world had already tried it to the 40th degree at various stages of its history, but it had to try it to the 40mnth degree with every generation. A daughter of mine said to me once about one of my sons, "Papa, it is useless to scold the boy or to scold anybody else. He has got to learn for himself." She was then about 8 years old, but had a good deal of wisdom within her little head. It is true that each generation must learn for itself.

However exploited and however fallacious and futile the experiments of the past have been we learn nothing from it, because it is just about 5 per cent of humanity that knows what humanity has done outside of their generation and they have got to learn it. I think it is now about time to stop it all and leave the market free. Let the buyer go out and try to get the lowest price he can and let the seller go out and try to get the highest price he can, and let the producer get the highest price possible, and when he is paid for it he will make the stuff, and when he makes the stuff he will defeat his own selfish ends by overproduction and oversupply in the market.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has the floor. Does he yield to his colleague?

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. The Senator from Mississippi is laboring under a misapprehension. I do not think that any of the Senators from the Northwest asked for any legislation to fix price. On the other hand, they were opposed to it. They said, "Leave it to the law of supply and demand." I am glad to know that the Senator from Mississippi believes as I do, and he argues much better than some of us did a year ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is mistaken in thinking that I misapprehended. I suppose the Senator arrived at that conclusion from the fact that I voted against him when the proposition was up before; but I stated when I so voted at that time that I did so with the view in my own mind that neither the American people nor the Congress would ever be satisfied without trying the experiment once more. But I have said upon this floor many times, the Senator will remember, that no Government could in the long run fix prices; that while it might make a man sell at a certain price, if he sold at all, it could not make him sell at all; and that if the price fixed was, in his opinion, too low, he would hoard and speculate, whereas if the price was entirely too low the work of production for the future would stop. I thought the wisest course to pursue, when you all were arguing for that, was to vote it through and let it be tried once more. Now, I say it has been tried enough and it has failed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to his colleague?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. If I may be permitted, I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that he is still mistaken. Myself, my colleague, and other Senators from the West asked to be let alone. We did not ask for the legislation, I want to say to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just said that I voted against your proposition when it was formerly before the Senate, and that I voted against it for the reasons I have given, which were mere tactical reasons. You were right then, in my opinion.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Mississippi is right now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Although what you say is true, I do not think you were formerly exactly expressing the true and right reasons why you were right at that time.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, there is no material disagreement between the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and myself concerning the operation of the law of supply and demand within our own country. The main difference seems to be that the Senator from Mississippi is in favor of that law of supply and demand when cotton is high and wheat is low, but votes against it when wheat seems to be high and cotton somewhat low. The Senator from Mississippi says he has contemplated entering into an agreement with others to refrain from eating wheat altogether.

I should like to enter into an agreement with the Senator from Mississippi, each of us denying ourselves certain rights and privileges, if I could do so on equal conditions, but the Senator has a decided advantage over me. I have to wear his cotton whether I want to do it or not. If 40° below zero in a North Dakota winter will not compel me to wear clothes the law comes in and does compel me to wear them. So he has me at a disadvantage. While he can change his diet from wheat to sweet potatoes I can not change my method of having to wear his cotton.

We people of the Northwest who raise the food for the country have to pay for our labor according to the law of supply and demand, and if labor is short we have to pay $5 a day for it. We have either to pay that amount or we must leave our fields idle. There is no middle ground for us on this proposition. We have to purchase everything that we buy and need upon our farms according to the prices that are fixed by the law of supply and demand of both the labor and the materials which we must purchase.

Laboring under those conditions we feel as though we ought to be left to the law of supply and demand in selling the products which we have to sell. The law which the Senator from Mississippi has enunciated that whenever you increase the quantity you will depreciate the price and whenever you lessen the quantity you will appreciate the price ought to apply to our products now just as it applies to his cotton and to the labor which we must employ.

But the Senator from Mississippi seems to have ignored the condition that is confronting us. The Congress of the United States did step in, and they gave the President the power to fix the price of food products. Acting upon that the President fixed the price of the thing which we produce mostly in our State, namely, wheat, at $2.20 a bushel for the 1917 crop.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not mean to be over technical, but can the Senator point to any provision of the food-control act which gives the President the power to fix the price of wheat for 1917?

Mr. McCUMBER. It gives him the power to take the mills and gives him the power to operate them. It gives him the power to license, and under the authority to take possession of the mills that grind the flour and under the authority to license the manufacturer of flour he can grant licenses only upon condition that the licensee pay the farmer a certain price for his grain, and in that way the authority granted has been exercised and this action might be sustained by the law itself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think that was in the spirit of the act?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I would say it is not. I do not think it was in the spirit of the act that we should take this method of driving down the price of the product on the farm. On the contrary, I think the spirit of the act was that the producer should be let alone entirely in the matter.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRONNA in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not think that it was the belief on the part of the Members of the Senate that the farmers would be left alone and their market would be left free and that they would get the market price without interference?

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the guise or the theory of controlling the middleman or the profiteer we have so operated under that law that we have choked down the price of wheat to such an extent that he will be unable to produce the wheat that the country needs.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator also permit me to state that very little, if any, benefit has been derived by the consumer?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wish to say that the entire food bill is one which I did not agree to with very much enthusiasm. Indeed, I voted for it very reluctantly, and stated that I thought it was in contravention of the law of economics. But what I rose to say is this: I have been advised, and I am asking for information because the Senator may know far better than I, that the gentlemen who fixed the price of wheat were a committee composed principally of farmers, called in to aid Mr. Hoover, and that Mr. Hoover himself was not in favor of fixing the price of wheat. Does the Senator have information upon that matter?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have complete information on what was done. It was not a committee of farmers that fixed the price. On the contrary, it was a committee composed of consumers and of the middlemen who do the manufacturing that fixed the price; and while we had a representative from the State of North Dakota who was heard upon that matter, of course he was in the minority, and the price fixed much lower than he contended for.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I ask the Senator from North Dakota to name the chairman of the board that fixed the price of wheat last August.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not remember who was the chairman of the particular sub-board which heard the testimony on prices.

Mr. GORE. Dr. H. A. Garfield, of Fuel Administration fame. He was chairman, and his name appears first on the report signed by the board. I believe Theodore Vale is the second name. I do not think anybody would regard Mr. Vale as a farmer. I understand there was not a wheat farmer on the committee. There was one man from Georgia, a cotton State, who is a farmer, and another one from Illinois who is a prominent corn producer.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is that the same person who fixed the price of coal?

Mr. GORE. It is one and the same.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It was not very well fixed. Mine went up from about three and a half dollars to $11 a ton. I do not know how other Senators were affected.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion, in view of what has been said? I have been informed that a member of that price-fixing committee was Mr. L. J. Taber, who was master of the Ohio State Grange. He is a farmer also.

Mr. GORE. Does he produce wheat?

Mr. POMERENE. He is a farmer.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did the master of the Ohio State Grange fix the price of fuel?

Mr. POMERENE. I wish the Senator would not refer to the subject of fuel.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not seeking to lure the Senator from Ohio into any discussion that he might shun, but it is a new one on me if the president of the Ohio State Grange fixed the price of coal.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have been diverted somewhat from the principal subject, but I desire to present to the Senate and I ask the attention of Senators to a few cogent reasons justifying the setting aside of the rules of the Senate and allowing this amendment to be placed upon the pending appropriation bill.

Let us recall this one fact: Whether we acted wisely or unwisely in passing the food bill, we did pass it. Whether or not the operations under it have been just and fair and proper, the fact is that under its operations we have driven down the price of the thing below all other things that you wanted the farmer to produce in this country to such an extent that he can not afford to produce it. Now, there is a simple proposition. No Senator and no one else in the United States would say that barley ought to be worth more than wheat when the amount of barley which is raised per acre is almost double that of wheat; no one would say that the price of rye should be more than that of wheat; no one would claim that one ought to pay more for a 10-pound sack of corn meal at a retail store than he would pay for a 10-pound sack of white flour; no one would claim that one ought to be taxed more for rye flour than he would be taxed for wheat flour; and yet such is the case to-day. These facts indicate that there is a wrong and there ought to be a remedy.

I want now to call your attention to the price of these several cereals on the 9th day of March, 1918, at Minneapolis, Minn. Wheat on that day was worth $2.20 a bushel. I say "wheat," but I mean No. 1 northern wheat. That No. 1 northern wheat probably did not represent more than one-fifth of the wheat that was marketed in Minneapolis on that day. Much of that wheat was No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4, and no grade at all.

But, taking the very highest price only for the one grade of wheat, what would you receive at Minneapolis for the highest standard grade that is raised of northern wheat? You would receive $2.20 a bushel.

Upon the same day rye was selling for $2.09 a bushel; on the same day barley was selling at $2.25 a bushel; on the same day corn was selling for $1.85 a bushel; and oats were selling for 98 cents a bushel.

Now, let us get at the yield per acre. Taking an average of 10 years throughout the United States, we find that the yield of wheat was 14.7 bushels per acre; of corn, 26.1 bushels per acre; of rye, 16.1 bushels per acre; of barley, 24.2 bushels per acre; and of oats, 31.2 bushels per acre. Oats must have ranged over much of the southern and eastern territory at a very low yield, because if you will take the oats that are raised in the Northwest you will find that the average yield is almost double that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I was attracted by the figures which the Senator from North Dakota gave as to the prices of corn and rye. The Senator regards those prices as exorbitantly high, does he not?

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, compared with the price of wheat, they certainly are exorbitantly high.

Mr. POMERENE. But compared with the price of corn or of rye during normal years they were exorbitantly high?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; in normal years those would be exorbitant prices. In normal years, when a farmer could hire men for from $25 to $30 a month and board, of course a price of that kind would be exorbitantly high; but if, as to-day, he must pay $60, $80, $90, and in some instances $100 a month and board for labor, which would amount to $125 a month, that price is very low—so low that if a farmer had to hire all his help, it would be impossible for him to raise any of these grains for that price.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NELSON. With the permission of the Senator from North Dakota, and in answer to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] as to the prices of these various grains, I desire to say that I have been engaged in grain raising more or less for 40 years, and my experience has been that in normal times when we were getting from 80 cents to $1 a bushel for wheat our rye would be selling from 50 to 60 cents a bushel. In those days I used to be glad when I received 60 cents a bushel for rye. In the fall of the year our oats would generally be selling at from 20 to 25 cents a bushel at home, while toward spring they might go up to 30 cents a bushel. Corn generally sold from 40 to 50 cents a bushel. Those were the prices of what we called coarse grains in those days in normal times, as compared with the price of wheat. We received from 40 to 50 cents a bushel for corn, from 20 to 25 cents a bushel for oats, and from 50 to 60 cents a bushel for barley. I have often sold barley, where it was mixed with some foul stuff, at as low as 40 cents a bushel, when it was known as feed barley.

If the Senator from North Dakota will indulge me further, I desire to say, as to the price which was fixed last year for the farmers' wheat, as a matter of fact the bulk of the wheat did not bring the farmers $2 a bushel. I raised on my farm a first-class quality of what is known as durum macaroni wheat, but because there was a small quantity of cockle in it that wheat was graded as No. 4, and I only got $1.96 a bushel for it. Most of our farmers had a similar experience. Their wheat would be graded down so that a very small proportion of farmers in the aggregate got as high as $2 a bushel for their wheat.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not care to interrupt the speech of the Senator from North Dakota, but I think the statement which has been made by the Senator from Minnesota as to the relative prices of these cereals is substantially correct. I think that another fact that ought to be borne in mind in connection with this subject, as showing the abnormally high price of corn, is that while the price has been abnormally high, the quantity of corn raised last year was unusually great, but it is true that there has been a good deal of soft corn, and this soft corn has been sold at abnormally high prices—out of all reason, in my judgment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, I am not dealing with the corn question, nor is that being dealt with in this particular amendment. What this country is now asking of the farmer is that he shall produce wheat. Will the farmer produce wheat under present conditions? Can you compel him to produce wheat when he has got to produce it at a loss? Without any question, in my State wheat would be produced at a loss under present prices for labor.

Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the western two-thirds of the State of North Dakota for two years now has only produced enough wheat for seed, and in many instances the farmers have not produced even that much. So they are not getting rich on $2.20 a bushel wheat, because they do not raise it. We were perfectly willing to be left to the law of supply and demand, and if you will take off all restrictions to-day and let that wheat bring what the demand for wheat would give it, we shall be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that the State of North Dakota during the last two years has been somewhat unfortunate; that is, they did not have an average crop of wheat during those two years. Other sections of the country were more fortunate; but I submit it is hardly fair to determine the price of wheat now by what may have been the cost per bushel of wheat when in some sections of the country it was almost a total failure. I dare say that there are farms in the Dakotas, if I have been properly informed as to the yield of wheat there, on which, if the price which the farmer could have realized would have been $10 a bushel, he would not have had a profitable return for his year's work, because the elements had been such that the crop was a substantial failure.

I think that when it comes to a question of ascertaining the price of wheat, and so forth, we have got to bear in mind what at least is an average crop. You might fix the price to-day at $2.50 or $3 a bushel, and we may have a yield during this coming year which might be equal to the yield of 1915, which was abnormally great. To fix the price on that basis, certainly would not be fair to the public.
